Frigidaire Seeking Co-Sponsor on Bergen

Frigidaire division of General Motors is reported on the prowl for a sponsor to share its Tuesday night "Do You Trust Your Wife?" quizzer on CBS-TV. Frigidaire has gone it alone on the filmed Edgar Bergen starrer, but apparently feels the ante is too high as a solo.

Nothing wrong with the ratings, though; in its post-$64,000 Question" slot, "Wife" ended up among the Top 10 shows on the May Trendex list.

CBS-TV Realigns News Setup; Paley Cutting Back on Soaring Costs?

Television end of CBS News got a down-the-line realignment last week following appointment of Malcom R. (Mac) Johnson as assistant director of news for television under CBS news director John F. Day. With news-for-television getting a greater status of independence because of its off-Madison Ave. locale, it was nonetheless reported also that it faces some budgetary cuts as a result of soaring costs on some of the web's "special" ventures.

Under the new setup, though, Johnson will head up the tv news sector at the net's Grand Central Bldg. studios, reporting to Day at 485 Madison. On the radio side, no post similar to Johnson's is being created, simply because Day, headquartering where the radio operation locates, can keep a close enough tab on that himself. Under Johnson in tv will be Jim Burke, newly promoted from assignment-chief to managing editor. Under his wing will come Frank Donghi, upped from assistant assignments editor to assignments chief, plus the tv editors and writers. These latter are being shifted from supervision by David Zellmer, exec producer for tv news, who will thus be freed of administrative duties to concentrate more on the creative-production end.

Under the revised setup there, Day continues as overall news boss under v.p. Sig Mickelson, with Henry Wefing as Day's assistant. Robert A. Skedgell continues as exec producer on the radio side. Lee Otis will become assistant to Johnson. Replacing Johnson in Washington as CBS News editor of the Washington Bureau will be James E. Roper, diplomatic reporter for the Washington Star, and an ex-United Press foreign and UN correspondent. Johnson himself had been a foreign correspondent for the N. Y. Herald Tribune for 10 years before joining the network a year ago. He takes over his new slot June 1.

Re the budget situation, it was reported that CBS board chairman Bill Paley called a general alarm on news spending after looking over budgets on some of the web's pubaffairs "intro-spectaculars," with a general order to cut back in the news and pubservice sectors.

N.Y.-to L.A. No-Hitter

Brooklyn Dodgers' Carl Erskine couldn't have picked a better day to pitch his no-hitter against the Giants than last Saturday (12). That's the day the CBS-TV "Game of the Week" was carrying the Dodger-Giants fray, which means that a no-hit game was televised on a national hookup for the first time in history.

CBS estimates that the game was seen by more than 15,000,000 viewers, projecting past rating results of the "Game" telecasts. That's far more viewers than have seen all the no-hit games put together.

Renault Exits WABC; Barthelmess Named To Helm N.Y. Flagship

Mike Renault resigned yesterday (Tues.) as general manager of WABC, the ABC Radio flagship in N.Y., to open a supper club in Greenwich, Conn. Stewart Barthelmess, eastern sales manager of the radio network, was named to succeed him, effective next Monday (21).

Renault, g.m. of the station for more than two years, having been upped from sales manager when then v.p. Ted Oberfelder moved to WABC-TV, is taking over the old Park Inn in Greenwich, shutting it down and opening it as Renault's. His parting from ABC was amicable, though the result of a policy disagreement. Barthelmess has been eastern sales chief of ABC Radio for the past several months, having served with the web in a variety of administrative sales posts since 1950. Before that, he was with Famous Artists on the Coast and with Packard Motors.

CBS-TV'S PRO GRID GETS FALSTAFF COIN

Falstaff Beer, one of the more sportsminded among the breweries, has signed for two regional spreads on CBS-TV's pro football "Game of the Week" next fall. Falstaff, via Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample, has picked up regional spreads on the Coast and in the midwest, and will sponsor about 15 weekly games on a participating basis.

Network is still trying to pin down a final schedule for the games, but must hold off until the National Football League itself is set on the fall sked. Meanwhile, it's working out actual dates and market coverage on a tentative basis, though the Falstaff deal is firm enough. Falstaff also sponsors the baseball "Game of the Week" on CBS-TV.

Brit. Com'l TV Cutbacks

London, May 15.

About 10% of the technical staff of Associated-Rediffusion, London's weekday commercial tv programmers, are being declared redundant and will be dismissed within the next few weeks. That estimate was given by an official of the Association of Broadcasting Staffs, following a week of rumors

Ben Gimbel's Bid For V in Philly

Philadelphia, May 15.

Benedict Gimbel Jr., president and general manager of radio station WIP, appeared before the U. S. Senate Commerce Committee today (Tues.) to discuss plans for the addition of another VHF television channel in Philadelphia.

Gimbel explained to the committee plans outlined in the comments filed last December with the FCC. The comments were submitted by WIP at the request of the FCC and provided a blueprint for the allocation of 54 more VHF television channels in the major markets of the U. S.

Locally, the plan envisions a new VHF channel directly above Channel 6 in the first six megacycles of the present FM band. This would be secured by eliminating the 88 to 94 megacycle segment from the FM band and reassigning these frequencies to the TV broadcast service.

All existing FM stations, including all educational assignments, could be readily absorbed in the remainder of the FM band. Among the advantages of the plan which Gimbel emphasized to the committee was that the new channel could be added almost immediately since the assignment of such channel space falls entirely under the authority of the FCC.

Mutual's 'Holiday USA' Pattern to Be Incepted On Memorial Day Sked

Topped by a special nighttime hourlong program, the entire Memorial Day schedule on Mutual will be spotted with commemorative touches. If the "Holiday U.S.A." idea clicks with listeners, the radio network plans to do similar programming on Independence Day, Labor Day, Thanksgiving, Xmas and New Year's, making six such setups annually.

Idea is to "give complete definition to the holiday," as MBS commentators perhaps twice hourly during the day read special three-and-half minute bits, e.g., Memorial Day, they will alternate between reading the citations to posthumous Medal of Honor winners and picking up transcribed remotes of services from cemeteries where GI's are buried. Nighttime hour, tentatively set at 9 p.m. on Memorial Day, will be an overall wrapup by the web commentators.

Lester Gottlieb's Upped TV Status

CBS-TV program chieftain Hubbell Robinson Jr. has moved another step toward a realignment of his administrative-creative staff with the designation of Lester Gottlieb as a general executive within the tv program department. This frees Gottlieb from his duties as director of daytime television programming, since he'll henceforth serve in a general creative capacity on strengthening current rosters and developing new shows.

Going into the daytime slot will be Bertram Berman, formerly executive producer for Procter & Gamble Productions.

According to the Robinson blueprint, still another exec is slated for appointment to operate in the same creative area as Gottlieb. Also pending are some appointments in the talent-program development division under veepee Bob Weitman. A few weeks back, Robinson overhauled the Coast programming setup, with Guy della Cioppa moved out of radio and designated as a veepee to function as a key aide to Coast tv program chieftain Al Scalpone. Last week, Louis G. Cowan was moved into the 20th floor corporate setup as a free-wheeling veepee and creative troubleshooter for tv, radio and Columbia Records.

SHIREMAN TO WISN-TV

Milwaukee, May 15.

R. E. (Dick) Shireman is the new local sales manager of WISN-TV. He returns to Milwaukee after an 18-month hitch with KCRG, Cedar Rapids.

Prior to that he'd been associated with the WISN radio sales department for 18 years.

USSR Radio No Laughing Matter

There isn't much humor to be found on Russian radio and there are no radio comedians as such, said Irving R. Levine, NBC's (and VARIETY's) Moscow correspondent, in a timely 15-minute "Report From Moscow" transcribed broadcast last week. Occasionally, performers appearing at the Russian capital's variety theatre appear on broadcasts. Levine mentioned "Reiking" (phonetic spelling) as one comedian he had recently seen. The comic "poked fun at policemen and stuffed shirts, but not at Communism or the government."

Levine said the Soviet Union hopes to "radioify" the country by 1960 through 20,000,000 loudspeakers and 15,000,000 sets added to the present 25,000,000 and 10,000,000, respectively. The government recognizes radio as a "highly important means of indoctrination," he said. The loudspeakers currently are in hotel rooms, on trains, ships and collective farms, in factories, public parks and automobiles. They are tuned to one of the three Radio Moscow channels. All sets in Russia can tune in that station, which is found at three different spots on the dial. They also can tune in local stations in the country's principal cities.

While most of that vast country, with population of 250,000,000, is spanned by radio, there are remote villages which do not have satisfactory reception, Levine said. Small loudspeakers are available at a cost of 60 rubles—representing the pay for about two days to a factory worker. Small table models cost approximately 300 rubles; set with combination of phonography, much more.

One of Russia's big radio problems is the fact that it covers six time zones. Most of its broadcasting is via shortwave.

Sometimes, a new play or book is given radio treatment, in weekly installments, Levine commented. There is no "soap opera as we know it in the United States," but there are stories with a soap opera facet, tied into increased production on farm and in factories. Russian radio emphasizes the latter, listing names of those surpassing quotas.

Hottest Buy In Vegas: TV Spot

Las Vegas, May 15.

A 24-hour television channel signed on in Las Vegas last Friday (11). A 250-watter, the call letters are KSHO-TV, Channel 13. Spots come as low as $6; five-minute blocks for $15.

Under the operation, movies are shown around the clock, with periodic five-minute breaks in the evening for news reports making up the station's only studio telecasting. Controls are manned by a lone engineer to operate the cameras by remote control from the board.

While the overall reception is only fair, KSHO-TV has opened up a new market for low budget advertisers. KSHO-TV is owned by Morrey Zenoff, who also operates a music-news AM'er, KBMI, in nearby Henderson, Nev.

Jim Hawthorne, w.k. radio-tv personality in Los Angeles, has taken over as operations manager at KSHO.

The Vegas area bolstered its claim to the most AM and tv operations per capita than anywhere in the country when a music-news AM'er, KTOO, went on last week (8), giving the vicinity six radio stations serving a population of 50,000.

Station is owned and operated by Tom Magowan, who also owns a daytime-only Reno station.

Coin-Conscious Chi Sponsors Lop Off Live Entries, Buy Film Shows

Chicago, May 15.

The just-ending '55-'56 video season looks to go into the books as the semester that all but clinched the final victory of film fare over the live variety-type formats on the four local channels.

Just this past week two major flesh entries have decided to call it quits after being lost in the rating shuffle. Ford dealer Jim Moran on May 25 is terminating his Friday night "Courtesy Hour" which has run straight through for seven and one-half years on WBKB. He's filling the time with two half-hour telepix.

And at WBBM-TV, which has made a determined effort to keep its nightly 11 o'clock strip line, Howard Miller's Thursday night music-plus-acts display is winding up this week. A film is going into the slot at least temporarily.

It's the old cost vs. ratings dilemma. Moran candidly admits he's bouncing the live show that he emcees himself in favor of the vidpix because of the steady attrition in ratings. The car merchant states the show has been costing him over $5,000 weekly for time and talent and that the ratings no longer justify the upkeep. So the

AG Gets Hot

CBS pinned down some fat new business on Arthur Godfrey's dual AM-TV morningcasts this week. Inked were five new tv sponsors and seven for radio, the latter category including several who went for a quarter-hour weekly plus a quarter-hour every fourth Friday.

Telesponsors, all doubling into radio, are Norwich Pharmacal, Manhattan Soap, Standard Brands, Bauer & Black and Bristol-Myers, latter adding one segment a week. Radio-only are International Mining & Chemical Corp. (Accent), its first time on CBS, and Chun King Sales (frozen and canned oriental foods), first time on network radio. Most of the deals are effective first week in July.

Best Foods to Bankroll Bob Crosby, Garry Moore

Best Foods is going CBS-TV daytime with a two-ply participation purchase in Bob Crosby and Garry Moore. Deal on both daytimers is for across the board, with the possibility that the sponsor will be bankrolling more than one spot daily.

Deal was handled through Dancer-Fitzgerald, Sample. Agency has Nucoa product set for exposure, and is considering plugging other BF products via Moore and Crosby.

1-Acters Both As B'way, TV Entries Packaged for 35G

Television package involving financing of three-week runs of one-act plays on Broadway and simultaneous one-a-week telecasting of the one-acters has been evolved by V. N. Barrington and Albert Moorehead, who envisage a year-round Broadway effort, with a permanent theatre charging moderate boxoffice prices. Barrington is submitting it to Lennen & Newell for possible consideration by either Old Gold or Colgate.

Top actors would be used in the program of three one-acters running three weeks. Same star would be used in each play. Every week, the house would go dark for one night while one of the plays is done on video. When all three plays have been shown on tv, a new three-week bill of three one-acters with a different cast would

Boston, May 15.

Another upheaval in Boston radio manifested itself this week with one disk jock ankling a station, the shifting of the Jerry Howard show from WBZ to WEEI and programming switching all around.

Larry Welch, longtime WCOP disk jock billed as "Voice of the Turtle," resigned from the station which was recently acquired by new owners from the Boston Post. New owners are in a huddle with station management concerning future policy and plans. Welch, who had a popular morning show, reportedly has offers from at least three Boston stations.

One of the policies instituted at WCOP which educated guesses say irked disk jocks was the procedure of having the station management select the disks which the jocks played on the air. Station has had

SALES DIP CUES THE 'STOP' SIGN

One of the major reasons the tv networks are finding it tough in resolving their programming schedules for next season (and it's generally conceded it's never been this bad before) is the uncertain status of the automotive companies, which are plenty disturbed over the downgrading in sales. That it was bound to seriously affect their tv sponsorship next season was taken for granted months back when the sales decline initially set in. But apparently the picture is even worse than was anticipated.

Buick's willingness to relinquish its sponsorship stake in Jackie Gleason, now that the show is returning to a full-hour live status, probably doesn't come as too great a surprise to those who were cognizant of the fact that, even if Gleason had stayed with the half-hour "Honeymooners" format, Buick had already made overtures to latch on to an alternate-week sponsor.

With the possible exception of Chevrolet, which still appears to be going great guns saleswise (with a resultant hypo in its tv budget via auxillary sponsorship of a Dinah Shore Tuesday 8 to 9 series next season), practically all the automotives are pulling in the reins.

Pontiac has long since served notice of its bowout on the "Playwrights '56" dramatic series on NBC-TV. Plymouth has shaken itself loose from the John Cameron Swayze twice-a-week news show on NBC-TV. Dodge, probably the hardest hit of all the auto companies, is settling for a continued identity with Lawrence Welk but plans dropping "Break the Bank" along with its announced axing of the Danny Thomas "Make Room For Daddy."

The parent Ford Motor Co. (as distinct from the Lincoln-Mercury and Ford Motor Divisions) is ankling the expensive "Producers' Showcase" spec series on NBC-TV. And while the Ford Motor Division, via J. Walter Thompson, is actually increasing its tv web identification from two to three shows, this, too, is a reflection of the times, since the new Tennessee Ernie Ford NBC pitch is being directed toward the more youthful element in a bid to broaden its sales vistas.

While Chrysler stays with "Climax," it has already put in a cancellation on "It's a Great Life."

PONTIAC STILL LIKES THOSE GRID SPECIALS

Though the motor industry is fast tapering off on the tv sponsorship front, some car companies will keep their foot in the door on spot specials. Pontiac, for instance, which is fading off NBC-TV's "Playwrights 56," stays with the network as far as a big grid joust is concerned. Pontiac has earmarked the Dec. 27 (Thurs.) time for the National Pro Football championship out of the Coliseum in L. A.

Pontiac thus moves in on a game that last year embraced a competitive auto (in the same General Motors house) plus regionals. Under the '55 setup, Buick division of GM was the national sponsor for the game's last half, with Atlantic Refining mated to Miller Brewing during the first-half, the former on a New England regional hookup and the brewery taking the rest nationally.

Ingersoll's Time Buy

U.S. Time Corp. (Ingersoll), virtually a new face in television, is primed to take over the Saturday 5:30 p.m. time on NBC-TV next season.

The network has set up a live "Jazz on Saturday Afternoon" half-hour series for the slot. No talent set as yet.

No Matter What Happens With Gleason Show Buick Wants Out; Still Debate Whether to Go Hour

Great Scott!

Unless he can peddle his new half-hour filmed network entry to General Foods, Bernard Schubert may find himself up a $40,000 tree.

That's the cost of the pilot made by Schubert on a new adventure-type series starring Randolph Scott. Upon its completion Scott wanted to know what plans the producer had for the series. Schubert said GF was interested. Scott responded, in effect, "if General Foods doesn't buy it then scrap it. I don't like the idea of being 'offered around'."

Despite the Page 1 coast-to-coast fanfare that attended Buick's switchover from Milton Berle to Jackie Gleason last season and all the noise about the CBS-TV comic's "$11,000,000 deal" with the auto company, the Buick-Gleason alliance has gone up in smoke after one season. (Figure was actually based on escalated costs had Buick stayed with the show for three years under its two-year firm contract plus options on another year's pickup.) As it turned out, the auto firm's investment in its single-season Gleason identity comes to approximately $3,500,000.

CBS-TV, anxious to restore the Gleason show back to its full hour-live status next season in place of the current semester's half-hour filmed "Honeymooners" show, asked Buick if it would agree to a release from its two-year firm deal and the auto company, via the Kudner agency, after weeks of balking, has agreed, pending officialy receipt of a letter from network prexy Jack Van Volkenberg formally releasing Buick from its contract. Yesterday (Tues.) Buick agency reaffrmed that: "no matter what happens, we've washed up on Gleason." CBS had hoped that Buick would continue its identity with Gleason next season under his restored live, 60-minute format as one of three participating sponsors, but Buick wanted no part of any such deal. Last night Gleason and CBS were still deadlocked about what to do.

Like CBS, Gleason, too, was all for returning to a full hour next season. Although his 8 to 8:30 "Honeymooners" has been consistently beating Perry Como, Gleason hasn't been happy over the fact that the Gleason Enterprises-packaged "Stage Show" in the 8:30 to 9 segment has been inviting a wholesale tuneout in favor of the Como showcase on NBC.

When, a few months back, CBS sought to yank "Stage Show" from its Saturday night roster, Gleason yelled "foul" and threatened litigation unless the network forked over $300,000, Gleason maintaining he was on the hook for that figure in connection with the "Stage Show" production. Nothing further developed, though it was no secret that "Stage Show" was headed for the ash heap at the end of the season. Gleason and CBS' cracking of the Buick bottleneck, which now paves the way for the full-hour return if Nestle's 8:30 to 9 mixup can be resolved (for Nestle has bought another show), apparent would square matters all around.

CBS will shoot for a three-way sponsorship deal on the Gleason 60-minute roundelay next season, with Remington Rand already reported in if the hour plan goes through.

Gleason's Live Status 400G Rap To Electronicam

Jackie Gleason's decision to return from a filmed half-hour to a live hour via CBS-TV next fall has deprived DuMont's Electronicam of its sole program production at present. The new-old Gleason-CBS strategy on the Saturday night comedian is depriving DuMont of some $400,000 in total revenue next season, though a two-year contract to lense the network showcasing will force CBS to fork over between $100,000 and $200,000, according to DuMont sources, in order to get out of the agreement.

Though DuMont reports that it is close to inking other stanzas for the Electronicam, a film system using live camera techniques, the Gleason loss is hurting the company plenty. DuMont is using the Adelphi Theatre in Manhattan and a full-complement of technicians, sales and administrative personnel to work the operation, an a company spokesman said that Electronicam would have to gross possibly $20,000 a week before it could realize a profit.

Gleason, who shot 39 films via Electronicam this season, provided a little over $10,000 a week to the DuMont coffers. (Electronicam is a wholly-owned and controlled subsid of DuMont Labs.). A minimal amount has been coming in in spurts via leasing production services to tv commercial producers. Lately Electronicam has done two McCann-Erickson commercials, 11 for C. L. Miller agency and a half-hour documentary for Commercial Investment Trust. On this basis, the subsid has been in and out of the black, week to week.

Only a month ago, DuMont got out of the middle in a tiff between Screen Actors Guild and American Federation of Television & Radio Artists over jurisdiction of the

ABC In New Two-Year Affiliations With WLS But Mutual Still Wooing

Chicago, May 15.

After some lengthy bargaining, ABC and WLS have reached an agreement on a new two-year affiliation contract. '20th-Fox Hour' In GE Renewal

Hollywood, May 15.

CBS-TV "20th-Fox Hour" got the go-ahead signal for another season from sponsoring General Electric, with 18 new stanzas and eight repeats to alternate with "U. S. Steel Hour," as in past season. Budget will remain at $100,000 a film, with the new season picking up without a break two weeks after the present Sept. 5 termination date. The only format change will be a revamping of the "back stage" segments, in which the studio plugs upcoming releases. Also, a new emcee will be picked to replace Joseph Cotten.

Robert Hussey, series supervisor of Young & Rubicam agency, and Irving Asher, tv production topper for 20th, conducted the negotiations with GE.

Unproduced TV Plays for H'wood With Video Later: New Pattern

It's becoming a lucrative modus operandi to submit television scripts to film companies even before giving networks and ad agencies a crack at the plays, according to Daniel Hollywood, head of the Daniel Hollywood Associates, who has sold a number of unproduced video scripts directly to film producers with concurrent deals for the writers to do the adaptations.

Latest to be peddled to the films is "Father, Oh, Father" by Joseph Stefano which was picked up by Distributors Corp. of America and will be shot in New York. Stefano will also write the screen play.

According to Hollywood, film producers are coming to recognize video as the source of some of the freshest professional writing around, and are now anxious to get first crack at new yarns. For the film producers, a yarn bought after it has been produced in video comes considerably higher in cost than if they take a chance on a new story that is still unproduced.

In the familiar tv-to-pix pattern, Hollywood has sold "The Stake" by George Lefferts, which was first produced on the Kraft show, to Roger Corman, prexy of Palo Alto Productions. Lefferts will also do the screen play. Ernest Kinoy's "I Do" first screened on "Studio One," will be produced by Alex Singer for United Artists with the author doing the adaptation. Hollywood also set the deal for Bob Dozier's "Deal a Blow" being done by RKO with Jamie MacArthur in the lead. Dozier, as a result of writing this story, has been inked to a term deal with CBS.

Another angle being exploited by Hollywood is taking film writers for work in telefilms. For example, Allen Adler, who did the screen story for "Forbidden Planet" (Metro), has been assigned to write a film series based on Robby the Robot, a mechanical character which has the central role in the film. Also set by Hollywood is a pact by which Howard Rodman will write "The City," full length color feature to be done by NBC and The Sloane Foundation.

Despite the increasing number of film deals, television writing pacts still comprise the bulk of business. Among deals set by Hollywood are Kinoy's "The Confidence Man", topped by Hume Cronyn & Jessica Tandy to be seen on Alcoa-Goodyear Playhouse, May 27. Kinoy has also adapted "Dominique," which was originally seen on "Studio One," for Broadway production by Cronyn. Marisa Pavan will do the lead.

George Bellak has sold an original yarn to U. S. Steel, "The Other Side of the Wall," presentation date still to be set; Will Loren's adaptation of "The Boarding House" by James Joyce will also be done by U. S. Steel June 7; Jerry De Bono's "A Winter Affair" will also hit the same sponsor on June 28; Art Wallace's "The Second Family" will be on Circle Theatre June 6.

Rupert "Poot" Pray and Al Hague are working on a 90-minute version of "The Mercer Girls" as a musical spec to be produced by Al McCleery. Story deals with an attempt to bring 500 girls to an early settlement in the state of Washington.

Flynn Dropped In New CBS Spot Sales Shakeup

Shakeup that began in CBS Spot Sales a couple of weeks back with the axing of Wendell Campbell as v.p. in charge and the elimination of the veepee post continued last week with the establishment of an eastern sales managership and the elimination of the general sales manager slot. Henry Flynn, up to now g.s.m., has been dropped and Milton F. Allison is in the new eastern sales slot.

Structure now consists of Gordon F. Hayes, brought into N. Y. from his western (Chi) sales manager post, as bossman under the title of general manager. Allison, who last year was named Flynn's assistant, is in the new eastern slot. As his own successor in the midwest, Hayes appointed Thomas H. Peterson, who's been an account exec in the Chi office since 1951.

Philco to Peg Politico Sponsorship on ABC To New Laundry Equipment

Philco Corp. will use about one-third of its $4,500,000 worth of commercial time involved in its ABC radio-tv political convention-election coverage to introduce its new line of laundry equipment. This was disclosed last night (Tues.) at an ABCstaged closed-circuit telecast beamed at dealers and distributors to showcase the brand-new array of washers and dryers, being put on the market by Philco for the first time.

Addition of the laundry line will up the overall Philco ad budget but won't involve spending of any additional coin in radio-tv other than that already allocated, which means the conventions and the annual Miss America telecast. On a local level, however, it will mean an upbeat in spot radio-tv expenditures by dealers, since Philco has sent out a new library of open-end filmed spots and transcriptions for use by dealers on a co-op basis. Business is being handled through Hutchins agency, which reps all Philco lines.

Cincinnati—Newscaster Tom McCarthy returns to WCPO June 1. He left the Scripps-Howard station in 1942 to join WKRC, from which he signed off April 15 after failing to reach agreement on a new pact.

Razor-Sharp Weekend

A coincidence in scheduling will give Gillette Razors an NBC-TV parlay next month that figures to go beyond the "once over lightly" class. First off, its regular Friday night fights on June 8 "just happens" to bring together Tommy "Hurricane" Jackson and Floyd Patterson in an engagement already being ballied as the key elimination tournament to decide who will take over the heavyweight throne vacated by Rocky Marciano.

Two days later, on Sunday the 10th, Gillette has reserved the time for the final round in the Palm Beach golf tourney at the Wykagyl County Club in New Rochelle. Not in a long while has the razor and Toni products house (now also with the ownership stake in Paper-Mate Pens) had such a "long weekend" pairing to sell its goods.

CBS HITS NEW HIGH 3-MONTH EARNINGS

CBS Inc. hit an alltime earnings high for the first quarter of 1956, with the $4,462,783 consolidated net income figure standing 14.6% higher than the same 1955 figure. Earnings broke down to 60c per share on the outstanding A and B stock, compared with 53c a share for the comparable quarter last year after adjustments for the three-for-one stock split.

Net revenues and sales for the quarter totaled $88,406,663, compared with $77,776,463 in the '55 first quarter. Income before provision for federal income taxes was $9,822,783, as opposed to $8,532,677 in the comparable 1955 period.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

One network, three radio stations and one television station, along with six commercial sponsors, won Alfred P. Sloan Awards for public service in promoting traffic safety last night (Tues.) at the eighth annual award dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y. Winners were CBS Radio; WTTM, Trenton; KONO, San Antonio; KDPS (educational), Des Moines; WTVJ (TV), Miami; R. J. Reynolds; Standard Oil of Indiana; Chevrolet; Sears Roebuck of Bakersfield, Cal.; Schafer's Bakeries, Detroit; and Auto Specialties Mfg., St. Joseph, Mich.

RCA has been offering its employees (including those in the NBC division) some fancy discounts on its color sets. Quite a number of takers are reported, sufficiently so, at any rate, to persuade the company to extend the "save money" offer to perhaps a more important avenue in getting colorvision "off the ground." The latest to be flirted with by RCA are the ad agency brass.

WMCA producer-director-writer Lillian Okun became the president of the N. Y. C. Chapter of American Women in Radio and Television at the annual meeting Monday (14). Eleanore (Pat) Hurley, WQXR, was elected 1st veep of the largest of the 33 AWRT chapters.

Priscilla Campbell, NBC, was elected 2d veep; Jo-Anne Welch, CBS, treasurer; Viola Becker, V. S. Becker Productions, corresponding secretary; Lucille Mason, Compton Advertising Agency, recording secretary.

Charles Pfizer Co., midwest feed supply company, is pulling a switch by reporting on new developments in animal nutrition not on a closed-circuit tv hookup, but through an on-the-air, open-to-all audience throughout the midwest. Feed company has ordered a 27-station midwestern network for a 30-minute report May 22 on its 4th annual research conference. Program will air 12:30-1 p.m., Central time.

ABC has assigned George Hicks to host the on-the-air session. Deal was set through Leo Burnett agency of Chicago.

Original tapes of the longrunning "It Pays to Be Ignorant" have been acquired by Mal Ritter's Vicmalco Productions, which is peddling the old Tom Howard show to the networks for use as a half-hour or quarter-hour segment. Ritter, a freelance announcer and producer, acquired rights to the tapes, comprising some eight years of weekly broadcasts, in a deal with the Howard estate.

Quizzer starred Howard & Shelton, with Lulu McConnell and Harry McNaughton.

Not generally known that Donald H. McGannon, new prexy of Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., is also a lawyer and Democratic leader in his home town, Norwalk, Conn. Because of the conflict with his new job, McGannon is expected to give up his membership on the Democratic state central committee.

Radio and Television Executive Society fetes 30-year-old "Grand Old Opry" radio program next Monday (21) at the Hotel Roosevelt. To honor the show, carried over WSM and WSM-TV, Nashville, Frank G. Clement, Tennessee governor, will be chief speaker. The meeting will include announcement and installment of new RTES officers.

Arriving by chartered plane on Sunday are "GOO" stars Minnie Pearl, Carl Smith, June Carter, Ferlin Huskey, Chet Atkins. Irving Waugh, commercial manager of the twin station operation in Nashville, and Jack Stapp, program director, are acting as advance men for the hillbilly radio veterans.

Promotion of a permanent "Television Hall of Fame," launched by Philly Inquirer tv columnist Harry Harris, has gained wide support throughout industry. Harris motion has been "seconded" by Robert E. Kintner, president of ABC; Hubbell Robinson, executive v.p. of CBS, and Kenneth W. Bilby, v.p. of NBC.

Interest has been expressed by following groups—Academy of Television Arts and Sciences, American Federation of Television and Radio Artists, American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and Broadcast Music, Inc.

Harris plan suggests an "enduring library of tv highlights picked each year by a carefully selected board judges, and a yearly recapitulation of the many things tv can be proud of."

Alcoa Hour

David Davidson's new political drama, "President," scored as an absorbing "Alcoa Hour" stanza on NBC-TV Sunday night (13). Pegged onto this year's Presidential sweepstakes, the script accomplished the difficult task of drawing credible characterizations without being an identifiable portrait of any current contender for the top U.S. job. Most noteworthy was Davidson's honesty in depicting some of the unsavory horsetrading in the President-making process even though the play basically was a strong defense of the two-party system and its necessary compromises.

Claude Rains, as the Supreme Court Justice struggling to win the nomination and then the election, held the play firmly together with an excellent performance. His persuasively drawn portrait corrected any tendency of the script to fall into generalizations about the conflict of ambition and idealism. Rains made the abstractions come alive. In this, he was aided by a topnotch supporting cast headed by Everett Sloane, as the campaign manager; and Larry Gates, as the corrupt midwest politico who wants to trade his votes for favors. Mildred Dunnock was okay in a relatively small part as the candidate's wife while others on the show included Fred Clark, Alfred Ryder, David White and Luis Van Rooten.

The play opened with a highly effective sequence set at a nominating convention. The device of showing some typical video coverage of a political convention within the play underlined the contrast between what's viewed by the public on the floor and what's happening in the hotel rooms where the important deals are made. This was vigorous documentary-type drama. Equally vigorous was the play's handling of the loyalty issue which, in effect, became the central political issue in Davidson's script. It was a straightforward stand on an issue, which even if not as acute today as a couple of years ago, still remains a problem on the U.S. scene.

Wide Wide World

For once, the military outdid the civilians. The Armed Forces, celebrating Armed Forces Week, staged a series of demonstrations of "Power for Peace" for NBC's "Wide Wide World" that the television cameras simply couldn't cope with. Much of the way through the program Sunday, all was confusion. But despite the miscues, the literal smokescreens, the lost signals and the sometimes frantic panning for a lost plane, the staggering array of weapons and techniques displayed by the military came through with impact and reassurance.

Presentation was divided into segments for each of the services, commencing with the Ft. Benning Army display of a mock attack, new weapons and a paratroop drop. The televising of the attack was a mess—signal was lost much of the time, camera placements were bad, everything obscured by smoke and no effective narration or landmarks to keep pace with the actual action. New weapons, including rockets, the atomic cannon and radar-guided ack-ack, were impressive; so was the parachute sequence, though a planned camera-drop didn't come off.

On the Navy side, a visit aboard the aircraft carrier Essex had only mixed effectiveness, again because of poor cueing and camerawork. Narration would refer to a jet formation while the cameras would show the flight deck, or the cameras would lose the picture of a fast-moving jet formation and show an empty sky. Nonetheless, they did catch the vastness and mightiness of the carrier at work. Another Navy demonstration, from the submarine Albacore, kept losing its signal, and except for interior shots of the sub, was totally ineffective. Best from the tars was the sequence aboard the Mississippi in a guided missile test, where the missiles sought out and destroyed a drone plane.

Last half of the show, covering the Marines, Coast Guard and Air Force, was easily the best. Marines also staged a mock attack from Quantico, but here each movement was carefully detailed, following a logical sequence and wide-open to the cameras. Each step made sense to the viewer and was far more impressive than the Army's demonstration earlier. Coast Guard, in San Diego, staged a perfectly-coordinated air-sea rescue from a helicopter, after first getting its search planes and cutter fleet out. Air Force had two demonstrations, one from the Strategic Air Command in Eglin Air Force Base in Florida with a bewilderingly impressive array of different types of planes and well-staged bombing attacks; the other, the Continental Air Defense hq in Colorado, showing the tracking and destruction of a hostile plane approaching the U.S. Each service was introduced by its chief of staff, with the commander of each base or installation serving as host for his demonstration. In terms of a pubrelations job, the services couldn't have done better; as a program, the WWW stint was a fascinating outing—too bad it couldn't have done better, though.

Shower of Stars

Jack Benny took his last "Shower" of the season last Thursday (10) and sprayed his audience with a stream of laughs that came from a part of his anatomy never before used in tv—his feet. He clowned around with Dame Terpsichore and gave his underpinning the fastest workout since his last trip to the bank. He tip-toed through a ballet and stormed as an Apache for hilarious reaction, but the humor was spotty at other times.

With Marge and Gower Champion as his main props and George Burns as mentor, Benny spun, dipped and performed lifts (with spavined difficulty) for the show's high point. But with Leonard Ross, the 10-year-old stock market whiz, who recently won $100,000 on "Big Surprise," Benny's writers faltered and had him sweating through what could have been the top turn of the evening. As is his wont, Benny let the youngster have the punch lines but they were neither cute nor sharp.

The Champions are just that when they activate their nethers and after a brief medley of steps they were made to more or less stooged for Benny's Havana Adagio bit.

Bob Crosby got off a pair of songs and as many jokes that weren't risibility rousers. In a bit with Babette Bain, a sub-teener, the effect was more popular. She's a delightful singer but an elementary stepper. For a refreshing change Bill Lundigan and Mary Costa were given lines that had nothing to do with the Chrysler line. Ralph Levy, producer-director, hit a happy stride with the Benny buffoonery and the comic's former writers, John Tackaberry, Hugh Wedlock & Howard Snyder, got across a few yocks.

U. S. Steel Hour

For the second time in recent months, Ethel Merman was trapped in a dramatic role on video. While her first outing as a tragedienne was only half-hour, she doubled the ante on the "United States Steel Hour" last Wednesday night (9) and lost again. Her latest vehicle, a Mort Thaw script titled "Honest In The Rain," was totally inept. It had little plot and less characterization, but it was overboard on corny sentimentality. The play sometimes teetered on the edge of farce and it might have been better for all concerned if it had fallen over. At least there would have been some laughs.

While the script must bear the major rap, Miss Merman's performance didn't help either. Playing a horse-betting addict on a losing jag, she failed to convey any believeable sense of involvement or desperation. It was a superficial walk-through of a poorly conceived part. The romantic angle was equally weak while the script's popular psychologizing was dismally amateurish. In short, Miss Merman ran out of the money by some slipshod jockeying of an undernourished nag.

Ed Sullivan Show

It's of course no new observation that the last outpost of vaudeville is television, particularly the Ed Sullivan Show. However, this Sunday's (13) edition on CBS-TV was more reminiscent of Loew's State than virtually anything he presented previously. Shades of Sidney Piermont, Marvin Schenck, Jake Lubin et al, the layout opened with acrobats, put singers in the deuce, comedy in the trey, and so on down the line. After all these years of progress, the old format is being worked again. Even Sullivan himself was an old hand at Loew's State showcase on Broadway. The net result was entertainment, not bigtime, but still —entertainment.

The next to closing act was the Jose Greco Troupe in an exceedingly abbreviated version. The group had a chance at the bulerias,

GABBY HAYES SHOW

Producer-director: Joe Clair
30 Mins., Sat.; 5:30 p.m.
JOE LOWE CORP. (POPSICLES)
ABC-TV, from New York

Paris & Peart Inc

What with the "Mickey Mouse Club" trapping a good slice of moppet viewers in the Mon.-Fri. 5 to 6 p.m. slot, ABC-TV is making a bid to retain some of them on the Saturday 5:30 to 6 p.m. segment via "The Gabby Hayes Show." But although the Hayes series, which bowed Saturday (12, evidently was produced with care it represents curious programming since it's preceded by a Hopalong Cassidy western in the 5 to 5:30 p.m. segment.

Ancient Hollywood oaters are no novelty to kids nowadays. Moreover, their repetitious stories were further pointed up by the Hayes inaugural which included scenes of a cattle stampede — almost identical to a stampede seen minutes earlier in the Hopalong show. For the kickoff the Hayes entry had clips from an old Buster Crabbe oater. Subsequent shows will also draw upon Eddie Dean, Tex Ritter, Hoot Gibson and Bob Steele films, among others.

Format has Hayes chinning in familiar fashion with the youngsters. In specially shot new footage, he introes the show with the remark: "This is your ol' pal, Gabby Hayes, comin' at ya with a rip, roarin' western . . . today's story is a real humdinger." Balance of the airer has old clips sandwiched in among the new.

For those juvenile viewers who may be confused by the oaters' lack of continuity, Hayes fills 'em in with a brief narration whilst he whittles away in what passes for a frontier cabin interior. He also tosses in some reminiscences about his relatives when he's not commenting "there's nothing I like better than a cool refreshing Popsicle."

COUNTRY ALMANAC

With George Zeis, Connie Cooke, Pete Grasselli, Don Mettert and the Suburbanites
Producer-director: Jack Carroll
60 Mins., Sat. (5), 7:30 a.m.
WLW-C, Columbus

WLW-C says this show is "a farm show without the rustic trimming often associated with such programs," and it is right. The first telecast did not try to gain popularity among farmers at the expense of any city viewers who might be tuned in.

In fact, master of ceremonies George Zeis (who is farm editor of the Columbus Citizen) made a pitch for greater understanding between the farmer and the city dweller. That's where Connie Cooke enters the picture. A city-reared gal, Miss Cooke knows little about farming but seems willing to learn.

Zeis was a nervous emcee on his first program but nonetheless was able to get various tips across to the farmers. A "remote" from outside the station in which a demonstration of clipping a cow was foremost was effective. Squealing pigs also found their way into the format.

But after 60 minutes of the program, it would appear that the same things could have been accomplished in 30 minutes and perhaps done more forcefully, too.

In addition to special guests, there was a studio audience invited to breakfast. Songs by Miss Cooke, Pete Grasselli, and Don Mettert's Suburbanites were passable.

LET'S GO FISHING

With Bill MacDonald, guests
Producer: Pierre Normandin
30 Mins., Tues., 7:30 p.m.
CBOT, Ottawa

Coincident with the arrival of the hook-line-sinker season, Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s Ottawa station teed a show for the rod-and-reel group titled "Let's Go Fishing." Hosting is Bill MacDonald, former scripter-producer-director of fishing films for the National Film Board, currently fishing editor of Forest & Outdoors magazine. Besides being a born fisherman who has fished streams in every corner of Canada, MacDonald finds his NFB experience (he appeared in most of the films he made) strengthening his television show. Initialer (8) was a stanza that would satisfy anglers and most others, its pace slightly slow but direction okay and production, settings and sound clicko.

Format will evidently stay close to the opener's setup, with MacDonald gabbing, demonstrating and displaying equipment, showing films and interviewing guests. Show caught had as guest J. Campbell McLeod, chief of Ontario's fire prevention service, and the film was "Famous Fish I Have Met," NFB documentary with Gregory Clark, w.k. writer, starring.

THE AMAZING DUNNINGER

With Dunninger, Jimmie Blaine Producer: Ben Frye
Director: Arthur Rosenblum
30 Mins., Wed., 8:30 p.m.
PALL MALL, PEARSON PHARMACAL
ABC-TV, from New York

(SSC&B, Donahue & Coe)

The ABC-TV and agency programmers are looking at "The Amazing Dunninger's" summer run on the network with an extra careful eye, since there's better than an even chance that the "MGM Parade" replacement could wind up with a permanent post-"Disneyland" slotting in this Wednesday night period for the fall. What they saw on the preem program must have given them the shudders, though, for if ever a show needed a shakedown, this was it.

Dunninger's commercial potential was all but destroyed by some of the most inept direction and cueing seen in many a day. To add to the faulty direction, the mentalist himself must have had a case of jitters, for he stumbled over a half-dozen sentences and of times left his subjects with their mouths agape by passing on to something else. A couple of times, the mental stunts lost their effectiveness because Dunninger asked the contestant whether his description were accurate and then left them before they could answer. Such was the case in the opening stunt, where he described the contents of a letter, asked the gent in the audience if it were true and then switched away before he could answer. In another stunt, a fish was supposed to pull up a card from the bottom of a tank, and the fish came up but Dunninger had to reach in for the card, leaving at least one viewer confused as to what it was all about.

Most of the rest of the program was devoted to a remote to the new aircraft carrier Saratoga in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and except for Dunninger's verbal lapses, this was the most effective portion of the show. He succeeded in guessing the skipper's thought that the ship had only four feet clearance under the Brooklyn Bridge, and then thought-read the menu for the next day's lunch in the mess room. Wrapup was an at-random subject from the audience, which had the most impact of any portion of the show.

But, oh, that direction! Couple of times, Dunninger continued talking after the camera switched away; similarly, announcer Blaine was left with the camera on him but with nothing to say; at the close, the cameras panned the audience, which suddenly broke into applause on a 30-seconds-too-late cue. Blaine was uncomfortable; Dunninger was obviously more so. As to the overall view of the program's chances, chuck this one out the window as a bad start, assuming that the bugs can be shaken out. On that basis, and crediting the producers with enough imagination to work out a variety of stunts, the mentalist's feats certainly should attract and hold an audience. It figures as a good summer filler and a strong contender for the fall slot.

THE TAPP ROOM

With Jimmy Tapp, guests
Producer: Humphrey Hinshelwood
30 Mins., Mon., 11:30 p.m.
CBFT, Montreal

Going into its 42d week, the "Tapp Room" is one of the few English shows originated by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. from Montreal and is rapidly proving to be one of the most popular on the network. Conceived by Jimmy Tapp, a former station manager for CJAD (radio) and freelance announcer, the show features guest appearances of legit and nitery personalities current in town (on night caught he featured Decca's new thrush Gloria Mann) with Tapp spinning new platters between gabfests. Show is a natural for the recording companies and Tapp is now "showcasing" a first-time-in-Canada waxing on each offering. Spot sales checks on days following the introing of a new record and such gimmicks as writing in for a photo of some particular guest have proved solid viewing audiences of this program. Working with a limited budget because the Tapp Room is still a sustainer, Tapp keeps attention throughout with his easy-going manner and the visual sketches devised to animate the platter being played.

Starting as a Montreal show only, it's now carried by CBC in Toronto and Ottawa and will be added in Halifax May 21 in kinescope form on Saturday nights at 11 p.m.

THE MUSIC OF GERSHWIN

Since first things come first, suffice to say that the wonderful tunes out of the George Gershwin catalog provided Max Liebman's 90-minute all-Gershwin tint spec last Saturday night (12) with a great big solid plus. If it accomplished nothing else, it testified anew (as though such testimony were necessary) to the indestructibility of the music, be it one of the more obscure items such as "The Half Of It Dearie Blues" (out of "Lady Be Good") or "Slap That Bass" from the Fred Astaire "Shall We Dance" pic, or the inevitable "Rhapsody In Blue" finale (although why "Rhapsody" has to be spotted last on everybody's Gershwin concert has become one of those puzzling cliches in routining).

Liebman himself might just as easily have been on vacation, for as a production there were little or no visual adornments or attempts to magnify the spec beyond the "Music By Gershwin" motif. Result was most of it played like a recital. Tune after tune after tune was piled on in swift succession with a gifted array of artists to interpret them, yet even though the intent was to accentuate the music and give Gershwin top billing, certainly a more imaginative visual approach would have enhanced the spec as a whole and given it some much needed movement.

The spec had a peculiar structure to begin with. Liebman broke it down into five portions: first the dance segments, with choreography off the now-familiar James Starbuck twice-terped turns; then the songs, followed by the instrumental variations, into the "Porgy and Bess" portion and finally the "Rhapsody." Unfortunately, it was an unimaginative bit of routining. With such a wealth of material and talent, what was sorely needed was a more stimulating pace and a better integration of the various musical forms.

Musically the spec was a delight and enough to suit practically everyone's tastes. In the vocal department there were Ethel Merman, Alfred Drake, Tony Bennett, Toni Arden and Cab Calloway, among others, as the cream of Gershwiniana from the memorable tune shows and films of the '20's and '30's were paraded forth and given special stylized treatment. The manner in which Miss Merman belted across "Embraceable You" and "I Got Rhythm" along with "But Not For Me" (in a 26-year-after reprise from the "Girl Crazy" musical) certainly provokes admiration. She's still in fine fettle.

A bewhiskered Alfred Drake (who doubled into the intros in tieing the five-part spec together) registered strongly in "Foggy Day" and "Soon," while Miss Arden's "Do-Do-Do," "I've Got A Crush On You" and "Nice Work If You Can Get It" enhanced the vocal package. Best of the Tony Bennett contribs was "Our Love Is Here To Stay."

Charles & Kay's terp variations on "Slap That Bass" and the Hamilton Trio's "I'm Dancing And I Can't Be Bothered Now" (from the Astaire "Damsel In Distress" pic) coupled with "Sweet and Low Down" (from "Tip Toes") by Patricia Wilde, Diana Adams and Tanaquil Le Clerq, and the ensemble's "By Strauss" (Mitzi Mayfair's bit in the '36 "The Show Is On") highlighted the dance sequences.

Instrumental portions featured the First Piano Quartet, Art Van Damme Quintet, an augmented, full-bodied Charles Sanford orch which did a standout job both in the backgrounding and on the virtuosi level: harpist Robert Maxwell and Richard Hayman on the harmonica dug into a big chunk of Gershwin melodies, with the Piano Quartet's "Fascinating Rhythm" done to a fetching turn.

Cab Calloway's Sportin' Life from "Porgy" for a reprise of "There's A Boat Dat's Leavin' Soon For New York" was probably the show's standout item. Calloway gave it the works. Lawrence Winters and Camilla Williams in their "Bess" duet and soloing of "Summertime" and "Plenty of Nothing" made the "Porgy" segment a rich and rewarding one.

Eugene List was soloist on the "Rhapsody." There's no doubt the music "sent" him.

VARIETY - ARB City-By-City Syndicated and National Spot Film Chart

VARIETY'S weekly chart of city-by-city ratings of syndicated and national spot film covers 40 to 60 cities reported by American Research Bureau on a monthly basis. Cities will be rotated each week, with the 10 top-rated film shows listed in each case, and their competition shown opposite. All ratings are furnished by ARB, based on the latest reports.

This VARIETY chart represents a gathering of all pertinent information about film in each market, which can be used by distributors, agencies, stations and clients as an aid in determining the effectiveness of a filmed show in the specific market. Attention should be paid to time—day and time factors, since sets-in-use and audience composition vary according to time slot, i.e., a Saturday afternoon children's show, with a low rating, may have a large share and an audience composed largely of children, with corresponding results for the sponsor aiming at the children's market. Abbreviations and symbols are as follows: (Adv), adventure; (Ch), children's; (Co), comedy; (Dr), drama; (Doc), documentary; (Mus), musical; (Myst), mystery; (Q), quiz; (Sp), sports; (W), western; (Wom), women's. Numbered symbols next to station call letters represent the station's channel; all channels above 13 are UHF. Those ad agencies listed as distributors rep the national sponsor for whom the film is aired.

TV FILMS' DIVERSIFICATION ERA

What'll It Be—1 or 2 Codes?

Problem of a code covering telepix producers grew more confused this week as the result of a meeting between NARTB's Television Code Review Board and reps of the Alliance of Television Film Producers in N. Y. NARTB spokesmen said that "assurance of a single code of practice for both five and film television was a step closer to realization" as a result of the meeting. But the Alliance, single code of practice for both live and film television was a step closer to realization" as a result of the meeting. But the Alliance, which reps most of the top Coast producers, is still actively pursuing the idea of a separate code for telefilms with the National Audience Board and other groups on the Coast.

NARTB meeting "at the source," that is with the actual producers of filmed programs, had been promised at the NARTB convention in Chicago last month. Subcommittee meeting with ATFP reps comprised Code Review Board chairman Richard G. Shafto of WIS-TV, Columbia, S. C.; Roger Clipp of WFIL-TV, Philadelphia; Edward Bronson, director of Code affairs; Robert Heald, NARTB chief attorney, and consultant Robert K. Richards. Repping the Alliance were Maurice K. Morton of McCadden Productions; Dean F. Johnson, exec director of the Alliance; A. Frank Reel of Ziv; Herbert Stern of Revue Productions and Richard St. John, Alliance's counsel. Chief proposal was that an affiliate subscription in the Code be extended to the producers and that the Code's staff advisory services be extended to them. Proposals would be acted upon next month by the Alliance, the Code Review Board and the NARTB Television Board.

'Mexico City Is for the Cowboys'

Azcarraga's Word-of-Advice to U. S. Telepixers On Dubbing into Spanish

Emilio Azcarraga, whose many Mexican tv stations use dubbed U. S. vidfilm, has words of advice for English-speaking producers eyeing Spanish-speaking markets. To him, "Madrid is a great place for dubbing a costume picture, but Mexico City is for cowboys."

"The difference between Mexican actors and Spanish (Madrid) actors would compare," he said, "to English American and well-spoken English in England—not that thick Scotch or thick Welsh." The Latin operator felt that for the majority of Latinos "sheriffs and 'Highway Patrol'" would be incongruous in Old World Castilian Spanish, though "anything highbrow—or even jewelry thieves posing as gentlemen"—would click if done in Madrid.

Azcarraga noted that dubbing in Spain might be cheaper as a result of the experience and know-how gained because the Spanish government prevents any pictures from entering unless first dubbed. But for the most part, he believed that Mexico City, with "a neutral Castilian Spanish between South American and Spain," would be the right place to dub North American telepix. Mexico, he pointed out, has innumerable qualified actors; country does between 100 and 125 features yearly, and that gives local thesps plenty of acting background in addition to their many local live tv chores.

"In Latin America, tv is nothing, but it can grow very large, but it seems the money for dubbed pic-

Guild's $6,279,123 Fiscal Year Gross

In the fiscal year ending Nov., 1955, Guild Films grossed $6,279,123. As disclosed in a prelim report last month, the syndication company earned a net income of only $120,000 (actual figure was $120,161), but because Uncle Sam refunded $62,284 in taxes, the total net was $182,445.

Guild listed $89,782 of the $120,161 net as profit from operations; $30,379 as other income. Of the gross, $4,675,276 was deducted to pay outside producers and participants, to amortize film production and to pay other film and distribution costs.

Guild, which, incidentally, has applied to switch its stock from over-counter listing to the American Stock Exchange board, listed its capital surplus as of Dec. 1 last year at $994,462, and its excess received over par value from issuance of 332,686 shares of common stock

Malone Nod on 'Web'

Hollywood, May 15.

Hal Malone, formerly associate producer of Goodson-Todman's "I've Got a Secret" show on CBS-TV, has been signed by G-T to produce the company's "The Web" vidpix series at Screen Gems.

Before his "Secret" stint, Malone was a live video writer in N. Y. Production on "The Web" starts in June.

'4-Star' Reruns Fetch $1,750,000 Gross Biz for OF

After only four weeks of concentrated selling, Official Films claims to have hit the $1,750,000 gross sales mark on its 153-pic "Star Performance" package of "Four Star Playhouse" reruns. Films are sold in 38 major markets, 10 of these to Anheuser-Busch on a summer-only regional spread. In all, however, 27 of the 38 stations purchased all 153 pix under long term library arrangements.

In terms of gross contracts written on the show, Official has just about hit the total value of the 685,000 shares it gave Four Star Productions for the negatives, since the market value at that time was about $2.25 a share. This, however, is gross sales (no billings yet), and doesn't include distribution costs, advertising and a particularly heavy print bill. Most of the stations, incidentally, are planning either to strip the shows or play them back-to-back.

Budweiser deal is for a 13-week summer spread using the "an-

DONLEVY ROLLS ON 'GREAT MOUTHPIECE'

Hollywood, May 15.

Pilot of a new series entitled "The Great Mouthpiece" rolled at Roland Reed Productions yesterday (Mon.) with Brian Donlevy starred.

Title to the Gene Fowler tome was acquired in a package deal set by the William B. White office, but the series will not use the actual material from the book. Guy Thayer will be executive producer on the series with Josef B. Shaftel as producer-director.

Deal has also been made for Gene Fowler Jr. to direct several of the half-hour vidpix in the series.

O.F. LATEST TO SPREAD WINGS

Move by Official Films last week to expand its talent agency activities under exec v.p. Herb Jaffe and v.p. Bobby Sanford points up a growing era of diversification in the tv film industry. While this move towards diversification hardly parallels similar trends in big business (and even the motion picture business, for example) in size or scope, it nonetheless is a significant development in terms of assuring increasing stability to the companies involved. Primarily, it reflects a desire to cushion each facet of a company against the other, to take advantage of natural opportunities growing out of their business and to engage in lucrative possibilities as they occur.

Official provides an interesting example of this sort of diversification. One little-known facet of its business is a home-movie operation which it's owned since it was organized and which year after year has provided enough coin to have kept Official in the black when everyone else was spelling red-ink figures. The talent-packaging agency business is a latter-day affair, started when Hal Hackett moved over ffom MCA to become prez of Official and brought with him Sanford, the latter taking some top clients with him to set up a new division of the company's operations. That's been a one-man operation until now, but still a profit-making one.

Another case in point is Flamingo Films, owned by the Harris Group partnership. Same people own a tv station in Spokane and are involved in a food manufacturing concern, while individual interests of the four partners include another tv station, independent theatrical film production, theatrical distribution stakes and other ventures. In the matter of theatrical distribution of motion pictures, some telefilm distribs also operate such theatrical companies, among them Associated Artists Productions (whose bossman, Eliot Hyman, is also partnered in the theatrical Moulin Prodution), the new C&C Television, National Telefilm Associates via exec v.p. Oliver Unger's theatrical companies and UM&M TV Corp.

Those Commercial Units

The biggest and most logical diversification trend, however, has been in the establishment of commercial-industrial filmaking units by telefilm distributors and producers. More recent converts to the establishment of commercial units have been Ziv (which also has opened its Coast studios to rentals), Guild Films, ABC Film Syndication (which hasn't started yet, but has announced its intention). Producers include Hal Roach Jr. and McCadden Productions (Burns & Allen). Screen Gems has been through the commercial cycle and is now downbeating its department. This manner of diversification is the most logical because when the distribs and producers started shooting programs with

BOB MAXWELL SIGNS EXCLUSIVE WITH TPA

Indie producer Robert Maxwell has signed an exclusive production deal with Television Programs of America. Maxwell is already represented in the TPA stable with his "Lassie" show, in which TPA has a financial as well as distribution stake, but the new deal requires him to turn over all new shows to TPA.

First project under the contract is the new "Waldo" series, adventures of a chimp and his social anthropologist owner. Gil Stratton is set as the owner, with Emory Parnell and Eleanor Audley featured. Maxwell's "Lassie" production team is handling the "Waldo" project, with Rudy Abel as producer and Sumner Long as associate producer and scripter. Maxwell, as with "Lassie," takes an exec producer credit.

Bonanza For Telepix Scripters On Coast; 60 Writers on SG Payroll

Hollywood, May 15.

Columbia's tv subsid, Screen Gems, has notched up what's believed to be a tv indsutry record for one company—a peak of 60 writers on the payroll working on scripts for 10 telefilm series. It's a bonanza for the tv writers, who have seen their income rise tremendously the past year as production has increased steadily in the vidfilm field.

Writing new Ford Theatre vidscripts for producer Irving Starr are Frederic Brady, Karen DeWolf, William Leicester, Louella MacFarlane, and Dick Stenger. William Barrett, Gerry Day and Merwin Gerard are working on the same series for Joseph Hoffman, and Jack Harvey, Robert Harari, Marianne Mosner, Russell Hughes and David Chandler are turning out Ford scripts for Lou Breslow.

Roswell, Rogers, Paul West and Dorothy Cooper are readying scripts for "Father Knows Best," the Bob Young series.

Robert L. Bellem, Walter Newman, "The Web"; DeWitt Bodeen, Jack Jacobs, Ellis Marcus, Devallon Scott, Marvin Wald, Gene Wang, Halstead Welles, Jerry Gruskin, "Mystery Writers Theatre"; Allison Hall, James Edmiston, Speed Lamkin, Mel Goldberg, Devery Freeman, Paul Monach, Edmond Morris, Marc Brandel, "Playhouse 90."

Roger Clay, Joel Kane, Homer McCoy, Edward Seabrook, Bernard Ederer, Robert White, Jonathan Kohn, Bernard Drew, "Shore Leave" and "The Body, The Face, and the Brain." Scripts have already been written for such series as "You Cant' Take It With You," "Emergency," "Criminal Code" and "Tales of the Bengal Lancers."

Rooney to Produce 'Calamity Jane' Vidpix

Hollywood, May 15.

Mickey Rooney will produce a series of 39 "Calamity Jane" vidpix for Screen Gems in a joint venture with his Mickey Rooney Enterprises.

First film rolls July 1. Rooney is hunting a femme lead.

Vitapix, Roach Set On 'Blondie'; Prep Bellamy & Foran

Hollywood, May 15.

Vitapix-Hal Roach Studio agreement is activated this week, with Vitapix clearing Class A time on some 60 stations across the country for Hal Roach Jr.'s new telefilm series, "Blondie." Pilot film is currently making the N. Y. agency-sponsor rounds.

However, Roach was quick to disclaim ambitions by Vitapix toward becoming a film network. "It's a national operation with local advantages," he stated. "We make spot buys available to advertisers on a custom-tailoring basis, without 'must-buy' provisions. Vitapix isn't interested in mass programming."

In a deal finalized last year, Roach and Vitapix reached a joint working agreement, with the Roach studio getting a Vitapix stock block. According to the terms, Vitapix handles time clearances and merchandizing promotion, while the Roach lot makes the product and does the selling. Roach emphasized that the station list for "Blondie" series can be altered to sponsor requirements.

"Blondie" also marks the first time that King Features and creator Chick Young have licensed the use of the property since 1951, when the last Columbia theatrical pic was released. Roach version toplines Arthur Lake as Dagwood,

NTA 'Secret Mission' As Summer Sub For ABC 'Ozzie & Harriet'

National Telefilm Associates, which had some pleasant news to report to its first annual stockholders meeting yesterday (Tues.) in the form of its acquisition of UM&M TV Corp. (See separate story), was also able to report on its first network deal, a summer replacement sale to ABC-TV of its just-acquired "Secret Mission" series.

Deal is for 13 weeks (that's the number of pictures in the series), and the show will go into ABC's Friday 8 p.m. slot as a replacement for "Ozzie & Harriet" starting June 29. Following its 13-week run, the

Emanuel New Story Ed For Warners Telefilm

Hollywood, May 15.

New story editor of Warners telefilm operation is Jack Emanuel, vice Dick Diggs, resigned. Emanuel has a scripting, producing and literary agency background.

Meanwhile, two story readers have exited the Burbank lot, and will be replaced shortly, according to a studio spokesman. Writer Sam Rolf, under WB contract, has taken a six-month vacation and Danny Arnold, who with Rolf wrote "The Yanks Are Here," for producer Richard Whorf, has finished his assignment and exited.

Breweries' Siphon Off Vidpix Coin

In the past few days, Screen Gems had had two bouts with brewery sponsors and lost both. First, Falstaff notified the syndication house recently that it was ankling 46 "Celebrity Playhouse" markets, bought via national spot, when the current contract ends. Two, and a greater blow to the SG coffers, is the cancellation of 164 stations by season's end on "Demon Runyon Theatre" by Budweiser.

The Runyonana half-hours are currently showing in 59 spot markets and on 105. CBS-TV stations Saturdays. (Thirty-five of the network feeds are on a delayed basis.) Regular network time is 10:30 p.m.

Bud is contemplating a buy-in to RKO Teleradio's top 52 feature film package for next season via Vitapix. Any other plans the sudsmaker might have, it won't talk.

Falstaff signed for 70 markets on the Rod Cameron—"State Trooper" package, an MCA product, when it cancelled on "Celebrity Playhouse." Sponsor, finishing its "City Detective (also Cameron and MCA) this week in all markets, might go as high as 110 markets on "Trooper" by January of next year, at the time the package is ready for exposure.

Monday newspaper headlines are made on television's Sunday forums. Every voter can meet his candidates face to face – on television – before he decides how to vote. A Senate hearing on TV achieves the status of No. 1 audience attraction in a nation brimming over with audience attractions. Far-flung places are as accessible as the living room television set. Children experience the world, from finger-painting to the look of an armadillo, by watching TV.

As television has grown, it has aimed its cameras deeper and longer at the people, the places, the ideas, that give shape and substance to our time.

Television makes it possible for viewers to meet the world's genuinely great minds with such a series as NBC's Conversations with Elder Wise Men. The major intellectual developments of the past fifty years are illuminated in Princeton '56, produced in cooperation with Princeton University. The Project 20 Events cover, in documentary form, the whole dramatic sweep of the 20th Century—and with Nightmare in Red and The Twisted Cross demonstrated the tremendous audience response to this kind of programming.

NBC's plans for covering the Presidential Conventions and Election of 1956 will make it possible for a whole nation to be an immediate and intimate witness to political events.

By enlarging television's capacity for pictorial journalism in depth, for forums and debates, for telementaries and educational programs, NBC participates – fully, richly, regularly – in the lives of America's families.

WUNDERBAR
With Bob Sonnenberg
Producer-director: Val Linder
Writer: Linder & Sonnenberg
30 Mins.: Sun., 3:30 p.m.
WCCO, Minneapolis

In that it's the only local airlanes program to be aimed principally at this area's numerous foreign born and those of immediate foreign extraction, particularly the Germans who are in the majority and even outnumber any of the Scandinavian nationalities, and because its appeal is directed at all peoples of conservative musical taste, mainly the middle-aged and elderly, this Sunday afternoon half-hour musical potpourri represents a departure.

It's emceed half and half in German and English by German-born Robert Sonnenberg who introduces the foreign imported disks with an intriguing accent in a dignified but friendly as well as informative manner. In no other radio show here is a foreign tongue employed.

Initial show revealed a neat pattern for a quiet, restful, relaxing, quiet Sunday afternoon musical session for those who wish to escape the current swing and rock and roll rage and the almost ever-present hit parade slambanging without going all the way to the classics. Sonnenberg skillfully chose popular and German and Viennese marches, waltzes, folksongs and operetta numbers of the type seldom or ever heard over the air here and that merited the designation pleasant.

Sonnenberg, a onetime German actor in his native country and in the U. S. and a musical director for a local German singing society, does his commentary chores well. The show should gain a substantial audience of elderly folks. Rees.

Radio Followup

It's Time

The sum of $10,500 a week doesn't seem exorbitant as the price of sponsorship for 21 listenable weekend radio capsules. "It's Time," peppered throughout the ABC radio Saturday and Sunday skeds, glides along, borrowing from many lighter Time mag essays, as a pleasantly stylized news featurette.

Picking 'em at random, out of 21 U.S. Royal Tire-backed five-minute segs all told there was the one at 5 p.m., Saturday. Apparently typical, since most of the others heard dwelled on one subject in the four non-commercial minutes, it dabbled in the expansion of American art and music abroad, Anita Ekberg's sally against bosom baring and a Kansas clergyman who posted a "Thou Shalt Not Park" in front of his church when an ordinary "No Parking" sign didn't work. There was another segment, a dogmatized editorial, on how Marilyn Monroe has progressed as a thesp; another seg—on Sunday—about "an official busybody who always has a code in his head" (William Friedman, a government cryptologist who got $100,000 last week from Uncle Sam); and a final piece, among those caught, re Louis Armstrong's European tour.

Westbrook Van Voorhees did an especially nice job narrating the news in the style of his longtime "March of Time" association. Incidental acting voices injected a continuing fresh note into the news feature stuff, though the show had trouble enacting the stars; La Monroe's imitator was too wispy, and the fact that Armstrong's copycatter had a gravel voice didn't mean that he sounded positively like the tooter.

"It's Time," certified by bankroller contract as an object de network until July, is potent Nielsen radio buckshot. Art.

Marc Connelly Gives A PhD Aura to a DJ Stint as Kovacs Sub

The disk jockey fraternity is getting classed up these days. Nothing like getting a Pulitzer Prizewinner to add tone to the deejay profesh. (And now if some DJ's—let's not name names—would only scram and peddle their wares some other way, the platter-turning industry might get to amount to more than it does.) So there was Marc Connelly, at a snappy age 65 yocking it up in that shy, sly, low-key way of his in a fortnight's pinchhit job for Ernie Kovacs on WABC, N. Y. (Kovacs left his waxworks to laugh it up in Europe; for his NBC tv'er, he's being kinnied.)

Fact that the WABC factotums managed to sell Connelly on the three-hour (from 6 a.m.) crossboard stint was a coup d'records in itself; Kovacs could have had something to do with the persuading.

The "Green Pastures" (et al.) playwright, wit, raconteur and quondam Prof. of Drama (Yale) is an irreverent character, a citizen who dabbles professionally and professorially in the Queen's English the way she should be spoke, and a laugher-upper who can get quiet yocks just by being himself. Hausfraus and post-dawn peasants may not savvy the Connelly treatment at first, but leave him in there long enough and the average mob will be in his corner.

No ivory tower man at any time in his life, Connelly ran through the 180 minutes with a snappy chinfest splicing the disking and commercials, plussed along by the live music of the Buddy Weed orch. Even his plugs for the multiplicity of clients had a way about them whenever he was called on to handle such blurbs. The playwright-turned-platter-pusher teed off Monday (14) with a couple of running gags, teaching a mouse how to talk (in a switch from his threat to turn the trick with a rat, but discarded as too big and perhaps too offish in sound for the sensitive ears of the distaff variety) and taking off on items re "Eclipse" comic books.

A Marc Connelly is more than welcome to join the deejay lists—proving himself a credit also to Kovacs. Trau.

Hurst Gets Untermeyer Sales Berth at WCBS

G. E. (Buck) Hurst has been named sales manager of WCBS, N.Y., succeeding Henry Untermeyer, newly-named general manager of KCBS, San Francisco. Appointment of Hurst puts an end to the round-robin cued by the resignation of Irving Fein as v.p. over sales development, advertising and press info for CBS Radio. Jules Dundes had been moved up from KCBS to replace Fein, with Untermeyer replacing Dundes.

Hurst, curiously enough, is another KCBS veteran, having joined the station in 1951 as a national sales rep. He then moved to CBS Radio Spot Sales, where he headed the Los Angeles office for two years, then joined KMOX, the CBS o&o in St. Louis, as national sales manager. Most recently, he was a contact man in the sales department of Spot Sales in N. Y.

GM'S CLOSED-CIRCUIT HOOPLA TO 61 CITIES

Theatre Network Television is handling the closed-circuit facilities for today's (Wed.) General Motors dedication ceremony of its new technical center at Warren, Mich. The event will be seen on big screens in hotels in 61 cities in the U. S. and Canada by some 20,000 GM officials, civic and business leaders.

The program will feature the appearance of President Eisenhower who will be telecast from the White House. The TNT-produced program will include a tv tour of the 330-acre 26-building technical center and talks by GM toppers, including prexy Harlow H. Curtice, Dr. L. R. Hafstad, and Charles F. Kettering.

Closed-tv telecast, third for GM, is the 100th closed-tv event presented by TNT. On April 26, on notification of one week, TNT arranged a 10-city big-screen telecast for McCann-Erickson on behalf of its client, Esso Standard.

These people, he says, "listen better to Mexican Spanish." One reason is that Mexico has conditioned them through the many features it sells here.

He said that there is a fortune in the U. S. Spanish market. In N. Y., for instance, where he suggests some smart operator devote his programming exclusively to Spanish, "there are 700,000 Spaniards—they like to get back to Spain occasionally."

star names, the sponsors wanted the stars to appear in the commercials, so the blurbs were made at the same time as the programs by the same producers. To extend this service to other advertisers was only a logical progression.

There's also a "diversification in reverse" factor at work in the telefilm industry, wherein companies have entered the syndication field simply as subsidiaries of older and larger companies which wanted to expand a new field. Immediate cases are the three network subsidiaries and the subsids of the motion picture companies (Screen Gems, Hollywood Television Service, Interstate TV, the defunct United Artists TV). Next in line are motion picture service companies, like National Screen Service, which operates a tv commercials division; United Film Service of Kansas City and Motion Picture Advertisers Service of New Orleans, the two screen commercial houses which combined with Minot TV to form UM&M. There's MCA, which went into telepix as a logical outgrowth of its production-packaging deals.

Finally, there's the instance of C&C Television, the subsid of C&C Super Corp., which under Matty Fox bought up the RKO library. C&C Super, though best known for its soft-drinks-in-cans, is actually a holding company for several business operations. Here's the case of the opportunity to delve into a new business. Similar instance is PRM Inc., the Lou Chesler firm which in collaboration with Associated Artists bought out the Warner Bros. library.

network is preeming the new "Adventures of Jim Bowie" in the time slot. "Mission" is based on World War II stories and was recently acquired for distribution by NTA from Coast producer Jack Skirball.

At the same time, NTA set a deal for reruns of the show following the summer network exposure on WPIX, N.Y. Actually, WPIX had bought the series a week earlier; but with the understanding that if a network deal were set, it would have to hold off till fall on showing it. While this was NTA's first network deal for a series, the company did set a web deal about a year back, for a one-shot "spectacular" showing of the British-made feature. "The Magic Box," NBC-TV paid NTA $75,000 for rights to the pic, but never used it.

at $983,805, for a total balance of $1,978,267. Deducting $68,997 (10 cents per share) in cash dividends to stockholders from the net income and 1954 balance of $59,505, the 1955 balance stood at $172,953.

According to the financial report, "the Federal Income Tax Refund results from a difference in treatment for income tax purposes of $401,292 of net film rental income. This amount, which is not reportable as taxable income for the current fiscal year, creates a net operating loss carryback."

As was reported earlier, the current Guild profit pace is moving at four times what it did in 1955. First quarter of 1956 showed the syndicator making approximately $70,000 against the total $120,161 for all of 1955.

Archinard Describes Clubbing of TV Lenser In Tito Demonstration

According to word from Paris last week, police clubbed a tv cameraman and other lensers in a melee revolving around the Yugoslavian Embassy in the French capital. Paul Archinard, representing NBC News in Paris, said that the cameraman was Jean Pierre Lamoine, roughed up in the Passy section of the city near the Embassy where a Catholic delegation had gathered to protest alleged religious oppression in Yugoslavia during Tito's visit there.

According to Archinard, only about 50 Catholics, including two priests, turned up with poster slogans reading, "Justice for all men —Yugoslavia liberate Church." He said that without trouble some demonstrators were loaded aboard trucks by a heavy protective police force. Cameramen present snapped photos of the scene and were immediately attacked by irate police. One still photographer was beaten and another pursued and kicked while down, then hospitalized. About $1,500 worth of cameras were smashed.

Lamoine was clubbed before he could film the scene for tv, resulting in a large lump showing up on his head and welts on arms and shoulders.

Archinard said that "for lack of more dangerous opponents, police have spent much energy manhandling pressmen during Tito's visit. They manhandled about 20 scribes covering the Poujade demonstration near the statue of Clemenceau. Pathe cameraman Serge Ehrler was arrested and his film confiscated; he was released at midnight after covering the Indochina veterans and Poujadists demonstrating at Napoleon's Tomb. A large protest from the entire press has been posted with the police commissioner and Premier Mollet demanding an investigation."

Derr, Ex-CBS, Freelances Into Some NBC-TV Dates

John Derr, who recently vacated from the broadcasting-exec sports sphere of CBS after a longtime association, is freelancing his way into NBC-TV dates. He's been tapped for the Palm Beach golf telecast on the web next month. Derr may also have his hand in the National Golf Open on NBC-TV later that month.

So far, incidentally, there are no takers for the network's Olympic Tryouts, slotted 4 to 6 p.m. Saturday, June 30, out of the Coliseum in L. A. NBC had long ago put a sponsor "donation" price of $25,000 plus the time, the 25G to go to the Olympic Fund. Tryouts, carrying the men's finals in track & field, will be described by H. D. Thoreau, Coast track expert who covered the Landy mile race, and Jim Simpson, working out of Washington, D. C., for the web.

Malcolm-Howard ad agency has grabbed off Ziv's "Mr. District Attorney" and MCA-TV's "Federal Men" for firstrun showcasing in the WBKB Friday night at 10 slot. Moran, of course, is keeping his Sunday night 10 o'clock feature film on WGN-TV.

WBBM-TV, Too

For a short time last winter, WBBM-TV was able to boast it was live at 11 six nights a week, what with two bowling shows, the Redd Stewart and Pee Wee King's brace of hayloft jamborees and Miller's two weeknight shows. The kegler stanzas have exited as have Stewart and his country contingent. The status of King's Saturday night production is uncertain. In practically each instance, the periods have been filled with celluloid shows that cost less but do as well or better ratingwise.

With the demise of Miller's Thursday night hour, the Columbia station is adding new muscle to his two-hour Friday night offering. The Caesar Petrillo staff orch and a stepped up talent budget is going into the weekender.

The fact that each of the four Chi stations have a quota of staff musicians to keep at least partially occupied has some impact in the live vs. film equilibrium. WGN-TV recently launched a Wednesday night musical half-hour featuring the Bob Trendler house band, singers Betty Bryan and Kyle Kimbro and hosted by Pat McCaffrie. WNBQ has its early evening "Adults Only" strip with Joseph Gallicchio and his AFM staffers, singers Nancy Wright and Mike Douglas and emcee Tom Mercein. WBKB is keeping its 11:15 to midnight block alive with the Buddy Lester show of which the staff jazz group is an integral cog. Petrillo and his CBS tootlers have a nightly assignment on WBBM-TV's "In Town Tonight" quarter-hour which also features singers Patricia Scot and Len Dresslar and host Jim Conway.

Currently, there's a rather specialized musical-variety idiom in vogue. That's the polka parties that have become this season's fad, much in the same fashion the bowling shows sprouted earlier. First to tip off the "foreign language" interest in the old country dances and tunes was Ron Terry and his gang, now holding down a Saturday morning spot on WGN-TV. Same station also has Frank Yankovic and his Polka crew Wednesday nights. And WBKB recently broke out with its variation Monday nights. Latter dance fest, emceed by Bruno (Junior) Zielinski and featuring Stan Wolowiac's staff recruits, is to get a summer ride on ABC-TV Friday nights at 9 starting in July.

But the era apparently has ended, hereabouts at least, where the sponsors can be induced to go for the four-figure time and talent nut required for a traditional type variety production, complete with guest acts. Too much evidence has been piled up by Nielsen, Pulse, et al, that the filmed attractions have that big cost-per-thousand edge.

many changes since starting out with formula of country music. Following sale by the Post, Stan Richards was given the 2-7 p. m. show each day; Bill Marlowe, a rock and roll evening show; and Jim Dixon, a deejay show.

Then, Stan Richards ankled the station to return to WORL as program chief. Bob Martin was inked to handle the midnight show. Marlowe was moved to a quieter afternoon show and Jack McDermott was pulled in from WLYN to handle the evening shows. Selling of the station to southern interests was consummated a few weeks back by the Post. More changes are expected at WCOP within the next two frames.

Jerry Howard, whose all night show on WBZ with several fictional down east Maine characters in which Howard does all the voices, made the surprise shift to WEEI Monday (14), handling the 10 p. m. to 1 a. m. show. On Saturdays, he will be on from 8 p. m. to 1 a. m. Howard continues his "Slim Perkins" character on WEEI.

Ankling of Howard from WBZ was seen as a further expansion of station's new disk jock around the clock policy. Station recently inked Alan Dary to bolster its deejay string headed by Norm Prescott.

RCA, ELECTRICAL WORKERS IN PACT

Camden, N.J., May 15.

Radio Corp. of America and the International Union of Electrical Workers (AFL-CIO) reached an agreement over the weekend on a new contract for 14,000 workers. Terms of the pact were unanimously approved by three locals representing 9,100 employes in the South Jersey area.

The locals covered production workers in the Camden and Cherry Hill plants and employes of the Moorestown engineering plant. The remaining 4,900 employes in Cincinnati and Los Angeles will meet this week.

Salary increases ranging from 6 to 10c an hour effective immediately, and hikes of 5 to 8c an hour effective in a year were included in the pact. In addition union members will receive eight holidays annually instead of seven; four week vacations after 25 years, improved hospital and surgical care and three days off in the event of death in the immediate family.

Raleigh, N. C.—Roy J. Johnston becomes director of tv at North Carolina State College, relinquishing his job as production director at WUNC-TV. He succeeds Ralph L. Burgin.

"Peter Pan" and "Caine Mutiny," both stage plays that have won Emmys as examples of what should be cut.

(2) Another recommendation was ending distinction between live and film shows, on grounds "a drama is a drama regardless of whether filmed or live."

(3) That voters make no distinction between day and nighttime programming or between cheap and expensive programming.

(4) The various categories should be processed by the unions, creative or technical, whose members receive them, e.g., actors awards should be handled by SAG and AFTRA.

Improve Pubrelations

(5) Ed Sullivan suggested Emmy recommendations be sent around the country to various television columnists to improve public relations. The columnists, many of whom are against the Emmys, will be given the chance to express opinions on the nominees. This is to eliminate the belief among reporters and many tradesters that the Academy is "a secret organization." Syd Eiges, veep of NBC, also suggested that the org hire a fulltime flack to ease the bad publicity.

Ten categories each elected four members to the ATAS eastern board of governors. Sullivan, who sparked the formation of the N. Y. chapter, was elected to rep the newscaster-emcee category, along with John Daly, Garry Moore and Charles Collingwood; actors-actresses — Faye Emerson, Carl Reiner, Bud Collyer, Ken Groot; execs—Henry White, Syd Eiges, Robert Lewine, Warren Caro; singers - dancers - specialty acts — Nanette Fabray, Gisele MacKenzie, Bambi, Linn, Rod Alexander; musicians - composers - arrangers — Ray Bloch, Skitch Henderson, Steve Allen, Hank Sylvern; writers—Rod Serling, Jerome Liss, Nat Hiken, Evelyn Burkey; directors-choreographers—Max Liebman, Frank Schaffner, Sid Lumet, Perry Lafferty; producers — Marlo Lewis, Mark Goodson, Tony Miner, Barry Wood; cameramen-film editors-engineers—Robert Dailey, Charles Giriat, Imero Fiorentino, Bob Barry; art directors-scenic designers-costume designers—Otis Riggs, Robert Paddock, Frederick Fox, Carl Vent. last Sunday (13), said in part as follows:

"Try as one will, getting in a festive mood about radio is just a little difficult. No amount of promotion can obscure the fact that the erstwhile glamour girl of the communications world is now a rather wan figure. . . . It is no longer much of a national operation but rather many hundreds of local operations. Generally, radio has been pretty well content just to survive. But in doing so its record is hardly impressive. . . . For the sound medium of broadcasting to become a king-sized jukebox reflects only a dismal laziness and lack of faith upon radio's part. More people will listen to radio, but only when there is more reason to do so."

I repeat in substance what I said in Boston, "I think the greatest danger to the future of radio is the likelihood that many of us will sell it out too cheaply," and that too many of us are drifting listlessly into simple routine patterns of news and music without attempting fully to explore the possibilities of providing a broader, more diversified and meaningful service.

And without the slightest trepidation I say to broadcasters individually, and collectively, wherever you are, "if this be treason, make the most of it."

be installed. Telecasts would use the Broadway cast, but would be studio-originated with additional sets and trimmings.

Cost would run about $35,000, largely because of the theatre rental, but the advantages include the publicity aspect of a "day-date" telecast of a Broadway vehicle; advance planning for sets, costumes, and scripts for both media; shorter rehearsal time for tv because the cast already knows its lines and business; availability of top stars to do both the theatre and tv stints for the same price they'd do television, because of their desire to appear in a limited Broadway engagement; b.o. receipts defraying some costs, plus availability of tickets for the sponsor; and the greater availability of one-act plays than full-lengthers and greater ease of adapting a one-acter to 30 minutes than reducing a full-lengther to an hour.

Barrington has already tested the program locally in Philadelphia, where he did the same thing via WFIL-TV. Moorehead, who's associated with him in the project, is the w.k. syndicated bridge expert. Project, says Barrington, has already been cleared with all unoins concerned, and actors and agents approached have expressed a willingness to go along on the premises set forth.

scopes of the Rigney series available to other stations. Also, if ABC-TV decides against carrying it, the program will be offered to the other two networks.

Father Rigney's pay for the 13 shows will be turned over to the non-Communist creditors of the Fu Jen Catholic University in Peking, of which he was rector. The school owes about $150,000 which was borrowed before Father Rigney was jailed by the Reds on "spy" charges.

the same time slot. Station action, said Havens, was prompted by 3,000 letters urging continuance of the "Firestone" show.

Havens charged that NBC stalled giving WTVR a rate increase for 15 months despite a $660,000 investment by the station to increase its power and coverage. Then, he said, NBC "left us two months to enjoy the benefits of the increase before the punishment for requesting it became effective." While the "injuries" done to WTVR may seem relatively light, Havens asserted, "They are part of a growing concentration of power over the operation of the nation's tv stations, the production of tv programs, and the right to decide what the American public shall see."

Havens urged that the FCC consider regulations to prevent networks from compelling affiliates to accept all programs offered and from requiring affiliates to accept a gross network station rate lower than the station's national gross rate on spot programs for the same class of time segment. He also recommended outlawing of "must buy" agreements.

TEMPERANCE UNION IN SWIPE AT KEYD-TV

Washington, May 15.

Liquor spot advertising on KEYD-TV, in Minneapolis, is "a clear violation of the NARTB Television Code," the Methodist Board of Temperance has charged in an open letter to Harold E. Fellows, president of the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters, yesterday (14).

"Minneapolis area tv sets, tuned to channel 9," said the Temperance Board, "blare 'RAW BEEF' as the words appear on the screen along with the sponsors' name—Skol Liquor Store. The ditty runs: just dial the words 'RAW BEEF' on your telephone for home service from the Skol Liquor Store."

The Methodist Board asserted this was a "clear violation" of the Code—"which Code, you argued before the House Interstate Commerce Committee, makes the proposed legislation unnecessary.

"If this is voluntary control, we vote for legislation as soon as possible."

Inter-Am. B'casters

tions and subsequently more set sales. "The States should watch our tv," he said. "America doesn't begin at the Rio Grande River—this is one continent."

As for himself and the other well-off operators in IAAB, he said: "You know how we can build tv in little countries like Salvador is by throwing the kinescopes in their hands. If they only pay $15 or $20 for one of our shows, we will have helped them, and we have nothing to lose.

"They have a fantastic idea in these little countries that they want to go into television—yet television is dangerous. So we'll help and maybe later on pro-rate our charges to increases in the people watching tv."

The Mexican exec recalled, when IAAB started—"before the DC-7" and its ensuing travel advantages—the organization was listless because of "mutual indifference" and the belief that "we had nothing to gain materially" by following through. He remembered the meeting IAAB held in Argentina in 1948, a year after some member station had trouble with Peron. "Goar Mestre (of Cuba) made such a hot speech, he had to get out of the country to Uruguay after his speech." By then, he said, "We were tired of so many dictators ruling the air."

He showed the disadvantages of such rule. "Look at Argetina (which just beat the Peron rap)! It has 50 radio stations. Mexico has 300. They should have 250 to 300 stations there to cover the geographic area. The sale of sets is nothing there, because of the government control. Guatemala was the same. It was right after the communists were broken up by revolt, a committee from IAAB went there to talk to the president and he promised to deliver the government-owned station to private control." That's only one situation; it was IAAB's running around, from Caesar to Caeser, patiently and diplomatically explaining free-enterprise advantages that helped, Azcarraga believes.

Then he ran down a list of countries and the conditions that exist in them: "Little Salvador is going to have tv, but Costa Rica—imagine—the government is trying to run television. It refuses to let tv grow. How civilized is a country in five years from now that doesn't have television?" he asked. Rapidly he asked another question: "How many people are going to buy sets to see what the government has to offer? We're sure not going to give them programs."

Of Columbia, he said the situation is "a little troublesome now," explaining that it has a degree of censorship, and only half of tv is in private hands—"sort of British style, to concessionaires." He was a "little" skeptical of Dominican Republic where Rafael Trujillo reigns.

Panama, he said, is coming along. "Venezuela is good, so is Cuba, Mexico, Peru." Concluding his catalog, he observed that "Brazil is in fairly good shape; they are very progressive but they have a little political trouble there."

"We have to teach the minors in television to be grownup. In 10 years we are doing it," he philosophized in the present tense.

Access road to radio relay station, Rocky Point, Nevada.

A TV CHANNEL IS PART ROAD

The more than 500 radio relay towers of the Bell System are found in all imaginable types of terrain from a Nevada mountaintop to the roof of a New York skyscraper. Yet each must be accessible for maintenance in any season, and under any weather condition.

So the Bell System builds roads which help insure dependable network service for the television industry. In bad weather, jeeps or specially designed snow tractors are needed in some locations.

For a radio relay network is more involved than it might appear. It needs access roads . . . and generators for stand-by emergency power. And it requires a skilled corps of highly trained maintenance experts across the nation, always available when trouble occurs.

Every Bell System relay station is a combination of all these many elements. Together they help insure the best television transmission it is possible to provide across almost 70,000 channel miles.

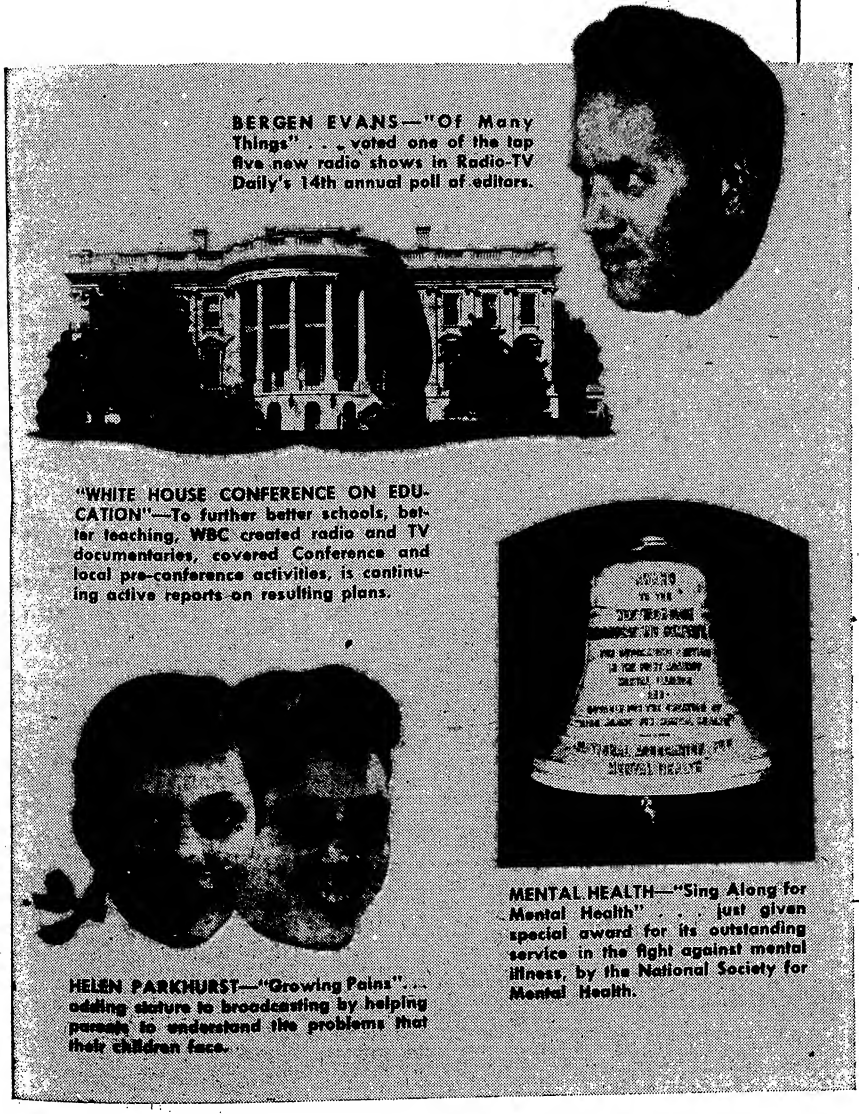
REPORTS ON WBC PUBLIC SERVICE PROGRAMMING



Westinghouse Way

Westinghouse Broadcasting Co. did itself proud during the past year in the area of educational programming, as it set about developing new patterns for all multiple-station owners and operators, at the same time injecting a high calibre of showmanship into public service broadcasting. It can be proud of its record, to wit: Its Bergen Evans radio series; its unique coverage of the White House Conference on Education in both radio and tv; its pioneering in the field of public education in mental health with its "Sing-Along for Mental Health" campaign; its Helen Parkhurst series.

Evans series was a compelling one, built around WBC conviction that there's a large and growing audience in AM for solid intellectual fare, if brightly and sprightly done. However, the major project on which WBC concentrated was the White House Conference on Education—and to increase the impact of the conference on a town, city and state level, and to create a favorable community climate for the big meeting itself, WBC launched one of the season's impressive series—"The Big R"—based on the six-point conference agenda. WBC as such was fully aware of its responsibility to aid the cause of better schools, better teaching—and went about it the right way.

Reprinted from Variety, April 18, 1956

All these programs are prompted by a basic WBC belief: That broadcasting is most effective on stations that have earned the respect and confidence of the communities they serve.

Electronicam

Electronicam. Arbitration awarded it to SAG, although AFTRA threatens an appeal. The dispute was considered one reason why other program producers were shying from the show. However, in the past few days, Electronicam reports it has begun negotiating with three producers on shows for next season.

A DuMont veep said last week that, even without Gleason, Electronicam was laying plans for the fall season, most of them having little to do with the Adelphi or tv production in N. Y. He explained that since DuMont was largely a research-manufacturing org, it was primarily interested in building, then leasing or renting use of the Electronicam to outside production units, either in tv or in motion pictures. The Adelphi operation, he said, was as much a "Showcase" to show the Electronicam's versatility as much as anything else.

The Coast Electronicam operation, for instance, will not establish studio facilities. Ralph Austrian, in charge of affairs out there, is merely trying to lease the camera for next fall use, though no deals have been consummated yet. He was in N. Y. last week on confabs with Electronicam Division boss Jim Caddigan.

One of the tacks that Caddigan and Austrian were believed considering was integration of the Electronicam with the new Ampex electronic tape method, to eliminate any possible inferior quality film. Company says that the cameras, 15 of which it has available to date, can make the conversion easily.

Minneapolis, May 15.

"Talent is where you find it," WCCO radio is pointing out.

Station in question discovered it in the person of its building's cigar store operator, 66-year old Robert Sonnenberg, and immediately signed him up for a show of his own suggestion and is acclaiming him its newest personality.

Sonnenberg started last Sunday with a WCCO half-hour musical show of his own, "Wunderbar," in which, partly in German and partly in English and with a German accent, he introduces European imported disks comprising folk songs and tunes, waltzes, operettas selections, marches and chorals.

When WCCO patrons of the Sonnenberg cigar store drew out of him that he had a long and rich showbusiness experience background and access to the imported recordings, the idea of latching onto him for a show, different from any now produced locally for audio or video, took root.

Born in Berlin, he made his professional debut at the age of 17 as a juvenile comedian in Hamberg, Bavaria. He established himself as a star two years later with a 12-month engagement at Berlin's celebrated Residence Theatre.

Sonnenberg came to the U.S. in 1912 for a Chicago Bush Temple engagement that lasted two years. Before moving to Milwaukee where he starred at the Pabst theatre, he was employed in German theatricals in Cincinnati.

During ensuing years he travelled throughout the midwest with stock companies and then, in 1937, settled in Minneapolis and quit the theatre except for occasional engagements. He's musical director for a German singing society here.

Although he has taken on the WCCO show, Sonnenberg says he'll continue to operate his cigar store.

and thence Greco went into an exciting solo. It's a pity that the group didn't have enough time to give a full account of themselves, and so a lot of this expensive act was wasted.

The comedy was by Jay Marshall, always an affable kid, likeable in his delivery who threw a few fast and subtle lines and then into the surefire ventriloquy bit for excellent mittings. Gene Wesson & Gordon Polk are a new act, but look like a combination that will pan out. They got their quota of laughs.

Singing turns were the Barry Sisters in number two, who gave a spirited rendition of "Wrong Face" and then dripping with Mother's Day sentiment virtually wept out "Yiddishe Mamma." Carlos Ramirez was caught apparently in the time switches and came on only for one number, "Granados" creditably delivered. Novelty was by Ving Merlin and a three-girl violin troupe, who catgutted with novel formations for a good response. The opener and closer were by acrobats. The Merkys are an unusual and excellent contortion act comprising three males possessing apparently boneless bodies. They can hit virtually any visual situation. The Fredonias a risley turn, did only a few tricks before the curtain closed on them.

Sullivan had an imposing list of cuffolas with his telecasting of a portion of The City of Hope Dinner in Hollywood. A batch of film prominents got Mother's Day Awards. Nor too much entertainment here, with its tired sextet of glamorpuss mothers in the awkward position of repeating the same cliches six times over.

The conferencier brought home the suddenness of life and death with his film clip of Louis Calhern, taken only a short time ago in Japan where he died while at work on "Teahouse of the August Moon." Jose.

Kraft TV Theatre

"Death Is a Spanish Dancer" might have made the grade as a half-hour play. The Wendell Mayes script on NBC's "Kraft TV Theatre" last week (9) didn't have sufficient substance for an hour's worth, though performances and production were okay. Set mainly in Dallas and in that town's Latino belt, it took off on a Mexican legend themed on "death may take the attractive form of a Spanish dancer," complete with plaintive guitaring and a poetic sort of outlook.

It was an oppressive story of Kim Stanley as a dying cardiac, overpossessive tycoon father Bert Freed and flamenco dancer Luis Olivares as the object of her affections in a final fling ending up in Juarez, to which the terper had scrammed when Fred had the Dallas bistro shuttered. It didn't add up to too much as a story, Miss Stanley, seldom more attractive, played it deadpan, keyed to her downbeat physical status ending in death. Freed was offishly bombastic; Olivares' stomping was first-rate; James Daly as Miss Stanley's medico seemed the only real, down-to-earth character and handled the role to suit. Trau.

Beginning in mid-June, six regional meetings for affiliates will be held by Mutual Broadcasting to get okays on its new "service network" plan. Wanna Be a No-Prize Contestant?

A packager has taken the unusual step of advertising in the daily press for contestants for an audience-participation show. Frank Cooper Associates inserted boxed ads in the N. Y. Daily News and in Newark and Hartford papers last week which under a caption, "At a Crossroads?" read:

"If you are facing an important personal decision and can't decide which road to take . . . a national television show invites you to appear, and get the opinions of thousands of fellow Americans who may have been in the same boat. Whatever decision you make, we will help you to make your decision a successful one." Ad closed with a box number, identifying neither the advertiser nor the show.

Show is Cooper's "Stand Up and Be Counted," slated to bow on CBS-TV later this month. And there was a good reason for advertising for contestants. They are offered nothing in the way of prizes or rewards but an answer to their problem. Show's format calls for the contestant to relate a personal problem to which he can't find an answer. A studio audience of 300 then votes on an answer; a week later the contesant returns to get a mail consensus by Fisher, head of the Cooper, N. Y. office and producer of the show, said the ads were set to get a sufficient backing of good cases before the show starts and because the contestants are not limited to any income group or classifications. "We want people with real problems and we're not offering them any prizes, so we went out and advertised for them."

Irving Berlin On His 68th

If you're around long enough, according to the contemporaneous scheme of things, you get some kind of recognition. That's true for the VIPs who are voluntary clay pigeons for fundraising dinners, and it's just as true about the vets whose longevity or impact in some sphere of influence is the cue for some kind of a "testimonial" banquet.

Harassed executives and harried showfolk who are frequently shilled into these sort of testimonials know from somewhat grim experience, that (1) most of these shindigs are as phoney as a $3 bill; and (2), to prove it, there have been instances where professional after-dinner speakers like George Jessel and Harry Hershfield have made the same speech for local nonenity as for a captain of industry, and with equal results. In fact, there is a case history in which these pros got into the wrong banquet hall in a certain Manhattan hotel, spoken glibly about "your guest of honor," extolling his virtues, his domestic fealty and his communal benevolence without knowing, until it was all over, that they were pitching, for free, in the wrong hall but with the same right script.

This is a remote control way of segueing into the nationwide musical tributes to Irving Berlin on his 68th birthday when, last week, over AM and tv, his 45 years of enrichment to the American folk lore was the most convincing raison d'etre for this tribute to America's No. 1 and still champion songsmith.

There are no illusions about these birthday salutes on radio and video, hence no one is blind to the fact that ASCAP and/or Berlin Inc.'s enterprising corps of song exploiteers made sure that the natal date was not forgotten. But there was nothing artificial in the rich cavalcade of Berliniana, as it was reprised time and again, vocally and instrumentally, ever since the singing waiter from that Chinatown ginmill known as Nigger Mike's catapulted on the horizon with "Alexander's Ragtime Band" in 1911. That was exactly 45 years ago. And 45 years from now the Berlin melodies will continue to enrich the nation, and the world, with their perennial appeal.

This is one time being "around long enough" is measured without time but by the yardstick of achievement. Abel.

Despite Upheaval on Coast, Petrillo Still Sitting Pretty at AFM Conclave

Although there have been plenty of squawks against AFM prexy James C. Petrillo, mostly from the Coast, the American Federation of Musicians convention set for next month at Atlantic City is already cinched to be another wrap-up for the union leadership. Petrillo already has received expressions of support from most of the locals around the country in his battle with Local 47 in Los Angeles and, under the AFM setup, it's virtually impossible to muster a sizable number of convention delegates to fight the administration.

At this point, it's doubtful whether even Local 47's anti-Petrillo forces will be represented at the convention. Under a recommendation of referee Arthur J. Goldberg last week, the leadership of Local 47's rebellion against Petrillo is more likely to be outside looking in than leading a fight at the convention.

Even New York's Local 802, the largest unit within the AFM and traditionally among the more independent of Petrillo, is expected to support the latter on all basic issues in the Local 47 hassle. On 47's beef against the diversion of tooter coin into the Music Performance Trust Fund, Local 802's

3) It happens every year.

4) Everybody's saving money for vacation.

6) There's not enough new material.

7) The publishers are saving their good material for the fall.

Cap's Album Kit For Deejay Spins

In a move to stimulate radio exposure for its heavy album release schedule, Capitol Records has whipped up a special deejay promotion kit of two 12-inch LPs containing selections from 24 of its May-June LP sets. Each excerpt has been pruned down to not more than three minutes running time to aid platter programming.

The deejay kit also includes complete info about the selections such as the albums from which they were culled, the publishers and the running time. Cap feels that a complete album is usually tough to get programmed and hopes that the sampler will solve the problem of getting air spins on album product.

Read Scores Petrillo

Hollywood, May 15.

Cecil F. Read, AFM Local 47 veepee, leader of the insurgents, charged that James C. Petrillo and the AFM refused to consider the possibility of a peaceful solution. He said his faction was always "willing to sit down and work out a solution" of internal problems. "We are not interested in tearing Petrillo apart. We only want to get some help for our people," he said.

PACKAGE CROWD 'RUNNING SCARED'

By MIKE GROSS

Although the current packaged goods boom is rolling at a hot pace, record company execs are cautiously regarding the trend as a nervous hit. There's an undercurrent of fear that the diskeries are pouring out more than the market can take and eventually burst the album bubble.

Yet, none of the companies wants to pull back on its current stepped-up pace. The albums are moving well in the stores and no company wants to let go of a good thing even it it means saturating the market. The record company sales execs also point out that despite the dip of single disk sales, their dollar volume has gone up because of the new consumer interest in LP product.

So far the dealers have been able to take the album barrage in stride. With the spread of new phonograph players and the growing hi-fi kick, it's expected that the album market will continue to expand. However, the diskery execs fear that the album production is running too far ahead and they're worrying when they'll reach the point of diminishing returns.

In a recent industry survey it was estimated that of the 25,000,000 phonograph players in the country today, only 10,000,000 were equipped to handle the album product. Such phonograph manufacturing diskeries as RCA and Columbia are on an allout push for the player lines.

Only squawk coming from dealers, so far, on the increased album production is the sameness of the product. They claim that they're getting too many similar sets in the mood music and jazz fields, particularly. There's even a sameness in the titles and the art work on the album covers, especially those featuring cheesecake models.

The retailers want more albums, but they want the diskery boys to come up with more production ideas and and not just to slap a few tunes together.

European Pubs Make Flock of Deals in U.S.; Scopp Heading O'Seas

Jack Denton, managing director of Publications Francis Day, Paris, which also represents The Big Three (Robbins, Feist and Miller) in France, and does business with a variety of major U. S. music publishers, has been in New York on a periodic buying-selling trip. He returns to France tomorrow (Thurs.).

Cor Smit Jr., head of the Francis, Day & Hunter branch in Amsterdam, which is the Dutch counterpart of Denton's operation, is also in the U. S.

Denton has made two-year deals with Columbia Pictures Music Corp., a Shapiro-Bernstein affiliate, and renewed for a like term with Joy Music. Songs from the Marks, S-B, Mills, Joy and Howie Richmond catalogs have been picked up for France and the Low-land teritories, and in turn, both have placed quite a few French and Dutch songs with U. S. publishers. They bring over local diskings thereof but, in the main, the Continental recordings are of little practical value for any Yank treatment; they serve dominantly as demonstration platters.

Going to Europe for like purpose this weekend is Mickey Scopp, g.m. of the Robbins-Feist-Miller setup, to confer with British, French and German affiliates. Sidenton Verlag, in Cologne, and Francis, Day & Hunter, Frankfurt/Main, are the Big Three's correspondents in Germany.

Put (Rube) Bloom on (Billy) Rose In New Court Test of Renewal Clause

Loot Song

Music publishers George Lee and Duke Niles, who share New York offices in the Buick Bldg. on Broadway, were burglarized last week. Among the missing items were typewriters and tape recorders.

Niles' comment on the looting was, "Why didn't they pick on a firm with a hit?"

Aberbachs Add Another Link To Hillbilly Empire

Jean and Julian Aberbach, head of the Hill & Range combine, have added another link to their publishing setup in the hillbilly field via a new music firm set up in conjunction with Hank Snow. Latter, an RCA Victor artist, has been one of the consistent best-selling artists in the country & western field for the past few years.

The Aberbachs already have similar publishing companies for Elvis Presley, another Victor artist who's the hottest name in the business today; and Ernest Tubb, an important hillbilly name on the Decca label.

The Aberbachs have still another strong base in this market via its tieup with Sun Records via the Hi-Lo Music firm which gives them access to all unpublished material cut on the Sun label. Latter company has emerged recently due to its launching of Presley, whose pact was bought out by Victor, and its current hit of Carl Perkins on "Blue Suede Shoes."

CLEFFER SUIT VS. BMI MAY BE TRIED THIS YR.

The $15,000,000 antitrust suit by 33 songwriters against Broadcast Music Inc. and the broadcast industry may come up for trial in N. Y. Federal Court late this year. Originally launched about two-and-a-half years ago by 33 writer-members of ASCAP, the suit alleges that there has been a conspiracy against ASCAP tunes by the broadcast industry, which owns BMI and, in the case of NBC and CBS, has major disk subsids.

At the present time, John Schulman, attorney for the songwriters, is still putting the defendants through pre-trial examinations. Quiz of the BMI toppers was recently concluded and it's expected that Schulman will next call on the network toppers.

Carolyn Leigh Sues Valando on 'Young' Coin

Lyricist Carolyn Leigh slapped a suit for payment of past royalties against publisher Tommy Valando in N. Y. Municipal Court last week. Miss Leigh is asking for $2,500 royalties due on last year's click "Young At Heart."

It's understood that her collaborator, Johnny Richards, in an independent action recently, asked for an auditing of the books. Tune, which disclicked via Frank Sinatra on the Capitol label, is in Valando's Sunbeam (BMI) firm.

Clinton to Reprise Faves in RCA Album

Larry Clinton, one of the top bandleaders of the swing era, has been inked by RCA Victor. His initial assignment will be to slice a package of his top songs.

Helen Ward, ex-Benny Goodman vocalist, will chirp with Clinton's studio band.

Once again, the important copyright renewal assignment clause in the old publisher-songwriter contracts is being challenged in the courts. With the Billy Rose vs. Bourne Music case on that issue still pending in the courts, songwriter Rube Bloom is now suing Mills Music in N. Y. Federal Court for a declaratory judgment, claiming that he is the copyright owner of four tunes in the Mills catalog. The tunes, written by Bloom in 1926 and 1927 and now in their second copyright term, are "Spring Fever," "Soliloquy," "Sapphire" and "Silhouette."

Lee V. Eastman, attorney for Bloom, is arguing the case solely on the grounds that the copyright renewal assignment in the original contract is not valid. According to Eastman, the Copyright Act intended, in splitting up the 56-year protection into two 28 terms, for the writers to get two cracks in selling his song. Hence, the renewal assignment clause in the old contract, to be valid, must involve a "separate consideration" stemming from negotiations separate and apart from any deal for the first copyright term.

Unlike Billy Rose in his copyright infringement suit against Bourne for return of the copyright to "That Old Gang of Mine" wherein he contends that Bourne failed to exploit the song properly during the first copyright term, Bloom makes no such allegations against Mills in the current suit He is simply challenging the validity of the original contract. Bloom, incidentally, originally gave the four tunes to Triangle Music which subsequently assigned them to Mills. If Bloom gets back the copyrights, he said he would give the tunes to E. H. Morris Music.

The Rose and Bloom actions are of key importance to the music biz since they involve virtually all of the songs written prior to 1933 when the Songwriters Protective Assn. came into being. Under the SPA deal, the writer automatically gets his copyright back after the first term. The copyrights now coming up for renewal now mostly stem from the 1928-32 period, still before the SPA era and hence operating on the old assignment clause.

Joe Carlton Due For New RCA Deal

Joe Carlton, RCA Victor's pop artists & repertoire chief, is expected to wrap up a new pact with the company shortly. Carlton has been working without a contract since his last deal ran out at the end of last month, but it's understood that a new pact has virtually been finalized.

Carlton, who joined Victor three years ago and replaced Dave Kapp as a&r chief, has hit paydirt with a couple of 1,000,000-disk sellers in the last few months. Both Kay Starr's "Rock and Roll Waltz" and Perry Como's "Hot Diggity" were recorded under his aegis this year.

Carlton now has an a&r staff consisting of Hugo Winterhalter and Joe Reisman in the east with Henri Rene heading up the Coast operation. Carlton reports to W. W. (Bill) Bullock, chief of the singles division, and Larry Kanaga, Victor v.p. and general manager the overall topper.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Al Hibbler: "Never Turn Back"-"Away All Boats" (Decca). Having scored one of his biggest hits with the inspirational "He" several months ago, Al Hibbler is back in a similar groove with "Never Turn Back." It's a moving ballad piece dramatically handled by Hibbler. A natural for big play on all levels. On the back side is the title song from the upcoming Universal pic. Hibbler projects the ballad mood in his usual slick style.

Dorothy Collins: "Treasure of Love"-"He's Got Me Hook, Line and Sinker" (Coral). Although Dorothy Collins' "Treasure of Love" is a cover of Clyde McPhatter's Atlantic etching, she's a solid bet to pick up all the marbles in the pop field. The rhythm & blues overtones are there, of course, but she makes it easy to take. Bottom deck is a brightly paced item which she swings across in an attractive style.

Eddie Fisher: "Sweet Heartaches"-"On The Street Where You Live" (RCA Victor). Brisk uptempo flavor of "Sweet Heartaches" gives Eddie Fisher a shellac winner for the jock and juke trade. Tune is lighthearted and gay and Fisher adds the relish. He's pleasantly romantic on "On The Street Where You Live," but Vic Damone (Columbia) staked his claim there a couple of weeks ago.

Lonnie Donegan: "Lost John"-"Stewball" (Mercury). The click of Lonnie Donegan's "Rock Island Line" on the London label will find plenty of friends for "Lost John." It's in the same folksy vein and will attract deejay attention because of Donegan's lively reading. "Stewball" is a yarn about a horse. However, it's not in the money.

Les Paul & Mary Ford: "Cimarron"-"San Antonio Rose" (Capitol). The multiple tracking technique that brought Les Paul and his wife Mary Ford to the fore is again evident on this coupling. Neat blending of Paul's guitar and his frau's pipes make "Cimarron" a payable piece. Paul's guitaring freshens up "San Antonio Rose."

Guy Mitchell: "Give Me A Carriage And Eight White Horses"-"I Used To Yate Ya" (Columbia). There's a good spinning potential in "Give Me A Carriage And Eight White Horses." Good lyric idea and effective melodic beat puts Mitchell in an appealing mood. The lyric in "I Used To Yate Ya" forces him to get cute and it doesn't work.

Sammy Davis Jr.: "Get Out Of The Car"-"Without You I'm Nothing" (Decca). "Get Out of the Car" is a special material bit that Sammy Davis Jr. has been using in his nitery-vaudery repertoire and it comes off okay on wax. It'll probably do better with the Davis diehards than the jocks or the jukes. "Without You I'm Nothing" is a tune out of his click legituner, "Mr. Wonderful," and the ticket buyers should go for it if they don't have the original cast album.

Connie Francis: "Forgetting"-"Send For My Baby" (MGM). Teenage thrush Connie Francis is tied up again with NBC-TV's "Modern Romances" soaper for a push on "Forgetting." It's a better than average ballad offering which she sings with an emotional lilt. The tele exposure should help it along. She switches to an effective blues shouting mood for a big workover of "Send For My Baby."

Richard Hayes: "My Girl and His Girl"-"Blue Bolero" (ABC-Paramount). Richard Hayes packs a lot of punch on this coupling. With "My Girl and His Girl" he gets the opportunity to show off his balladeering style to advantage. On "Blue Bolero," he displays exciting beat with lotsa color and flavor. It's a tossup as to whcih side will win the deejay nod.

Leo Souris: "La Chnouf"-"The Little Lost Dog" (Decca). This is Leo Souris' first try at the U.S. market. He bows via Decca's overseas tie with Deutsche Grammaphon. Coupling gives him a solid sendoff and he should pick up plenty of fans on this side of the ocean. Both are instrumental delights with an ear-arresting quality. "La Chnouf" is in the foxtrot groove while "The Little Lost Dog" is styled along waltz lines. Incidentally, Eddie Barclay, too, has a standout instrumental workover of "La Chnouf" on the Mercury label.

Steve Clayton: "Straight From The Shoulder"-"The Man With Seven Wives" (Jubilee). Steve Clayton, who recorded previously as Pat Terry, has a neat ballad to toy with in "Straight From The Shoulder." His wax savvy gets it across. "The Man With Seven Wives" has a cute lyric tag which will help it get some deejay exposure.

Joe Leahy Orch: "Dutch Treat"-"To Love You" (RKO-Unique). There's an infectious lilt to "Dutch Treat" which will appeal to the platter spinners and the jukebox trade. Joe Leahy takes it for a bright instrumental ride. Mood is more somber on the flip, "To Love You," but it's effective, nevertheless. Orch and chorus give it a nice whirl. Tune is from the upcoming Paramount pic, "The Proud and the Profane."

Cap Adds R&R'ers

Hollywood, May 15.

Two new male vocalists in the rock 'n' roll idiom have been signed by Capitol. One is Gene Vincent, a 20-year-old Norfolk, Va., entertainer. Initial platter, "Woman Love" b/w "Be Bop A Lula," is being rushed by the label which is billing him as Gene Vincent and his Blue Caps, latter being a quartet.

Other vocalist signed is Ray Stanley, a tunesmith turned singer, whose style is described as a cross between hillbilly and rock 'n' roll.

Album Reviews

Another Cook's tour on wax is coming from Capitol Records via its Electric & Musical Industries (EMI) tie. Label has packaged for U. S. release a flock of albums recorded abroad that are colorful and flavorsome. In the recent batch: "Sunday In Spain," exciting pasodobles grooved by the Banda Municipal de Madrid. Barnaby Conrad's notes adds to the bullring atmosphere. "Santiago," a lively sampling of modern Chilean folk music; "Paris Revisited," offbeat Gallic items warbled by Yvette Giraud and Les Quartre de Paris; "Neapolitan Songs," romantic Italian ballads vigorously delivered by tenor Sergio Bruni with a lush orch backing by Giuseppe Amapeta; "Germany Today," blind jazz singer Wolfgang Sauer in some vivid ballad readings; "In London In Love," tasty instrumental workover of 12 U.S. standards by Norrie Paramor's orch.

George Kirby-Jackie Mabley-Apollo Band of the Year: "A Night At The Apollo" (Vanguard). This set is an effervescent and noisy reproduction of an evening at the Apollo, Harlem (N.Y.) vaudery. Taped at the theatre, album has some acoustical flaws but it does retain the spirit of life at the Apollo for those who care. George Kirby works over his impression routine, Jackie Mabley comes through with some patter yocks and the band (Count Basie) backs with a beat. Also on the wax bill are Coles & Atkins, the Keynoters and some amateurs.

Gogi Grant: "Suddenly There's" (Era). Pop singer Gogi Grant, who clicked in the wax field with "Suddenly There's A Valley," has a strong enough technique to come through as a standard singer. She's got warmth and an authoritative pop styling that gives a special lilt to the newies and oldies she tackles in this set. Buddy Bregman's arranging and orch backing are plusses.

Frankie Laine & The Four Lads: (Columbia). Vocal combo and Laine have teamed up for a religioso outing that makes for exciting listening. In a repertoire of shout songs, gospels and spirituals, Laine and the Lads hit the oldies with a fresh approach.

Among the notable jazz entries: Mary Lou Williams does some fancy keyboard doodling on "Messin' 'Round In Montmartre" (Storyville) . . . Sidney Bechet takes off on some solid jazz licks with the aid of Bunk Johnson and Sidney De Paris on "Jazz Classics" (Blue Note) . . . Accordionist Mat Mathews has some intersting jazz conceptions on a Brunswick set as well as a Dawn package, in which he's backed by an all-star combo. . . . Stan Kenton's vivid musical stylings get a fine showcasing on "Kenton in Hi-Fi" (Capitol).

MGM's Name Set on 'Johnny Johnson' Continues Weill's Posthumous Kick

The romance between MGM Records and the late German composer Kurt Weill is continuing. The diskery, which has already grooved six LP albums of Weill's music, is now prepping a wax reproduction of "Johnny Johnson," a musical play penned by Weill and Paul Green in 1936. Show, incidentally, was Weill's first American venture.

Album, which is being produced by Ed Cole, MGM's classical topper, will use Weill's original arrangements and will feature an all-star cast headed by Burgess Meredith, Lotte Lenya (Weill's widow), Scott Merrill, Hiram Sherman and Bob Shavers. Samuel Matlowsky will conduct the orch.

A new production of "Johnny Johnson" is being prepped for off-Broadway this fall by Stella Adler. A different cast will be used.

The Weill revival picked up steam late last year with the click of his "The Threepenny Opera" at the Theatre de Lys in New York's Greenwich Village and the subsequent pop disclick and Hit Parade slotting of "Moritat," the theme from "Threepenny Opera." MGM put out the original cast album on that show.

'Bridey' Beethoven

Any idea that rock 'n' roll is not a beneficial cultural influence on kids can now be dismissed. The r&r boys are now going on a classical kick with the first two titles in this cycle being "Tell Tchaikowsky The News" and "Roll Over, Beethoven."

Both were written and recorded by Chuck Berry, composer of the recent hit, "Maybelline."

Satchmo-Brubeck Combo For New York's Lewisohn

Louis Armstrong and Dave Brubeck will make their first joint concert appearance at New York's Lewisohn Stadium July 14. Armstrong will appear with his "All Stars" (six sidemen and a vocalist) while Brubeck will head up his quartet.

Stadium's summer season tees off June 18 and will run through July 28.

Johnny Long's Ditto Burn At Somethin' Smith For 'Too Many Copycat Epics'

The question of ethics involved in copying an arrangement and even special lyrics from another artist is again to the fore with bandleader Johnny Long's burn at Somethin' Smith. Long charges Smith, who records for Epic, with carboning such hit disks as "It's A Sin To Tell A Lie" last year and just recently, "In a Shanty In Old Shanty Town."

Long is particularly incensed because Smith, he says, also copped the special added lyrics written by the bandleader's wife, who writes under the name of Patricia Waters, to "It's A Sin To Tell A Lie" and "Shanty," although in the latter tune Smith varied the lyrics somewhat. Johnny O'Connor, Long's manager, contends that it's a substantial facsimile. Both numbers were big hits for Long when he recorded for Decca several years ago. At present, Long cuts for Coral.

The added lyrics can't be copyrighted specifically since they become the property of the tune's original copyright owner. "Lie" is a Bregman-Vocco & Conn tune, while "Shantytown" is published by the Warner Bros. music group.

"Wish I Had Thought of 'R'n'R Waltz'": Berlin Amid 68th Birthday Galas

New Label, Same Voice

Leona Anderson, who has made a career out of singing offbeat songs offkey, has been signed by Unique Records. She formerly sliced for the now-defunct Horrible Records.

Her first album for Unique will be "The Worst of Leona Anderson."

Shep Fields, Others Saved In Texas Auto Wreck

Houston, May 15.

Orch leader Shep Fields was saved from possible death last week (7) when safety straps around his body prevented him from being tossed out of the car in which he was riding when it was wrecked. Fields and two of the members of his Rippling Rhythm orch skidded off highway 75, near Buffalo, Tex., Monday (7).

Trumpeter Bob Podell was driving Fields' car at the time of the mishap. The bespectacled leader was asleep in the back seat.

Irving Berlin's 68th birthday was celebrated in a radio-tv parlay this last week. The tunesmith guested on Johnny Andrews' WRCA Radio (N. Y.) show Friday (11), the Dorsey Bros. saluted him on their CBS-TV "Stage Show" Saturday (12) and he demonstrated his "trick transposing" piano in two separate five-minute segments on NBC's "Monitor" Saturday and Sunday. (Another ranking American tunesmith, George Gershwin, also came up for a tv salute Saturday on Max Liebman's NBC-TV specola.)

It was in the Andrews session, however, that Berlin got a chance to sound off on the music business and his career. The patter byplay was informative and hit a high-point when Andrews pinned the composer on his thoughts on rock 'n' roll. After a hesitant "I don't know" start, Berlin expanded with: "In my time I've seen ragtime—and a lot of the junk died with 'Alexander's Ragtime Band' remembered—jazz, with only Gershwin surviving, and swing." He added, "Music is music and if it's good it will last."

Of the current pops, Berlin cited "Rock and Roll Waltz" for special kudos. "I wish I had thought of it," he said. He then added, "I hope the publisher knows I'm giving him this plug." (Since the show was on tape, the publishing firm, Sheldon Music, had been tipped in advance, and Goldie Goldmark, Sheldon's general man-

Jerry Lewis, Verve Maestro

Hollywood, May 15.

Jerry Lewis, whose last waxing was for Capitol Records about 18 months ago, has signed a pact with Verve Records prexy Norman Granz and Buddy Bregman, company's artists & repertoire man. Deal, which gives the comedian a percentage on sales, calls for him to conduct a 45-piece orch in albums of standards, to narrate some platters, and for other types of packages. It's a one-year ticket with options for four more.

Lewis recalled that in 1948 he pitched Cap on the idea of him leading a 45-piece orch and said, "they answered the idea of a comedian leading such an orchestra was ridiculous, and turned it down." Yet in 1952 Cap did just that with Jackie Gleason, Lewis added. He said, too, when he first broached Cap on the idea he offered to pay the costs involved.

Lewis said he will begin recording for the company in two or three weeks. Bregman said Lewis will also do vocals on some of the company platters.

RCA's convention for its distributors has been set for June 2-4 at the Eden Roc Hotel in Miami Beach. Some 2,000 distrib execs and salesmen from the RCA network of 60 distribs will represent all RCA products, from airconditioners to disks.

RCA v.p. Manie Sacks and show producer George Hale are heading for Miami Beach at the end of this month to set up the convention entertainment. It's expected that a flock of Victor disk artists will perform, including Dinah Shore, who will then head out for her date at the Riviera in Las Vegas June 6.

Lombardo Into 1-Nighters After Roosevelt Stand

Guy Lombardo winds up his perennial stand at the Roosevelt Hotel, N. Y., this year on May 29 when he will go into a series of one-nighters for two weeks. Following that, Lombardo will start rehearsals for the "Showboat" production which opens at the Jones Beach Marine Theatre June 21. Lombardo's regular orch will be supplemented by 35 other musicians for the show, which has Paul Hartman and Helena Bliss in the star roles.

Eddie Lane orch will go into the Roosevelt Grill for the summer, with Lombardo due to take over again at the same stand come the fall.

In addition to the spoken word, the new label will have a "Distinguished Composers Series." Initial release in this collection will have Marc Blitzstein's music for the theatre.

Arthur Luce Klein, drama teacher and producer, is heading up Spoken Arts.

'MAYBE' DEFINITELY IN BIG 3 VIA SETTLEMENT

Winding up an action to determine the copyright ownership of the oldie, "Maybe," Robbins Music, of the Big Three Music combine, made a settlement with Frank Madden, one of the tune's writers, in N. Y. Federal Court last week under which it acquired the renewal rights to the tune. Robbins had originally bought the tune from Rialto Music in 1940, but Madden claimed he owned the renewal rights and hence disputed Robbins' right to publish the number.

Madden wrote "Maybe," originally known as "Maybe Dear," with Allan Flynn.

Razor's Etching, Gillette Style

Gillette Razors may now have to add "How are you fixed for disks?" to its add campaign repertoire. Gillette is tieing in with Columbia Records to peddle its Super Speed Razor for a Father's Day promotion next month.

The razor company will give away a seven-inch 33⅓ rpm disk with every Super Speed bought at $1. The disk, prepped by Col's transcription division, contains excerpts from the label's 12-inch LP album, "Great Moments in Sports." Disk includes tapings of the top athletes of our time.

To kickoff its razor-disk promotion, Gillette ordered close to 1,250,000 seven-inch platters from Col. Initial tv plug was aired on the Gillette-sponsored boxing bouts this Friday (18).

New Glenn Miller Orch (McKinley)

A new Glenn Miller orchestra will get underway next month. Mrs. Helen Miller, widow of the bandleader who died during World War II, and Ray McKinley have reformed the orch with the original Miller library. New tunes arranged in the Miller manner will be added to the book.

Band will be billed as "The Glenn Miller Orchestra under the direction and featuring Ray McKinley." McKinley, incidentally, picked up the baton for Miller's Air Force Band when the maestro was lost at sea. New orch will be made up of 18 sidemen.

The Willard Alexander office has already set a one-niter tour for the orch through August. First date is set for the U. of Maine, at Orono, June 8.

No record deal for the band has been set yet, but it's reported that RCA Victor has the inside track because of its previous affiliation with Miller.

Trudi to Cap

Thrush Trudi Richards will now record under the Capitol Records' banner. In the past few years Miss Richards has been put into the groove by Coral, Decca and Derby.

Since the fold of Derby last year, warbler has been cutting demo records for publishers.

Benny Goodman Pulls 8G In 2, But U. of Detroit Raps Him for 'Interludes'

Detroit, May 15.

Benny Goodman orch drew 8,500 dancers in two nights at the U. of Detroit Spring Carnival for a gross $8,000. But, he was roundly criticized in an editorial in the Varsity News, university publication.

The editorial said in part: "Benny Goodman, a man of tremendous ability and a great drawing power, was hired to play at this year's Carnival. When the people entered the dance area they were pleasantly greeted by the strains of Benny's 'licorice stick' floating above the heads of the crowd that had gathered around the bandstand.

"This, they thought, was fine. Here was Benny and his aggregation giving dancers a few minutes to rest while the band did a few instrumental gymnastics. The would-be dancers soon found that this 'interlude' was in reality the dance music that was to be offered for the rest of the evening. Then, at midnight, the name who had drawn such a big crowd suddenly disappeared. What the latercomer didn't know was that Goodman had not shown up at the dance until

AFM Huddles on Vegas Pact to Study 8% Wage Hike, 3-Hour Tuneup Pay

Las Vegas, May 15.

A special meeting of the general body of the AFM Local here today (Tues.) is expected to produce a settlement of the lengthy hassle between Vegas musicians and resort hotelmen over the windjammers' demand for a wage boost. Meeting will see the union's membership voting on the latest proposal by the hotelmen that would grant the musicians an 8% pay hike, three-hour rehearsal pay per show and a two-year contract.

Saturday (12), the general body voted down the proposal, 96 to 80, but because the rejection failed to get a two-thirds majority support it will have to be reballoted again today. The original bid, which was worked out in a meeting Thursday (10) between AFM rep Bob Calkins, Beldon Katleman, El Rancho Vegas owner, and Marty Hicks and Cliff Jones, Thunderbird execs, sought to give the musickers a 7½% raise, the rehearsal pay and a guarantee that Vegas hotels would employ no less than 70% resident musicians.

But Resort Hotel Assn. prexy Jack Entratter beat down the offer during Saturday's conference when he told the general body that he, for one, would be unable to guarantee the 70% employment because the restriction would hamper him in future show purchases. Immediate renegotiation saw the second proposal drafted, motioned and voted upon.

Double "A" sidemen, who make up the Vegas house orchs, have been adamant in a demand for a 20% wage boost, repeatedly thumbing down a 5% wage increase. On the other hand, the hotelmen have been equally adamant in their nay stand, going as far as to hold up

Hitchcock Asks Col To Rush Film Platter

Hollywood, May 15.

At the specific request of producer-director Alfred Hitchcock, Columbia Records is rushing a release of Doris Day's plattering of "Que Sera," from the film "The Man Who Knew Too Much."

Tune originally was to have been released a few weeks ago, but through an error at the Columbia plant it was sidestepped. It was to have been coupled with "We'll Love Again." Instead, plattery paired that with "Somebody Somewhere."

Capitol Digs 'Em Most; 'Phantom' New Poltergeist

There are a lot of ghosts on Capitol Records' roster. Release of a new disk by someone tagged The Phantom again points up Cap's penchant for hiding its talent under a nom-de-disk.

The hidden name bit began with the diskery's first release in 1941 when Billie Holiday in a cutting with the Paul Whiteman orch of "I Found A New Baby" and "The General Jumped at Dawn" was billed simply as Lady Day. A few years later Jo Stafford appeared under the guise of Carlotta B. Stump for the clicko waxing of "Tim-tayshun."

In recent years, Harry Stewart has been using such disk aliases as Yogi Yorgensen, Harry Kari and Klaus Hammerschmidt. And then there's Lou Busch, who records under his square handle and that of Joe (Fingers) Carr.

Cap, so far, is keeping the identity of The Phantom under wraps. Only clue is that the disk was cut in Mexico.

Mum On 'Who He?'

Hollywood, May 15.

Capitol's publicity department has a problem on its hands in publicizing the newest artist acquired through the label's International Program tieup with EMI affiliates around the world. He's a Mexican pianist known only as "The Phantom"—and he seems to be just that.

Cap artists & repertoire exec Dave Dexter picked up tapes of The Phantom in Mexico and brought them to the U.S. for release. Mexican recording execs insist, however, that the identity of the pianist is unknown, that they have no pictures of him and can't provide any information. At first, Coast label's accounting department raised a howl, demanding, "How can you pay royalties to a Phantom?" Dexter eased their worries by informing them that the across-the-border deal provides only that payments go to the Mexican diskery, which makes its own ararngements with The Phantom. But he still hasn't been able to placate the publicity department.

ager wired Berlin a "thank you" acknowledgment after the broadcast.)

On the future of the music biz, Berlin said that it will be basically the same with fads such as the country is experiencing now. "Good music will always come out on top," he said, "and 20 years from now we'll be laughing at most of the rock 'n' roll, but some of it will last."

Speaking of songwriting, Berlin said that it comes easy now. He said that he's developed through three stages, 1) working at the piano, 2) working simultaneously with words and music, 3) working on ideas. He's currently busy on the score for "Sentimental Guy," a musicomedy about the almost legendary Wilson Mizner, wit and raconteur.

In an off-the-uff rundown of the 10 favorite songs of his own, Berlin named "Alexander's Ragtime Band," "A Pretty Girl Is Like a Melody," "Always," "Easter Parade," "Blue Skies," "Oh, How I Hate To Get Up in the Morning," "How Deep Is the Ocean?", "God Bless America," "The Girl That I Marry" and "All Alone."

On the Dorsey Bros. stanza Berlin was forced to share his birthday cake with several other cleffers. Although they were all top-notch, it turned out to be a confusing mishmash since the show was billed as a "Salute To Irving Berlin." The ringers were brought in by the guest artists primarily to plug their current waxings. For instance, host Dick Haymes sang "Come Rain or Come Shine" (Johnny Mercer-Harold Arlen) and Roberta Sherwood chirped "Lazy River" (Hoagy Carmichael-Sidney Arodin). Even the Colgate U. Glee Club, with no disks to promote, strayed from the Berlin format with "Great Day" (Vincent Youmans-William Rose-Edward Eliscu) and "September Song" (Kurt Weill-Maxwell Anderson).

The rest, however, was pure Berlin, and good, too. The Dorseys did a medley of "Blue Skies," "Remember" and "Alexander's Ragtime Band," Miss Sherwood belted "All Alone" and "Always" in fine style and Haymes had a breezy workover of "Isn't This A Lovely Day?"

The "Monitor" segment Sunday showcased Berlin doodling on his keyboard and answering a couple of queries. When asked for a songwriting formula, he replied, "First, have the talent to work with. Then it's a question of getting the right opportunity." Gros.

In London Too

London, May 15.

A special birthday tribute to Irving Berlin, who was 68 last Friday (11), is to be featured on BBC radio next Friday (18). The program, scripted by John Watt and Brian Rust, will cover 50 years of Berlin in the songwriting world.

Among the disks to be aired will be "That Mesmerising Mendelssohn Tune," the first song by Berlin ever recorded in 1910. The record was picked up recently in a junkshop.

AFM Conclave

leadership has already indicated that it favored Petrillo's stand.

A total of 354 AFM locals located in 24 states and Alaska have already officially pledged support to Petrillo in opposing Local 47. These locals, many of them from small towns, are the chief recipients of the Trust Fund benefits, and hence are the bulwark of Petrillo in the union. The Fund, supported by royalty payments from the disk and vidfilm industries, underwrites free concerts in parks, hospitals, etc., and thus provides employment for musicians. The resolutions of the small locals in Petrillo's behalf point out that it's the AFM members who create the mechanized music who are, in the main, opposed to the Fund "for their own selfish gain."

The setup of the convention delegates guarantees Petrillo's continued dominance. New York's convention delegation of three, representing some 30,000 musicians, has the same number of convention votes as a local representing 1,000 members. Hence, even if there were a coalition of big city locals (of which there is not the faintest sign this year), the weighted vote in favor of the small locals would make it impossible to unseat Petrillo.

Another peculiarity of the AFM setup is that neither the New York nor Hollywood local, the two largest in the country, is represented on the union's international exec board. New York once had an exec board rep, but not in the last couple of years.

Benny Goodman

10 p.m., an hour after he was scheduled to appear.

"Two hours each night for $6,000. Not a bad way to make a living. The dance committee did its part in bringing a top name to play at the Carnival. They cannot be blamed if the one that they hire refuses to cooperate.

"We are quite certain, however, that Goodman will not be asked again to play for a U-D function."

BG In Pottstown

The Benny Goodman orch walked off with a $5,800 take for a one night gig at the Sunnybrook Ballroom, Pottsdown, Pa., last Saturday (12). Terpery pulled in close to $12,000 for the BG stand.

Orch was booked in on a $3,500 guarantee and added $2,300 on the percentage deal. The BG tootlers swing into Ohio U., Athens, next Saturday (19) and the following night are set for a date at the Elms Ballroom, Idora Park, Youngstown, O.

Pubs Sue 'Yankees' For 'Ball Game' Interpolation Previously Heaved Out

The use of "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," in the legituner click, "Damn Yankees," has stirred up a legal fuss by Jerry Vogel Music and Broadway Music against the show's producers. Vogel and Broadway, co-owners of the renewal rights to "Ball Game," filed an infringement suit in N. Y. Federal Court last week naming Frederick Brisson, Harold Prince, Robert E. Griffith and Albert B. Taylor as defendants.

Suit asked for an injunction, damages sustained and an accounting of profits for alleged infringement of their copyright by giving public performance for profit in the show. A few bars of the tune were used in "Yankees," for which an original score was written by Dick Adler and the late Jerry Ross.

According to the Edward Colton office, attorney for the producers, the "Ball Game" insertion was taken out a few months ago when Vogel and Broadway first expressed objection to its use. The attorney is denying any legal liability.

Brit. Decca Pulls A 'Rock' on Lonnie, So Mercury Rises

British Decca apparently doesn't know a good thing when it has it. Diskery had first crack at Lonnie Donegan, Irish hillbilly who scored in the U. S. with "Rock Island Line" on its affiliate London label, but didn't bother to wrap him up exclusively and he was grabbed by Nixa, another British outfit.

Donegan will now be released in the U. S. under the Mercury banner because of its tieup with Nixa. First coupling on the Merc label is "Lost John" and "Slewfoot."

Click of "Rock Island Line" here is bringing Donegan to the U. S. for the first time. He arrives from England today (Wed.) for a shot on Perry Como's NBC-TV show Saturday (19) and a guest stint on Bill Randle's tv-er out of Cleveland the following night. He's also set to open at Brooklyn's Town & Country nitery May 22. He's managed in the U. S. by Mannie Greenfield and booked through the William Morris office. His British reps are Lynn Dutton and Dennis Preston.

Mills, Col Picts. Music Both Touche in Duel On 'Moonglow'-'Picnic'

Mills Music and Columbia Pictures Music are riding tandem with separate copyrights on a pop single disclick. Unusual occurrence came about via use of the Mills' oldie "Moonglow" and the insertion of a title theme in the Columbia film, "Picnic." Col Music publishes the theme, which was cleffed by George Dunning.

Morris Stoloff (Decca) and George Cates (Coral) recorded both tunes the way they're done in the pic and both platters are now riding the bestseller lists. The numbers made NBC-TV's "Hit Parade" for the first time last week, but were presented as a single offering under the overall "Moonglow-Picnic" tag. On the following Saturday (12), tunes were split and given a five and six slotting.

Both publishers are claiming strong separate sheet sales (there's no combined copy version). The "Picnic" theme was recently given a lyric by Steve Allen and the McGuire Sisters cut it without "Moonglow" for Coral. "Moonglow" was cleffed in 1934 by Will Hudson, Eddie DeLange and Irving Mills. Columbia Pictures Music is an affiliate of Shapiro-Bernstein.

Fast Plugs & Sudden Death

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Most recent trend in the music biz is the shortening of time between a disk release and the hit-flop answer, now a matter of three or four weeks. Many question the wisdom of this form of merchandising of a commodity which all experts agree must be strongly exposed, and for a length of time, before buyers can be expected to react. The 50-per-week release of new sides, since the indie labels have demonstrated equal potency to the majors (that's approximately 2,500 per year, with another 1,000 accounted for by the sometime schedules of the once-in-awhile diskeries), brings into focus the fact that only about 50 etchings a year rack up the real hit-money, although many others also come out ahead or manage to break even.

The current rate of production of demos of new songs by both BMI and ASCAP writers, young and old, in New York alone is close to 100 per day, accounting for some 35,000 tunes a year offered to record companies. Putting aside all claims of favoritism, the a&r man who has to render snap judgment on the vast flood of new material must by the nature of things be tossing off a series of daily guesses comparable to who will win the daily double.

The fact that less than 2% of the professionally prepared masters which are processed for public exposure each year result in the big moola brings the situation down to a vast waste of meritorious material. No answer is apparent inasmuch as no a&r man wants to cut down his releases and hence his law-of-averages chance of producing a smash. The real shame is the short, hit-or-miss exposure this condition brings about, completely wasteful of valuable tunes, talent and wax.

Not long ago a sixmonth campaign on a song was no oddity, then a six-week drive became the vogue, now an exploiter, whether originating from the payroll of the record company, the artist, or the publisher, can't get much excitement from any major disk jockey if the record hasn't shown, with one or two playings, that magic and unexplainable enthusiasm from the listeners who call and write and dash to the nearest record store. Hence, the group most likely to show an immediate reaction—the highschool kids with their 89c ready to spend—has become the bellweather of the biz and the group to shoot at for quick sales-appeal.

This is of course one-sided. The emotional reaction of a bunch of kids is vastly different from the considered judgment of millions of better-educated adults, also with 89c to spend. Add to this the hinterland trend of pushing only the No. 1 song on the Hit Parade, shrugging off the other six that make the Lucky Strike tabulation, and the boom-bust psychology is greatly strengthened.

The bigtime music men all agree that what made their present strong catalogs was the firm and lasting belief they had in the value of their songs, and they never let up or let go in promoting them. Today, with a release that doesn't show up pronto, the trend is to forget the song and go on to the next release.

Nobody can say that this new method of merchandising has produced a better overall quality of songs, hence the firms with the solid standards seem more and more secure as against the some 800 new pubberies which are playing for the big No. 1 hit and that alone. While the situation can rightfully be termed a view-with-alarm condition there seems to be nobody who, in fairness, can be accused of creating this winner-take-all psychology. It smacks of the hectic and thoughtless accumulation of paper profits in the late '20s when quality was forgotten and the quick buck was head man—an idol that turned out to be a headless horseman.

negotiations for future shows and even threatening to curtail the town's entertainment policy completely.

Chain Reaction

Were the 20% granted, it would see the musicians' base stipends going up from $125 to $150. One hotel exec explained that it isn't the $25 scale hike that is so important, rather it's the way other unions might react if the AFM'ers were granted a wage representing a 20% boost. Recently, the hotels upped culinary and teamster unioneers 5%. The hotels, then, fear that a 20% increase to the musicians would see the other unions seeking similar demands which could lead to an inundation of the hotels by new contract demands.

The point has been raised by several orch leaders that their men are presently receiving salaries well above scale, some tooters with longevity considerations getting as high as $145. With the threat from hotels of no shows—no jobs—those musicians have indicated they'll go along with the new boost just to settle the dispute.

Notices had been passed out to house orchs at the Riviera, Sahara, El Rancho and Thunderbird. Latter two hotels—who are not members of the Hotel Assn.—were granted a 60 day cooling off period because the new contract demand had been delivered by the AFM to the association, while no formal notification of the negotiation had been made to the nonmember pair of resorts. Riviera withdrew notices and reinstated its house orch for 30 days, until June 3, as did the Sahara. All four notices were due to have become effective between May 7 and 10.

Hotels tried to force another wedge, the threat of firing local musickers and hiring travelers. But James C. Petrillo advised the Vegas local to continue its negotiations with the assurance that if the balance of employed musicians favored the out-of-towners, he would order all musicians off of the bandstands.

Inside Stuff—Music

Referee's report recommending expulsion for leaders of the Los Angeles AFM Local 47 revolt apparently won't produce any quiet atmosphere within the group. Plans already are being made for a stormy membership meeting May 28 at which time delegates to the convention will be instructed. Delegates, elected two years ago, are John te Groen and Maury Paul, removed as prexy and veepee of the local, respectively, at successive membership meetings, and Phil Fischer, international studio rep.

Also shaping up is a major election battle if the AFM follows through on the referee's report recommending expulsion of Local veepee Cecil F. Read, insurgent leader, and 10 of his followers. Read and seven of the others are Local 47 board members. If they are expelled, it's expected the insurgents will present an entire slate of candidates for election to the board to succeed them.

Another case of inter-diskery cooperation on artists is Shorty Long, an RCA Victor pactee featured in the Frank Loesser musical, "The Most Happy Fella," who was okayed to appear in the Columbia Records' original cast album. Not only did Victor agree to Long's performance for Col, but the diskery also consented not to record Long on the tunes which he does in the show, "Standing on the Corner" and "Big D."

Perhaps the standout example of diskery non-cooperation involved Ethel Merman in the "Call Me Madam" show. RCA Victor had the cast album rights, but Decca had Miss Merman, so Victor's "cast" album was done without the star.

Hudson Music Corp. of N. Y. wants the U. S. District Court in Los Angeles to take a look-see at a hillbilly tune, "Looking Back to See," published in 1954, in a copyright infringement suit filed in L. A. against 16 defendants. Among those named were Decca, RCA Victor and MGM Records, as well as Broadcast Music Inc. and Dandelion Music, local publishers. Through attorney Arthur Katz, Hudson is asking an injunction prohibiting further use of the tune by the defendants and an accounting of profits. Additionally Hudson is seeking $50,000 damages for breach of confidence and unfair competition.

The House of Handy, publishing firm of W. C. Handy, the 82-year-old writer of "St. Louis Blues" and other classics, has compiled an eight-page brochure consisting of photostatic reprints of press tributes to the "father of the blues." Included in the clippings is Jim Walsh's story on the alltime 10 top pops in the Golden Jubilee edition of VARIETY, published Jan. 4 of this year. Walsh said that "'St. Louis Blues' probably shares with 'Stardust' the distinction of being one of the most recorded tunes of the past generation or so."

Rock 'n' roll may sell records but it doesn't sell washing machines. White goods sponsors are finding that the r&b platter programs aren't hitting the desired buying market. They've been beefing to station managers that the rock 'n' roll audience is made up primarily of teenagers and not the adult segment that purchases the heavy goods. In line with this, a Detroit disk jockey was bounced recently because of his limited r&b appeal.

It's a situation where high ratings add up to low buying.

Settlement of the Hill & Range suit against Bosworth Ltd., British publishing firm, over "The Happy Wanderer" doesn't affect Sam Fox Music's U. S. ownership to the tune. Fox acquired the U. S. rights from Bosworth last year and H&R brought suit against the British firm claiming that it had made a previous firm deal. Bosworth settled for the payment of attorneys' fees to H&R in New York county clerk's office and not for the $105,980 judgment, as erratumed.

Decca Records has made a tie-in with the New York Convention & Visitors Bureau to plug its new album, "Holiday in New York." In conjunction with the release to the disk jockeys, Decca has enclosed a recorded interview with Mayor Robert F. Wagner with a suggested script for deejay use. The plugs are designed to give the forthcoming "Summer Festival" in Gotham a boost.

Payola comes high, especially when a motion picture company wants a disk tieup. A film studio recently shelled out $12,500 to get a plug tune from an upcoming pic cut by a top name combo. Loot was divvied up between the combo, the manager and the diskery artists & repertoire chief. On the studio's ledger, it's all chalked up to advertising.

Songstress Wynne Miller, niece of the late bandleader Glenn Miller, is currently making a bid in show business under the management of Johnny O'Connor. She's a mezzo-soprano.

IN ROCK 'N' ROLL IT'S RCA 2 TO 1

RCA Victor apparently is playing footsie with rock 'n' roll. Of the dozen rock 'n' roll-titled songs released in recent weeks, Victor led the field with eight. They are "Rock 'n' Roll Express" (Vaughn Monroe), "Honolulu Rock 'n' Roll" (Eartha Kitt), "Tennessee Rock 'n' Roll" (Billy Eckstine), "Rock 'n' Roll Ruby" (Dave Burton), "Rock 'n' Roll Rhapsody" (Joe Reisman), "Rock Hearted Mama" (Dick Williams), "Cuban Rock" (Perez Prado) and the clicko "Rock 'n' Roll Waltz" (Kay Starr).

In a similarly titled groover is Joe Ward's "Rock 'n' Roll Merry Go-Round," on King; Ink Spots' "Rock 'n Roll Rag," on Grand Award; Steve Gibson's "Rock 'n' Roll Stomp," on ABC-Paramount, and Gloria Wood's "The Rock and The Roll," on Diamond.

THE ROSY LOOK OF THE ROAD

Vegas' Lady Luck Gambling Lounges As Payoff Vs. Names; Fairway, Too

The Lady Luck Hotel, Las Vegas, which is expected to preem in July, will eschew name talent in favor of a cocktail lounge policy exclusively. A large dining room will be devoted to banquet and convention biz. By this means, the inn hopes to be able to get away from entering the name talent sweepstakes with the other Strip hotels.

Lady Luck is one of the three hotels currently under construction, and is expected to be the first of them to open for business. Other inns are the Tropicana, which isn't likely to spring before July, and the Stardust, on which work is proceeding slowly.

In addition, Lady Luck is building an 18-hole golf course, the second on the Strip. Other fairway is adjacent to the Desert Inn.

Of late, hotels have gotten around to the belief that the lounge is becoming an increasingly important factor in luring trade. Potency of lounge entertainment is responsible for a lot of added business, and sometimes the ops indicate that cocktail entertainment means even more to the inn than the headliners in the main nitery rooms.

Importance of the lounge first made itself evident when Louis Prima went into the Sahara a couple of years ago. Since then, many bandleaders have pared down their organizations for a try at the casino foyers.

Dean Martin & Jerry Lewis have been signed for the Copacabana, N. Y., for two weeks starting July 12. The comedy duo have worked this spot previously during the summer and have done SRO biz.

British Circus to Moscow

London, May 15.

A British circus is being invited to Moscow this summer under a reciprocity deal. The Moscow circus, which has been touring Europe, opens here next Monday (21) for a three-week run.

Clem Butson, of the Tom Arnold Organization, is now lining up the acts for the British company to tour the Soviet Union.

Chi Inns Push Posh Cafe Yen

Chicago hotels are in for a reactivation of their nitery bookings next season.

Lee Schoenbrunn, managing director of the Drake, wants to pattern the revitalized Camillia House, a once distinguished class boite, after the St. Regis', Maisonette Room in New York, and in fact shuttle its personalities like Julie Wilson, Connie Moore, Monique van Vooren, Fernanda Montel, et al., between both key cities.

Ernest Byfield Jr., whose ad agency handles the Sheraton Hotels, is in the anomalous position of hypoing the Sheraton-Blackstone into a competitive situation with the Hotel Ambassador East's Pump Room, a landmark pioneered by his late father.

Other Chi hotels have similar plans for the new season.

SKYSCRAPER COIN IN SMALL TOWNS

By JOE COHEN

Showmen are finding that the money for big shows is coming from the comparatively smaller towns. This is proving true in many cases—not only on the basis of per capita population but in actual takes.

Entrepreneurs have compiled a dossier of cities in which dates are a generally good bet. List includes such outposts as Raleigh and Winston-Salem, N. C.; Lafayette, La.; Birmingham; Rochester and Syracuse, N. Y., and a few others that arent' being readily divulged by the producers.

Of course, the secret lists of hot towns are constantly subject to revision because of conditions that arise from time to time. Until a few years ago, for example, Milwaukee was considered one of the hottest show towns in the U. S. Then, showmen complain, they had to go and get a major league ballclub and the town went so baseball crazy that amusement became a secondary consideration. As a matter of fact, the big shows that generally cleaned up in that area have found the pickings very lean of late. A city like Detroit or most towns in the Michigan area are good only when the auto industry is at full swing. At the present time, because of layoffs at the auto works, Detroit is on the "must shun" list for most displays.

A good town generally is Pittsburgh, which has a wide range of industry. Another burg that has been rewarding the shows is Birmingham, when the steel and coal industry is in high gear. Mont-

AGVA Day-&-Dating Ringling in Hub; Yank Beatty's Coast Acts in 15G Rap

Boston, May 15.

The American Guild of Variety Artists made good its challenge to John Ringling North on bringing in another circus to the Hub to play in opposition to Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey if North refused to ink contracts. The union brought in the Frank Wirth Circus at the Arena opening yesterday (Mon.). Ringling Bros. opens today (Tues.) at the Boston Garden.

Ringling, in for six days in the 13,909-seat Garden, faces its first opposition in Boston for the date. AGVA opened with Wirth unit circus a day before Ringling came in, is admitting all children under 12 free when accompanied by a parent and scaled all seats at $1.50, tax included, in the 7,200-seat Arena.

Billed as the "AGVA Variety Circus," under sponsorship of that union and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, the opposition circus looks to cut the standard Ringling gross for the Garden stand. Standard gross for the Ringling show in Boston Garden is $250,000 for six days. Last year, it did slightly over this figure due to extra matinees.

Profits to Mayor's Fund

All profits from the AGVA circus will go to Mayor John B. Hynes' Charity Fund, Smiley Hart, AGVA local rep, said. He said AGVA has already guaranteed $2,000 to charity.

A test of labor is seen with the two opposing circuses. All labor unions in the Hub are expected to extend the "no crossing of picket lines" to families, children, and friends and the moppet business of "I wanna see the circus"

Myron's M. B. Multiple

Miami Beach, May 15.

Longterm bookings for Miami Beach hotels have already started. First multiple deal for next season has been inked between the Sans Souci Hotel and Myron Cohen. Pact calls for three dates. First will start Dec. 21, second will be Feb. 1 or 8 and the third commences April 5 or 12.

The multiple term deals have been used by several hotels to insure a spread of headliners throughout the season. Cohen, among others, had three-part contract last season.

Borge 9G Busts Canton 1-Nite Peg

Canton, O., May 15.

Victor Borge set a boxoffice record for a one-nighter Wednesday (9) at 6,000-seat Memorial Auditorium, grossing $9,000 on a 75-25 split with sponsoring LCL Presentations. Advance mail order was biggest in house's five-year history.

Scale of $2.20 to $4.40 was one of highest of any attraction since civic house opened with "Holiday on Ice," still its top grosser, in October, 1951.

Record one-night gate though, for two performances, was Bill Haley & Comets with Joe Turner and the Platters, preceding Saturday. More than 7,500 paid $12,000 for 7:30 to 10 p. m. shows, also via LCL.

SUE CARSON

"The entertainment quotient for Mocambo patrons these nights, while Sue Carson is pixilating on stage, is about as close to 100 percent as any entertainer can get. If the Morrison clan plan doesn't mint a fortune from this booking, they should turn the entire place into an aviary."

LEO GUILD:
Hollywood Reporter

"SUE CARSON is one of the greatest singing comediennes it has been my pleasure to watch perform."

Producer BERT FRIEDLOB

"In my 35 years in show business I've seen all the top comediennes and to me SUE CARSON is tops."

Writer EDDIE WELCH

is expected to be counteracted by the "union" circus.

Situation poses a pretty problem for the new legit pressagents, members of the Assn. of Theatrical Press Agents and Managers union. With strong newspaper unions here — American Newspaper Guild, typo, press and carrier unions—situation could be strained.

For the Ringling circus, it marks their first challenge in the date. For years, no circus has dared play opposite Ringling. Smaller circuses used to skim in ahead of Ringling, but in recent years none have tried it.

Indications from Jack Bright, AGVA national administrative secretary, in to line up union strength and arrange the opposition circus, are that similar action will be taken here and there along the Ringling route. Ringling Bros. goes to Baltimore from Boston, then Washington.

As headliner for the AGVA circus Bright nabbed Captain Midnight for kiddie draw. (For other acts see accompanying story.) He said no money will go out of Boston and the one-ring show will serve as an alternative to the kids through union picket lines.

Acts Switch to KTLA

Hollywood, May 15.

Two unskedded performers stopped the Clyde Beatty Circus from going on in Burbank last week—American Guild of Variety Artists' reps James L. Kelly and Larry Rio. On orders from AGVA Coast topper Irvin P. Mazzei, all the union's acts were yanked because Beatty allegedly failed to meet some $15,000 in salary obligations.

According to Mazzei, the Beatty big top, which opened here March 23, has reached the end of the line until all AGVA members are paid in full, and a bond posted with the union against future payrolls. Duncan Renaldo, tv's "Cisco Kid," headlines Beatty's show.

Last Thursday (10), after the AGVA action, KTLA (TV) topper Klaus Landsberg booked six of the Beatty acts into his weekly "Circus" show about three hours before air time. Among those reporting to the KTLA tent show were head-swinger Tiny Gallagher; the Boginos Risley turn; The Webbers wire act, heel-swinger Jerry Soules and the Fredsons.

Alan Gale As A Roadshowman For B'nai B'rith

Show bizites, long used to attract funds into various charities and organizations, have been hitting a bigtime status in that area. Latest to be retained to build up treasuries for philanthropic purposes is Alan Gale, who will take a unit on the road to appear before B'nai B'rith meetings throughout the country starting in the fall.

So far, Gale is scheduled to appear in 80 cities, and hence do some dates out of the country. Schedule hasn't yet been made up, but is expected to be completed shortly after a canvass of the BB lodges throughout the country.

Gale for the last few years has been an entertainer-boniface having operated Celebrity Clubs in Miami Beach and New York and for the past winter was at the Versailles Hotel, Miami Beach.

Show biz troupes have long been an adjunct of various charity drives, but few are on a bigtime scale such as Gale's junket promises. For example, in the Catskill mountain belt in New York, there are occasional units that ply the area giving free shows at various hotels for the privilege of taking up collections. The revenue is generally heavy enough to support the touring mimes and at the same time return a few bob to the charity involved.

Circus' Freedman, Doll Fined $200 by ATPAM For Hiring Non-Unionists

Zac Freedman, general press-agent for the Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus, and Bill Doll, special New York press-rep for the show, were fined $200 each last week by the Assn. of Theatrical Press Agents & Managers. The official charge was "using non-union persons in union jurisdiction."

In Freedman's case, he was charged with using a non-ATPAM member as publicity contact for television and radio. Doll was accused of using non-union help for running errands and performing minor assignments.

It was also claimed that Freedman had failed to notify the union that his salary from the circus was several weeks in arrears, and that his assistants, Harry Davies and Lorella Val Mery, were also unpaid.

Post 'Unfair' Tag Vs. Circus in Hub

Jackie Bright said charges of unfair labor practices are being filed against Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus before the Massachusetts Labor Relations Committee. Bright is national administrative secretary of American Guild of Variety Artists.

John Ringling North, prexy of Ringling, charged that AGVA and Local 447 of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters do not represent a majority of the circus workers. "Both unions have refused to show that they represent the required majority of our employees," he said.

"It is our long standing policy to sit down and negotiate with any union representing our employees. But we will not hand over any of our employees to any union against the employees' wishes. To do so would not only be completely unfair to our circus employees but is contrary to recognized collective bargaining practices."

J. R. North Cuts Across Ed Sullivan on Acts, Raps AGVA Status as Circus Op

John Ringling North, as president of the Ringling Bros.-Barnum & Bailey Circus, which opened its Hub stand yesterday (Tues.) at the Boston Garden, served notice on Ed Sullivan's tv'er that the Fredonas were under contract to him. The emcee of the CBS vaudeo in his Monday (14) column in the N. Y. Daily News accented Ringling circus' off-business since its hassle with the American Guild of Variety Artists.

AGVA debuted a one-ring circus in the Boston Arena a day before the RB-B&B advent, with a reported light Monday matinee trade of about 100 and with children under 12 free. Ringling claimed a $82,000 advance for the Boston stand.

On the report of business in New York being less than last year's, Ringling says once every five years the calendar is such that the traditional Gotham debut of the circus only gets a fraction of the usual Easter business; this year only three days of Easter redounded to the b.o. benefit of the Big Top.

North issued a statement over the weekend inviting AGVA, if it is the bargaining agent for the majority of the circus performers, to so represent itself, but since the majority of the personnel is working in the Ringling show, obviously AGVA hasn't that right. Former U. S. cabinet aide Anna Rosenberg is handling North's labor relations. North says only nine AGVAns have been called out so far.

North adds that he was always under the impression that a labor guild or union was forfended from going into business for itself, in competition with established businesses; in short, AGVA's putting on a circus, in opposition to the Ringlings, is deemed by him to be a violation, or at least "most unusual."

North doesn't dispute the fact Emmett Kelly is only getting $160 as reported by Sullivan, but since Kelly knew what he was doing when he signed the contract—"and it has two more years to go"—he doesn't see how it concerns AGVA.

Arnold Eisen Joins Walker Agcy. in Fla.

Boston, May 15.

Harry Walker talent agency, booking vaude, concert and lecturers, set an expansion movement this week with the signing of Arnold Eisen, vet B&Q picture executive, to manage a new office on Lincoln Rd. in Miami, to open July 1.

Move is first in a series of expansions which will ultimately give the Boston agency offices in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago and Pittsburgh. Eisen resigned yesterday (Mon.) as general manager of B&Q Associates. He will head operations out of Miami as general manager of the Walker office. Larry Lapedis of New Jersey takes over the booking and buying part of Eisen's former position, and another man will be appointed later to carry on the balance of duties.

Eisen, in the film biz since 1928, has been affiliated with the Jake Fabian circuit, Warner Bros. Theatres, and most recently with B&Q, which operates 12 theatres in the Boston area.

AGVA, Teamsters Pour $50,000 Into Hub 'Circus War'

The American Guild of Variety Artists, together with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, are investing around $50,000 in their attempt in Boston to make the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus come to terms. Both unions are staging a combined circus at the Boston Arena, opening Monday (14), while the Ringling outfit opened yesterday (Tues.) at Boston Garden.

The unions are shelling out approximately $25,000 for a show, while a similar sum was allocated toward arena rental, program printing, laying the tanbark, setting up, etc. The unions will share in the concessions.

Frank Wirth, vet circus producer and agent, is producing the unions' show. If this venture comes out ahead financially, Jackie Bright, national administrative secretary of AGVA, says that the same tactic will be applied just ahead of many of the key stands that the Ringling circus will make. They'll rent highschool stadiums, ballparks or auditoriums wherever possible just to bedevil the Big Show.

AGVA and the teamsters union had picketed Madison Square Garden, N. Y., since the circus opened there April 4. Both unions are seeking a pact to unionize the circus. No profit in Boston is anticipated, but if a surplus does turn up, it will be left in Boston for the benefit of various children's charities.

Lined up for the AGVA circus are Capt. Midnight, Goetchi Bros., Cole's Elephants, Frank Cook, Florida Trio, Bob Emory, Tubby Reeves, Flying Valentines, Joan Valentine, Evelyn's Dogs and Ponies, Torelli's Liberty Horses, Craig's Chimps, as well as the acts and clowns that walked out of the Ringling circus at AGVA's behest. These include Billie Mahoney, Felix Adler, Otto Griebling, Amelia Adler, Preston Lambert, Fredonias, Lynn Brant, and Mation Seifert. Emmett Kelly, also out of the Ringling Circus, is on other dates.

RED NICHOLS BOWS FRISCO NAME FLING

San Francisco, May 15.

Red Nichols & his Five Pennies is the leadoff band in a revival of Sheraton-Palace Hotel's name band policy. Nichols combo was set for opening at the Palace Corner last night (Tues.), will play through June 23 and is offering special Dixieland sessions twice nightly.

The Corner is informal drink-and-dancing room in old hotel, acquired 18 months ago by Sheraton chain. New policy may presage big band return to Rose Room, hostelry's main supper room which in recent years has been used exclusively for special banquets.

Rap Cedar Pt., O., Sale; Set Quiz

Sandusky, O., May 15.

Last week announcement was made that Cedar Point, summer resort of the Great Lakes with one of the largest amusement areas and public beaches along Lake Erie, had been sold to an outside syndicate which proposed to convert it into a 1,000-home, Fort Lauderdale type development. This week, protests against the sale are being voiced by some of the beneficiaries of the trust which controls 51% of the voting stock of the resort corporation. George A. Roose of Toledo, head of the purchasing syndicate, had announced that his group had purchased control from the Central National Bank of Cleveland as trustee for about 80 beneficiaries. Price for the shares involved was said to be $287,960, but some of the heirs now claim that an offer of $1,000,000 had been turned down several years ago. As the local common pleas court must grant permission for the sale to be consummated, it looks like plenty of opposition at a hearing on June 9.

The purchasing syndicate sees no future in the resort business and plans to make the area entirely residential, creating further protests. Local merchants don't like the idea nor do some patrons of the resort. A suggestion that the State of Ohio purchase the site for a public park has been noted in a Cleveland newspaper.

Meanwhile, the present lessee of the 400-acre resort plans to open in a few weeks for the 1956 season, and as his lease has four more years to run, no immediate changes will be noted regardless of the court's decision. Last season, the ballroom featured name bands on weekends, but no bookings have been announced for this year.

Eddie Sherman From Agent to Mgt. and TV

Hollywood, May 15.

Eddie Sherman is bowing out of the agency field in favor of concentrating on personal management and tele packaging. His clients have been turned over to the William Morris Agency for booking. They include Abbott & Costello and Debra Paget.

Sherman was originally a theatre booker with offices in New York and Philadelphia before coming to the Coast. At one time he was the largest indie theatre talent buyer in the business and had owned several houses in association with Sam Stiefel.

While in the booking business, he took over the management of Abbott & Costello when they were in burlesque and piloted them to a top b.o. attraction several years later. He left the booking office in charge of Larry Golde in order to concentrate on Coast bookings.

The booking office closed several years ago and Golde retired to Florida.

I take this occasion to express my gratitude for the continuing confidence placed in me by my customers and friends in show business.

It's the Old Cafe Story—Soph's Gotta Take It Easy; Delays LQ Date

Late shows are again becoming a factor in the buying of names. Situation came into focus by the switch of Sophie Tucker from a Nov. 8 stand at the Latin Quarter, N. Y., to a new spot still to be decided upon. She's stepping out of that assignment and George Jessel has been signed instead to start Nov. 1 for three weeks.

Miss Tucker begged out of that date because of the large number of late shows that would be required around that time. In addition to working weekends for three times nightly, there would be a late show probably for Armistice Day and during the Thanksgiving holidays. Miss Tucker is begging out of ayem work as much as possible.

Of late, some performers are stipulating the number or 2 a.m. sessions to be done. Ordinarily, the cafes had been assuming that late shows would be performed on weekends and holidays. Bonifaces feel that it's the extra coin that falls on those days that makes it worthwhile to spend kingsize sums on top performers. Of late, some headliners have been rebelling at the extra performances, and frequently negotiations have been called off on that score.

The situation erupted some years ago when there was competition between the now defunct Riviera, Ft. Lee, N. J., which had a two-show policy nightly except on weekends, as against the Copacabana, N. Y., which worked on a three-shows-nightly basis. Riviera was able to lure several of the Copa names to its banner and as result, the Copa had to go along. Since then, the question of a third bill has been moot except during some weekends, but contracts have been so worded as to permit a late display when enough customers congregate.

Dallas, May 15.

Live rock 'n' roll music alternated with soundtrack rhythms in a 36-hour musical marathon which started Friday (11) at the Majestic Theatre here.

Johnny Carroll of Decca Records headed the stage battalion. Between times and throughout this week the film features "Rock Around the Clock" with Bill Haley & Comets.

Haley group is also scheduled to make a personal appearance in a rock 'n' roll show here tomorrow (Wed.).

Pittsburgh, May 15.

Last hope of saving the Gardens, the town's long-standing arena, disappeared last week when owners asked for razing bids and prepared to build a deluxe apartment house on the site. This means Pittsburgh will no longer be able to play any of the big ice shows, rodeos, top auditorium attractions, etc. Furthermore, John H. Harris, veteran Pitt showman and producer of "Ice Capades," who has held the lease on the Gardens, will have to transfer his franchise in the American Hockey League; indie collegiate basketball, Globe Trotters and barnstorming pro teams will have to look elsewhere for exposure, too.

Projected Auditorium, a civic project, will not only house top sports events, ice shows and Civic Light Opera Assn., which now runs its summer shows outdoors at Pitt Stadium, won't be completed before 1959 at the earliest.

Isle of Man, Eng., May 15.

The Manx (Isle of Man) Government has gone into show biz. It will guarantee, through the island's tourist board, the Palace Theatre company at Douglas against all loss for an extra three weeks' run of a revue starring comedians Albert Burdon and Harry Bailey.

Show will now open two weeks earlier, on June 16, and close a week later, thus making a total run of 13 instead of 10 weeks. Titled "Toast of the Town," it will also feature Penny Nichols, blonde chirper-comedienne, and the Musical Elliotts. Ronnie Aldrich and the Squadronaires are also pacted to play at the Palace for vacationers from July 2. Leading vaude names will be featured in Sunday night celebrity concerts.

Island, fave resort with British holidaymakers, gets Hollywood pix on early release. Isle of Man has its own history, parliament, laws, licensing hours and coin.

Alvin Burlesque, Mpls., In Clear But Ops Fined

Minneapolis, May 15.

City council license committee decided not to suspend or revoke the license of the Alvin, local burlesque theatre, because of its tangle with the law, although its offense made it liable for a severe penalty.

Edward Ross and Alfred Krikorian of Kansas City, the theatre's lessee and house manager, had been fined $100 each in municipal court for permitting an indecent show.

Previously three strippers had been fined similarly for indecent performances. All were among those arrested March 5 when the police morals squad raided the theatre. Immediately after the raid, performances were resumed and there has been no further police interference.

St. Paul Would Slice Cafe License Fee to $100 to Spur More Niteries

St. Paul, May 15.

In the belief that a low license fee would encourage more niteries and theatre bars to use live music and entertainment, an ordinance has been introduced in the city council to reduce the present tariff substantially.

Present license fee for such establishments employing live performers ranges from $250 to $500. The proposed ordinance, which has the St. Paul musicians union backing, would lower it to $100, regardless of the number of musicians or performers.

Commissioner Robert Peterson, the measure's sponsor, said that while the amount of the fees would be cut, there'd be so many more licenses issued that the city would not lose. Bistro owners would be encouraged to employ musicians and entertainers, thus providing more work, he predicted.

Edward Ringius, musicians' union business agent, declared a reduction in license fees not only would create more jobs for musicians and performers, but also "for cooks, waiters, busboys and a lot of others."

At present a $200 license allows its holder to provide instrumental music only. The $500 permit allows vocalists, other entertainers and dancing. The new single $100 type of license would cover everything.

Tornado Rocks Elvis

Minneapolis, May 14.

Rain and tornado warnings in southern Minnesota are ascribed as the reasons for the Elvis Presley egg-laying in the Twin Cities. Presley's show is estimated to have done a meagre $10,000 for a St. Paul matinee and an evening semester in Minneapolis on Sunday (13).

Local promoters are said to have guaranteed $15,000 to Presley for the two sessions.

$1,500,000 Rides On Disneyland

Hollywood, May 15.

To boost its capacity by better than 50%, an additional $1,500,000 is being poured into Disneyland Park for the construction of new rides. Program is expected to be completed in time for the summer trade.

Coin is being made available by project's three owners, in proportion to their original investments. Walt Disney Productions is doling out approximately two-thirds and AB-PT one-third, with Western Printing & Lithographing Co., in for between 5% and 8%, supplying balance.

Additions in rides will be made in four major attractions. These include a new mine ride, tagged Rainbow Cavern, and development of the Tom Sawyer Island, both in Frontierland. Another is Storybookland, and a Skyway Ride, joining Fantasyland and Tomorrowland by cable.

New devices will give park a theoretical capacity of more than 300,000 rides daily. Present theoretical figure is around 180,000.

Dutch Nitery Star to N.Y.

Amsterdam, May 8.

Giving the final performance with this season's "House, Garden And Kitchen" April 30, Dutch cabaretier Wim Sonneveld, producer and star of show, sailed May 4 for N. Y. He plans doing film and tv in U. S.

Before he left Holland he cut a record with eight songs, which was released this month. Sonneveld's song "Daar Is De Orgelman," last year's hit, will be sung in an English version, titled "Watching The World Go By," by Dean Martin for Capitol.

Saranac Lake

By Happy Benway

Saranac Lake, May 15.

Jack Norton, standard vaudeville and nitery entertainer and an oldtimer, is the first patient to occupy a room on the third floor of this institution where only cardiac cases will be admitted. He is now getting treatment from our heart specialist, Dr. D. M. Brumfiel.

Lindsay Mac Harrie, author and producer, hit the jackpot and drew a top clinic that upped him to the ambulatory gang with limited priviliges.

The Robert Louis Stevenson Society of Saranac Lake is planning to build a Treasure Island attraction on the land near the Stevenson Cottage here. Project is the idea of Phil Falise and the committee hopes to get William Morris Jr. to take a hand in the planning of the attraction.

Eldridge V. Weaver, Oklahoma theatre owner, shot into the general hospital for the second stage of the thoracoplasty operation and now back at the Will Rogers resting in solid comfort.

Thomas Scotti, staffer with Metro's Gotham office, emergencied into the general hospital for a spinal ailment and now back at the Will Rogers in a plaster cast.

Louise (RKO) Zolner was grounded following the bronchial operation but back in circulation enjoying mild privileges including biweekly pictures.

Audrey Lumpkin, daughter of James Brennan, 1st v.p. of IATSE and who graduated here, in to mitt the gang and spread a little sunshine. Ditto Sam Smith, Stewart-Everett circuit, Charlotte, N.C., who greeted the gang with ice cream and cake.

Write to those who are ill.

Friars Buy Bldg. in N. Y. For Enlarged Clubhouse; All Officers Reelected

The Friars will go eastside in mid-1957. Theatrical organization has purchased a five-story building for $325,000 at 57 E. 55th St., N. Y. The club will expand its activities greatly when it occupies the new edifice in the middle of 1957. On the agenda is the installation of a health club, steam baths, private meeting rooms, enlarged dining facilities and enough activities to compete with the card room.

The building is now occupied by the American Institute of Physics in a mansion originally built for the Edman family and contains marble imported from Italy and a stained glass window described as being four stories high. With alterations, the cost of moving in for the Friars will be in the neighborhood of $450,000. The structure will enable the club to have ladies' nights a couple of times weekly and maybe admit femmes in the public rooms of the first two floors. With the acquisition of the enlarged quarters, it's likely that the Friars will admit some new members to add sufficient revenue to make the new quarters pay off.

Meanwhile, the present Friar building is on the market. Currently, there is a $110,000 bid from the National Showmen's Assn., an outdoor theatrical group. The American Guild of Variety Artists had put in a $100,000 bid on the property several months ago, when the Friars first started looking for new quarters.

The organization held elections last week with incumbent officers renewed. Joe E. Lewis is abbott; Milton Berle, abbot emeritus; Phil Silvers, prior; Harry Delf, dean; Dr. S. C. Meylackson, treasurer; Red Buttons, secretary; Jack Benny, proctor; Benny Fields, historian. Abbot emeritus and proctor are honorary positions.

Named to the board of governors for a two-year term are Paul Ash, Irving Caesar, Bert Frohman, Harold Goldblatt, Louis Scheinfield, Dr. G. H. Solomon, Jack Cannon and Jules Marks.

gomery too is considered a safe bet in that area. During its recent run, "Holiday on Ice" came out well despite the boycott of the transportation facilities by Negro populations.

"Holiday on Ice" is doing excellently on a tour which comprised mainly of towns passed up by other shows. This layout carries its own refrigeration equipment and thus can hit areas that other icers cannot play.

Philly Yes & No

On the other hand, showmen regard Philadelphia as a hit-or-miss proposition. Attractions in New York have to fight it out on their own merits; there's no such thing as spending fairly respectable sums just to go out. The competition is keen and only top hits have any reason to expect profitable returns.

A difference in receptivity to shows is illustrated by the Martin & Lewis gross last season. This layout did $23,000 in Syracuse and less than $10,000 in Boston.

One of the facets making the smaller cities a better gamble for most showmen lies in the fact that most will try for the big money and thus bypass the lesser populated centres. Thus there are generally fewer of them competing for the coin in that town. An advance man in a smallie is a comparative rarity, and hence is very welcome at newspapers and radio-tv stations, especially when flashing a lot of free passes. Publicity is considerably easier to get and virtually everybody in town is usually aware of the show.

Also an important consideration is the lower advertising rates in newspapers, radio and tele stations. For what is spent in ads and publicity for a small campaign in a large city, the same amount can inundate an entire area and rate a draw from greater distances. Traffic and parking problems are reduced in the smallies.

Some showmen have long contended that the bucks in the tanks are generally easier to come by, but the sole drawback for many lies in the fact that they have to get around faster. So it could be that some are better off staying put in the same spot for longer periods.

Inside Stuff—Vaudeville

Eartha Kitt is another show bizite investing surplus funds. She has gone into a dress shop, Roxanne Inc., located on St. Nicholas Ave. in New York's Harlem district. Miss Kitt is to be a limited partner investing $10,000 in the enterprise. Store will have as its general partner Roxie Foster. Incorporation papers stipulate that Miss Kitt, being the limited partner, shall receive annually a share of the net profits equal to 90% of the cash contribution. Upon dissolution of the partnership, contribution of the limited partner is to be returned.

Although only 14, Jimmy Naples of Laconia, N. H., is gaining considerable recognition as a magician, including a prediction from Harry Blackstone that "you'll make the grade." Young Jimmy is a protege of Frank Lynch, himself a former showman and member of the International Brotherhood of Magicians. The kid has been putting on his own half-hour shows for the past three years and already has a repertoire of about 50 tricks.

The "Bridey Murphy" book started something. Now magician Harry Albacker claims that through experiments in "regression" he has proved conclusively that he is the ghost of P. T. Barnum and the rightful heir to the Barnum estate. Phineas T. died in 1891. The Amazing Maurice, who claims to have created hypnesia, a form of anasthesia for the physician and dentist, will conduct the experiments for anyone who asks.

Albacker has written the sponsors of the Barnum Festival at Bridgeport offering his services for July 4 for free. Only requirement is that a medico by kept close at hand when he "regresses" to being ole P. T. "This regression stuff," he writes, "plays hell with the heart."

Maria Neglia, the violinist, is back where she started from. Violinist came from Europe several years ago with nothing but "her fiddle and her talent." Even the problem of remaining in the U. S. came with considerable difficulty. Arthur Godfrey went to bat for her, and Sen. Smathers of Florida introduced a bill to let her remain in this country. Last week, while she was working at the Brown Hotel, Louisville, a fire destroyed the bulk of her wardrobe.

Unit Review

Five-Past Eight

Glasgow, May 8.

Stewart Cruikshank presentation of "Five-Past Eight" revue. Stars Jack Radcliffe, Jimmy Logan; features Joy Saxon, Kennneth Sandford, Joanna Rigby, Katharine Feather, Helen Norman, Billy Dick, Igor & Mimi, Five-Past Eight Girls (10); producer, Michael Mills; dance director, Lionel Blair; scenery, Reg Allen; costumes, Irene Segalla; musical arrangements under direction of Geraldo; at the organ, Bobby Pagan. At Alhambra Theatre, Glasgow, May 7, '56; $1.30 top.

Here's a revue with unusual linking of sophisticated sparkle and earthy Auld Lang Syne comedy. It zooms along at a brisk pace, and owes much to imaginative ideas of producer Michael Mills, aided by choreography of dancer Lionel Blair, who also appears.

On the comedy side, fodder is amply supplied by Jack Radcliffe, vet character comedian, who has achieved a new lease of professional life in past four years, and by Jimmy Logan, leading exponent of new school of Scot comedy and a nephew of Ella Logan. Teaming of this twosome is successful, contrasting in both age and styles.

Radcliffe scores with his classic sketch as an ancient bellringer from the Highlands. Logan raises strong yocks with a cameo as an enthusiastic Scot athlete. Both join forces for an amusing scene in which they pose as stagehands and gab re themselves.

On musical side, there is strong vocalizing by Australian chirp Joy Saxon and English singer Kenneth Sandford. Pair are best in "Carmen 1956," distaffer as Carmen and Sandford as Escamillo, with Lionel Blair supporting as Jose.

Joanna Rigby, tall and shapely, has improved much since her last appearance here, and impresses in both song scenes and sketches. Katherine Feather, attractive and smallish, has s.a. in sketches and terping. Helen Norman and Billy Dick, longtime stooges to Radcliffe, aid in comedy bits.

Igor & Mimi offer exciting adagio dance spot. The Five-Past Eight girls, led by Diana Taylor, are attractive glamor dancers, under slick routining of Lionel Blair.

Geraldo, name English conductor, wielded the orch stick on opening show caught, with Owen Walters the regular batoneer. Bobby Pagan is at the Compton organ and also musical associate. The Reg Allen scenery and Ire Segalla costumes are all out of the top drawer, with no coin spread.

Show takes its title from starting time of 8:05, running nightly at that time, with two shows Saturday. It is one of classiest summertime revues in Britain, and merits attention of U. S. producers for both talent and ideas. Impresario Stewart Cruikshank spares no funds to make it a clicko production. Gord.

JUDY GARLAND TO BOW NEW TROPICANA, VEGAS

Las Vegas, May 15.

Monte Proser, who's booking the new Tropicana, currently slated for a July opening, has been signing names. He has set Judy Garland for the preem show, Marlene Dietrich for a December stand and Caterina Valente in November. He also has Eddie Fisher on his prospectus, but no deal has been signed as yet.

Proser's bookings indicates that he's going after the top names even unto outbidding some of the old established hotels.

Tentative opening date for the Tropicana is July 2, but it's understood that Miss Garland's contract gives the spot a couple of weeks' leeway. Whether the Tropicana will be open in time depends on the rapidity with which some terrazzo floors can be completed.

GIRL DANCER

WANTED for entire summer Brown's Hotel, experienced, Five foot four or taller. Apply Roseland Bldg., N. Y. Room Five, Bet. 5 and 7 Thursday, May 17.

St. Regis, New York

Julie Wilson, with Frank Barry; Milt Shaw and Ray Bari Orchs; $1.50 and $2.50 couvert.

Julie Wilson and the St. Regis' Maisonette go together like Lea & Perrins which is why she influenced the Pierre Bultinck management into a once-a-night policy, in light of the svelte brunet's doubling from "Pajama Game." The hotel is going back to the former dinner and supper shows next season but apparently thought so much of its seven-time returner that it was willing to sacrifice the dinner draw. It was inevitable that the overall business would suffer in light of that sizeable hiatus between 10 and midnight, whereas "lift" given the proceedings, because of a dinner show, tended to accelerate the gross in several respects.

This is Miss Wilson's second return this season (here this past winter) and her current four-week stand is the seasonal blowoff. The Viennese Roof reopens with the same slick Milt Shaw dansapation alternating with Ray Bari's equally compelling brand of "society" terp tunestering.

It's also a return and a turn for the better for Miss Wilson's boite belting; when she was at the Plaza's Persian Room she essayed a pretentiousness that never came off.

Somehow in a rarified environment like the Plaza or the St. Regis it's unnecessary to remind the class trade how much one missed America; how big the songstress was in Britain; or even stress "graduation" from the saloons to the legitimate.

Back into the bistro aura the lissome Miss Wilson sells her s.a. and songs with slick suavity and sleek aplomb. And if, as happened opening night at the Maisonette, the mike was off, the outfronters didn't need the lyrics to dig the double-entendres.

Her repertoire is more to the manner of the room, in short, she's back on the beam in a larger manner. Rep includes the usual assortment of specials and lesser known production items—excavating obscure Rodgers & Hart, Porter, Berlin and Gershwiniana is getting to be a popular fad with the offbeat chirpers.

In sequence she opens with "Love Isn't Born, It's Made" followed by Porter's "Mr. and Mrs. Fish." "Necessary Evil," "I'm Through With Love," "Naive" (with an ad lib about Irving Lazar, which is a switch, considering that Barron Polan is her longtime manager), "It's All Right With Me," "Unathletic Me," "There's So Much More" (from Rodgers & Hart's "America's Sweetheart"), "A Man Could Be" and "Bad Bad Woman" are other samples of her repertoire.

"Unathletic Me" is distinguished by the fact that CBS p.r. expert Helen Souissat wrote it. "Bad Woman," which Miss Wilson purchased from vaude vet Dora Maugham, who now writes special material for other "single" woman, is also distinguished by the fact that (1), it's not by Miss Maugham; she merely owns it, because (2) when "Bad Bad Woman" was her vaude billing a distinguished librettist like Rowland Leigh and a distinguished British composer, Richard Addinsall ("Warsaw Concerto") wrote this little tidbit for her.

Miss Wilson has expert Steinwaying accomp in Frank Barry and tiptop bandstopping by Milt Shaw's ensemble, with the maestro's violining and generally professional assistance always making him the entertainer's musical delight. Ray Bari's ensemble is likewise proficient as the alternate combo. Incidentally, Miss Wilson is readying an album for Dolphin (Doubleday), with Phil Moore making the arrangements. Abel.

Riviera, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, May 14.

Phil Silvers, with Maurice Gosfield, Billy Sands, Allan Melvin, Harvey Faye & Richmond Gale; Mello-Larks (4), Double-Daters (4), Joyce Roberts, Eddie Krieg, Bill Woods, Ray Sinatra Orch (10); $2 minimum.

There will be long, long lines forming before the Riviera's Clover Room velvet ropes for a gander at the Phil Silvers opus. He is in for a fortnight, with perhaps another week's stretch if possible.

An ovation lasting many minutes greeted Silvers upon his opening-night entrance. His billing as "Sgt. Bilko" is carried through to initial appearance from the wings, wearing the uniform of the vid character. He is preceded by members of the w.k. "platoon," Pvt. Doberman, Maurice Gosfield; Pvt. Paparelli, Billy Sands; Cpl. Henshaw, Allan Melvin, and Cpl. Fender, Harvey Faye. The scene not only takes in a "mistaken identity" plot where the platoon is supposed to be in Las Vegas, New Mexico, but through machinations of Silvers gets around to some excerpting from "Top Banana" for a zippy beginning. Silvers then bows off for a while to return after a colorful production number for his accustomed nitery act in mufti.

This encompasses the hilarious "Stardust" routine with the clarinet, embossed by dialog with his accomper Richmond Gale; a satire on singers winding up with the baritone auditioning "Old Man River." The Mello-Larks join Silvers for more song-satire in "Manhattan" putting a nifty period to the 90 minutes.

Mello-Larks, three guys and a sumptuously curved little brunet, take high honors earlier in prime slot via some sock tunes chanted with plenty verve. Dorothy Dorben Dancers are smartly routined in the festive "Mardi Gras" and the "Rains Came Down," midway Sadie Thompson miming. Joyce Roberts and Eddie Krieg are well partnered in these, with warbler Bill Woods, and versatile Double-Daters adding sharp touches to the "Rains" number. Ray Sinatra conducts the orch smartly in all backgrounds. Will.

Boulevard, Queens, N.Y.

Ethel Waters, Albrights (2), Al Antonio, Ned Harvey Band, Harvito Rhumba Band; $5 minimum.

This Queens Blvd. biggery is a stronghold for pop disk names, which makes the booking of vet songstress Ethel Waters an offbeat affair. Fact that Miss Waters was able to hold the room's banquet tablers in her grip is a credit to her showmanly savvy. It's not easy to keep a couple of bowling club partygoers and a table celebrating a sweet-16 birthday quiet and attentive.

Miss Waters has been putting on a lot of poundage—she refers to her size several times during her 25-minute stint, but it has not affected her vocal quality. Pipes are still rich and pure making for arresting listening. She sticks to the tunes that have become standards in her repertoire and they come over with a bang. Miss Waters apparently wasn't sure of the Boulevard crowd and inserted an explanatory note for "the youngsters" that she introduced all the tunes and that she's been at the singing game for more than 40 years. The bit worked, however, because she pulled mitt approval at the opening bars of such faves as "Stormy Weather," "Am I Blue?" "Cabin in the Sky," "Taking a Chance on Love" and "Happiness Is a Thing Called Joe." It's a songbag that's hard to top. Gerald Cook gives her fine backing at the ivories.

Surrounding bill includes the Albrights, a dance duo reviewed in New Acts, and comedian Al Antonio. Latter fights his way through some mediocre material and scores best when he localizes his yocks to the rollicking bowlers or the birthday partying teeners.

Ned Harvey and the Harvito orchs lay down the straight and Latino beat, respectively. Gros.

Gatineau, Ottawa

Ottawa, May 12.

"Guys & Dolls Revue," with Haller & Hayden, Ruth Rogers, Pat Morgan, Lindsay-Daye Dancers (6), Champ Champagne Orch (8); $1 admission.

Gatineau Club impresario Joe Saxe has come up with a slick, class, finely-knit revue this week, blending three acts and a line into a "Guys & Dolls" musical o.o. that rouses the tablesitters to great mitting. Besides working solo stanzas, acts are integrated into a production that uses the best of the G&D tunes, overall impact indicating plenty work on the stint. Lindsay-Daye Dancers are big in their three appearances;—top lookers, dancers, dressers with remarkably okay pipes in unison warbling.

Pat Morgan, a Canadian chanter, has one of the finest set of pipes to be heard in this area and nice ways of using them, but his bit could use more production and staging. An okay southland medley ("Sleepy Time Down South," "Birth of the Blues," others) and a lineup of Irish tunes get biggest returns.

Haller & Hayden (New Acts) are w.k. in this room but have a considerable amount of new material which, despite the duo's neck-breaking hard work, just misses being top comedy. Pert canary Ruth Rogers works a socko session solo and gives good handling to the "Take Back Your Mink" number with the line. Miss Rogers (also New Acts) is a seasoned performer and shows top savvy.

Chez Paree, Chi

Chicago, May 10.

Nat King Cole, Jean Carroll, Chez Paree Adarables, (6) with Jimmy Lee, Brian Farnon Orch; $1.50 cover, $3.75 minimum.

This five-weeker should keep the house packed, since it adds the talents of a sophisticated and funny comedienne to the nonpareil song stylings of Nat King Cole.

Working with incomparable ease before a crowd responding to his every nuance and phrase, Cole comes back to the Chez after a year's absence to prove again why the King wears the crown. Opening jauntily and smoothly with "Breezing Along," he soon repairs to the velvety ballads that are the most appropriate medium for his pipes.

Cole does his latest waxings, "Too Young to Go Steady" and "Nothing Ever Changes My Love For You," as well as a medley of the clicks of other years. And the roster is impressive. With the solid backing of his bass, drum, and guitar, trio Cole roams the field from old to new with free-wheeling ease, pausing occasionally to bang out a few licks on the 88, his original springboard. The customers are enthralled, and even after the third encore, they won't let him get off. He bows off like a champ.

Comedy chores are handled by distaffer Jean Carroll, who fits this room very nicely. Miss Carroll, a shapely looker with lots on the ball in the way of material and delivery, brings some of the Miami and Las Vegas flavor to the Chez. Occasionally risque, but without engendering resentment, she does a neat job of projecting the attitudes of the sophisticated femme resort habitue. Miss Carroll parlays sex, racetracks, domineering children and family tales into a neat comedy payoff delivered in rapid-fire style. She manages to get and keep the interest of a crowd hungering for the headliner; their yocks punctuate the turn and the customers send her off with a big mitt.

The Chez Paree Adorables open the layout with a "Cotton Carnival" production number, well choreographed but not too impressive in conception or costuming, and space the show with a seasonal "In the Spring" number more in the Chez style of leggy display. Jimmy Lee provides the usual gallantries and pleasant vocal backing.

Chase Club, St. Louis

St. Louis, May 8.

Frankie Laine, Paul Neighbors Orch (12); $1-$1.50 cover.

After three previous clicks in this west end room, Frankie Laine has lost none of his b.o. appeal and is scoring solidly in his eight-night stand. Even though his stint is a single in keeping with Harold Koplar's recently installed policy, Laine keeps the check-grabbers in rapt attention throughout his minutes and cops resounding okays.

Sans tux and tails, Laine has discovered that his faves of former years continue to be ditto with the customers and he received the nearest thing to a standing ovation at conclusion of session caught.

Laine continues to ooze smart showmanship, quipping with ringsiders and showing a smart change of pace that keeps em howling for more. His opening ditty, "Lucky Old Sun," is the signal for a swell mitt and is the tipoff to what follows. His "I Believe" cops the heaviest score while he fronts the tooters. Sandwiched in are "Cry Of The Wild Goose," "That's My Desire," "Jezebel" and "That Old Feeling," among others.

Cameo, N. Y.

Sylvia Syms, Billy Taylor Trio, Roger Steele Trio; $4 minimum.

Sylvia Syms, who's been a longtime regular on the intimate nitery circuit, is entering a new phase in her career. She's broken through as a click pop platter performer via her Decca etching of "I Could Have Danced All Night," from the Broadway musical, "My Fair Lady." Until now, her specialty has been vintage tunes, which she dishes out in slick fashion. She's still playing up the oldies in her current Cameo stand.

Miss Syms' song-selling savvy is evidenced by her delivery of such tunes as "It Never Entered My Mind," "Let Me Love You," "Taking a Chance on Love," "I Am the Girl," "My Ship" and "Danced." She tends, though, to be a little too cute and/or tricky on some numbers such as "Mountain Greenery" and "Tea for Two." The singer's turn runs about a half-hour for overall winning results.

Instrumentalizing at the club is provided by the Roger Steele and Billy Taylor trios. Both groups dish out a nice brand of music, with the Taylor unit working in a progressive vein. Miss Syms, incidentally, is ably backed by two members of the Steele combo, plus Ronnie Selby, her own keyboard accompanist. Jess.

Sahara, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, May 14.

Ray Bolger, Tina Louise, Ashtons (7), Marvellos (3), Maurice Kelly, Saharem Dancers (12), Cee Davidson Orch (10); $2 minimum.

Ray Bolger returns for a month's cavort in a revue titled "Spring Fever," amply filled with sock entertainment values. No question about it, the Congo Room is due for capacity crowds.

The epitome of artfully careless grace, Bolger plies his footwork with delightful ease to illustrate songs or brief sketch patterns. He smoothly integrates the acts in the flowing revue, with his terping to set off the theme after the Saharem Dancers' "Spring" opening. The Bolger art is vividly essayed in "Old Soft Shoe," succession of flashbacks into "Charleston," "Blackbottom," tango and jitterbug all larded with comedy. The w.k. striptease routine is a riot, and the classic "Once in Love With Amy' and "Sad Sack" are the climax. A surprise entrance with expert hoofer Maurice Kelly in the Saharem Dancers' flagwaving, baton-whirling finale is a tremendous finish.

Tina Louise appears here for the first time in a song sesh that leaves much to be desired along the vocal line, although all orbs are kept busy taking in the luscious redhead's chassis lines. Tag bit with Bolger puts still more accent on her fine frame as he goes through some comic rhumba stepping.

Marvellos have the Continental flair for expert presentation, carefully wrought detail in their musical-magico turn. The Seven Ashtons are a sock tee-off diversion with razzle-dazzle risley. Cee Davidson Orch is firstrate in showbacking, with Bolger's accomper Ed Scott alternating on direction. Will.

Chateau Madrid, N. Y.

Margaret Sierra, Lola & Lita, Dolores Perry, Line (5), Ralph Font and Pancho Orchs; $3.50 minimum.

This is a slight change of pace for the Chateau Madrid, which usually laces its shows with plenty of hot and heavy heel pounding. Headliner this stance is Margaret Sierra, a chirper from Seville, with an act that puts the accent primarily on vocal offerings. No one is going to complain.

Miss Sierra, a Spanish fave who's also appeared in Cuba and Mexico, has an extrovert Latin charm and doesn't spare herself putting over her material. She sings in a voice that can hold its own with the best and she's a graceful terper who excels in the Latin idiom. Her numbers are well chosen, with the exception of one awkward bit which she puts over in English. The words are perfect, but it's out of character.

Miss Sierra has no trouble at all making contact with the ringsiders, thanks to a very ingratiating personality that fits the room to a T. She starts off with a lively "Madrid" and then gives a sock demonstration of what can be done with a pair of clacking castanets. That's the highspot of the act, and it goes over big. "Women in Love" number should be replaced, but she makes up for lost time with a plenty animated "La Violettita," in which she hands out flowers to the audience. Attractively gowned, Miss Sierra is a cinch for almost any cafe spot.

Lola & Lita novelty-panto act has plenty of bounce and keeps 'em busy watching each of the fast turns. Duo works with smooth coordination and knows the value of pace. Finale, when they shape balloons into various animals, is a crowd pleaser and lets them off to heavy mitting.

Showstopper turns out to be Dolores Perry, a pretty chanteuse with an unusually good voice. Her "Love Is a Many Splendored Thing" really gives the song a break. She did four numbers in all and refused to come on for a second encore. Considering she's a young performer currying audience favor, this isn't the wisest policy. Miss Perry's voice really deserves a bigger room.

Houston, May 10.

Joanne Wheatley, Eddie Garson, Ernie Rudey Orch (10); $2-$3 cover.

Shapely Joanne Wheatley headlines the show but dummy and patter man Eddie Garson steal it with a strong opening 30 minutes. Garson is a comer who knows how to work a room for laughs. He shows a genuine ability in handling two dummies, and four "voices" at the same time.

Personable ventro has a routine that is fresh and well thought out. Varies his patter with the Pinocchios from brashness to pathos, always being careful not to overstay his welcome on any one mood.

Miss Wheatley, warbler in a blue skintight gown, has a pleasing voice, but her gushiness on intro of numbers takes away from the songs themselves. She teams with her arranger-pianist (and husband) Hall Kanner on some duets that just don't do. The schmaltz drips from them. Kanner adds very little to Miss Wheatley, who as a single can handle a ballad nicely. She turned in a top-notch job on "Autumn Leaves" and belted out a fiery "Lover Come Back to Me."

Le Ruban Bleu, N. Y.

Jimmy Savo remains one of the more lovable mimes on the boards. Savo, making his N.Y. intimerie debut at Le Ruban Bleu for a 10-day stand, is a show biz figure with considerable charm and fortitude. The loss of a leg some years ago, as far as show biz efforts are concerned, resulted only in a rearrangement of his routines. He is a pantomimist of great skill and warmth and working in the intimate surroundings of the Bleu, he gets a dimension that was lacking at his stands in larger rooms.

Savo has a lot of little tricks, bits and throwaways that delight the crowd. There are his regularly constituted pieces with his famed "Mandalay" being reprised. In addition, he gives out with "Honey," "If You Gave Your Heart to Me" and a serioso "I Believe." Missing was his famed "River Stay Away From My Door," but even without that piece Savo proves that he's still a top entertainer worthy of more frequent showcasings in the metropolitan centres.

Surrounding bill has Dorothy Loudon doing sharp burlesques of tunes. Gal has a knack of taking the original lyrics of any given number and poking fun at them without any appreciable change in the lines. She takes off to a warm palm.

The Riffs are down to two boys. Negro team have reworked their routine to compensate for the dropped member. Of course, the act doesn't have the original force since the routines were designed basically for three men, but a few more changes and they'll get the knack of working as a duo. The crowds here nevertheless take to them.

Michael Jarrett is an offbeat songster with a line of attack that lies between folk singers and the more violent pop practitioners. His style still needs considerable work and his songs similarly could stand some editing down, but he indicates that he can establish a following with more circulation.

The Norman Paris Trio is one of the more imaginative instrumental groups around. Showbacking is tops. Richard Harris emcees. Jose.

Seven Seas, Omaha

Omaha, May 12.

Mickey Shaughnessy, Al Lamm Trio; no cover or minimum.

One of the more popular comedians to work the only downtown Omaha nitery boasting entertainment, Mickey Shaughnessy is proving a fine draw at the Seven Seas in a repeat date. Since the bistro's ad policy is anything but kingsize, word of mouth is the top selling factor. It's to Shaughnessy's credit that the show caught had the aisles jammed with standees.

Comic, who works extremely relaxed, opens with a parody on "My Blue Heaven" and shifts into an Irish ditty that he interrupts every bar to inject a joke. By the time the song's over, with numerous ad libs (all clever) tossed in, guy has worked 60 minutes.

Best bit is a guffaw-producing Texas rancher takeoff. His facial expressions are top-drawer and his gags just right for this spot—risque but not overly rough. Gets A-1 backing from the Al Lamm Trio, who also serve as capable foils. Trump.

New Acts

JANA MASON
Songs
12 Mins.
New Frontier, Las Vegas

Jana Mason's appeal is twofold, with her ability to captivate in song matching a stunning appearance. She's a rather tall brunet, endowed with arresting face and chassis yet there is no attempt to signpost these attributes over the vocal department. Her range covers a sex quality in low tones for ballads and expressive, lilting manner in the specials and rhythm tunes. The one torchant, "Can't Help Lovin' That Man of Mine," has particular interest because of invested emotion, with an oposite mood in the Jackie Barnett "If It Weren't For Girls" illuminating her ability to sell a humorous ditty. Accent on rhythm, which she handles well, is ably brought to rousing finish in a ringside jaunt with a spiritual shouter, "Somebody's Keeping Score."

The only drawback to an otherwise scintillating songsesh is the use of certain gestures which resemble exercises, being much too pat and on the cliche side. Witt.

THE COASTERS
Song
10 Mins.
Apollo, N. Y.

As the name implies, this quartet of colored singers is from the Coast. They make their Apollo bow this week. Looks as though they've got experience behind them, because they do especially well on "Honky Tonk in Mexico" and "Smokey Joe's Cafe." Neither are particularly in the rhythm-blues idiom, being rather sweet and lowdown, but the foursome rocks out a couple of tunes strictly for Harlem aficianados.

Since the team has musical variety as well as a winning style, they might make okay nitery inclusions beyond riding the vaude route. Voices are tops: lead is clear and works well contrapuntally; bass is for real, it seems, and has a peculiar lazy quality that is faintly reminiscent of Satchmo. Art.

TONY FAYNE & DAVID EVANS
Sporting Impressions
12 Mins.
Empire, Glasgow

English male twosome concentrate on impressions of personalities associated with sport, particularly in capacity of radio and tv commentators. As result, subjects being so closely identified with the London BBC, act's appeal is limited to British audiences and stations in the Commonwealth taking London broadcasts. Pair's talent at copying voice styles warrants a wider field.

Open with impression of Walter Archer, rural character in daily English radio serial, and segue with takeoffs of London comedian Jimmy Wheeler, Winston Churchill as a railroad station announcer, and Raymond Glendinning, BBC sportscaster. Break follows for Tony Fayne to sing "Beginning," and resume with more sporting angles, including an interview with a football pools winner and a travesty of John Arlott, English cricket commentator.

With wider appeal and greater range of non sporting types, act would have much stronger impact. As is, talent at voices is in large quantity. More American subjects would give team an obvious opening to the U.S. vaude, radio and tv fields. Gord.

HALLER & HAYDEN
Comedy
28 Mins.
Gatineau, Ottawa

Haller & Hayden feature zany, Olsen & Johnson-type comedy, a sort of older Martin & Lewis, but for some unexplainable reason they fall just short of being tremendous. The material, though overlong in places, sounds strong and the duo works hard for effect but the heavy spontaneous yocks that spell top-rung comedy are missing.

Chant, terps, knockabout antics and a floorful of gimmicks are worked into the session. One of the standout bits has Joe Haller telling "Louella Parsons" (mythical for the occasion) what a wonderful actor his partner is but referring to Benny Hayden as Marlon Brando, which cues Hayden into attempting to live up to his partner's glowing descriptions of his acting. This number could stand considerable tightening for bigger impact. With some overhauling and research into why the spark doesn't glow, Hallar & Hayden could slip into the top rank of comedy for video, niteries and stage. Gorm.

Songs
9 Mins.
Palace, N.Y.

Femme singing trio (two brunettes and a blonde) have the looks to go places. Right now, they seem to be working hard to get proper songs. "Wonderful," which is employed to take the trio on, is okay but the others leave something to be desired. "Are You Satisfied?" seems okay but does not quite come across.

The three misses are garbed in excellent taste, make solid initial impression but fail to carry through with the vocal chords. One apparent handicap is that the gals sing too far from the mike. These are mechanical errors which can and should be fixed up. Wear.

RUTH ROGERS
Songs
14 Mins.
Gatineau, Ottawa

Ruth Rogers has been making the club circuits for a number of years but hadn't hit New Acts. A cute canary with a bubbling personality that immediately shoots out to the tables, Miss Rogers' stint exhibits clicko savvy and experience. Her tune lineup is well-tailored to her style and includes such items as "Gotta Do Good Tonight," a slick novelty item titled "Television is Tough on Love," plus standards "Imagination" and "Let's Do It" with fresh twists.

She handles ballad, bounce, novelty, almost anything in the warble category with ease and ability and is good for any stage or floor menu. Television should make good use of her. Gorm.

THE ALBRIGHTS (2)
Dance
10 Mins.
Boulevard, Rego Park, N. Y.

The Albrights are a bright, fresh-looking dance duo with an attractive turn. Boy and femme are lithe and limber as they step through a brisk and inventive repertoire.

Gaily costumed, they open with some high-stepping shenanigans to "Camptown Races," segue neatly to a serioso ballroomology bit and then wind with a charming waltz segment to "Most Beautiful Girl In World."

Both have expressive faces that could be used to advantage in musicomedy slotting and tv showcasing. Team also is solid bet as vaude and nitery openers. Gros.

PEGGY LLOYD
Songs
25 Mins.
El Morocco, Montreal

Blonde Peggy Lloyd came to El Morocco for a limited engagement, caught on with the regulars and stayed, becoming one of the most popular entertainers ever to play this attractive room. Following an original start in the lounge for the cafeites who stay up late, Miss Lloyd moved into the main room as a single for a short period and now holds forth until the small hours back in the lounge.

Miss Lloyd is of medium height with a trim figure and a lively personality which matches her healthy piping. Songalog is almost limitless and at present numbers are adapted to the payees' wishes rather than a pre-arranged listing. Despite casual manner due to atmosphere of room, this handsome thrush evidences okay show savvy and properly routined should be a cinch in most boites. Particularly those who like their songs in a straightforward style and not too subtle. Newt.

House Reviews

Palace, N. Y.

Christine & Moll, Trotter Bros. (2), The Valenos (2), Danny Crystal, Charmonaires (3), Joe Terminini, Pigmeat & Co. (3), Gus Van, Myron Roman House Orch; "Nightmare" (UA), reviewed in current issue.

This new Palace bill is a nice mixture of standard vet acts and fairly new turns. Christine & Moll, first caught by VARIETY early in 1949, tee off with their novelty tapstering. Spanish-looking Moll is a polished, clever dancer who also does excellent imitations of tapping via snapping of his fingers. Act looks like one in search of a new routine. Otherwise, it's okay.

Trotter Bros., who have been around night clubs in the last four months with their marionettes, try their wares before another type of audience with not too big results. Their puppet blonde stripper, however, is tops.

Patrons here really go for Joe Termini, who's been drawing plaudits for more than 25 years with his comedy musico act. Aside from being a skilled instrumentalist with violins and the banjo, he puts over his accomplishments with just enough hokum and tricks to hold strong interest. His work with the banjo and electric guitar are highlights, drawing probably the biggest mitt of the entire show.

Danny Crystal, singer and comic, is a bit too fast for this crowd. Possessing a nice voice, he is sharp on repartee and has the right material for neat act. Went off solidly with his closing song. Charmonaires, three femme harmonizers, make a favorable if not terrific impression. (New Acts).

The Valenos, acro-adagio duo, have about the same turn they've been using for the last few years. The comely blonde miss still comes out of concealment inside a duffle bag which the male has carried out onto the stage. Entrance is inclined to be on the negative side, if a surprise. She deserves a better intro because shaping as nearly 75% of act. Miss Valeno is an excellent acrobatic dancer while the male portion of the act shows off her wares via usual adagio turns and lifts.

Pigmeat & Co., three Negro funsters, are doing the same "At the Carnival" routine they have put across for years. Rapid-fire dialog makes the act click nicely here.

Gus Van, who's been around for years and years, winds up proceedings in smooth fashion with his songs and recitative ballads. "Clancy Lowered the Boom," "Ain't Done Nothing To Nobody" and "No Business Like Show Business" constitute highlights of his repertoire. Bows off with loud audience reaction.

Apollo, N. Y.

Al Hibbler, Machito Band (15) with Grazielle, The Coasters (4), Cook & Brown, Jimmy Smith, Johnny Torres, Mickey & Sylvia, Miller & Mantan; "Return of Jack Slade" (AA). $

Most of the way, this vaudfilmery on 125th St. has a smooth stanza. Led by Al Hibbler and propped by several diversified turns, the card has an abundance of b.o. punch.

Hibbler's pipes, at their best and softest (he had a vicious sore throat last time seen), lend themselves well to "Day Break," "They Say You're Laughing at Me" and "11th Hour Melody," latter a new release that at least matches "Unchained Melody," his standard, in potential popularity. Lacking a melody to get his mobile jaws around, the blind man's first number, "I've Had the Blues All Day," makes a dull opener.

Machito's hot shot Latino 15-piecer keeps the session jumping. As a band it's a steady winner, but in support of other acts it's prone to be slow on cues and the two-ply bongo section, great in regular numbers, is noisy superfluity in backstopping. Machito's sister, Grazielle, does okay on opener, "No Molesto," and another. The Coasters (and that's where they're from) are a smart vocal troupe, with appropriate plaudits carried in New Acts.

Cook & Brown (Stump and Stumpy lookalikes) do a breezy six or seven minutes of tap. Bigger partner is all elasticity in his acro contortions and smaller half is all laughs, for a socko net result. Though Jimmy Smith is essentially a tapster too, it's no mistake placing him next, since he taps out tunes on a solid set of outsized vibes. In looks-so-easy "Tico Tico" opener, in a slower but more intricate "April in Paris" and a supercharged "Flying Home" he performs admirably. Band sometimes drowns him in third number, however.

Mickey & Sylvia, a guitar-song team, aren't as fully satisfactory. Hillbilly rhythm & blues start is okay but duo loses a little ground in the atonal, "Hap Hap Happy Day." "Don't Step on My Blue Suede Shoes" would be okay for them if Sylvia didn't blare. She has a voice that wears hard after a while, though not so for her great looks.

Entire card is satisfactorily integrated by Johnny Torres, a Negro deejay out of Providence who does the emceeing like a hipster. Little can be said about Miller & Moreland comedy that hasn't been said before, except they should bury that telephone booth routine under six feet of solid floorboard. If they note the lack of response from the pews on that one, they will quickly comply. Art.

How legit production and operating costs have skyrocketed over the last 40 years is illustrated by comparison of the figures for the "Ziegfeld Follies" of 1918 and the new edition of the revue that folded last Saturday night (12) in Philadelphia.

In 1918, the 11th edition of the "Follies" was put on at the Amsterdam Theatre, N. Y., for about $110,000. In 1922, the tab on mounting the seasonal revue was up to around $250,000. Those amounts, however, were peanuts compared to the more than $400,000 shelled out on the latest version of the show, which folded during its tryout tour.

The 1956 "Follies," co-produced by Richard Kollmar and James W. Gardiner, was capitalized at $396,000, including 10% overcall. It had been scheduled to open May 26 at the Winter Garden Theatre, N. Y. On the basis of a financial prospectus for the projected Broadway run, the Kollmar-Gardiner production differed from the 1918 presentation on a number of weekly items, including the following:

Weekly operating expense	$55,700	$14,000
Salaries	23,400	12,000
Theatre rental	16,500	1,600
Capacity gross	70,000	24,000
Profit at capacity	14,400	10,000

The 1918 salaries included about $3,000 for the chorus, which comprised 74 girls, 40 of whom were making their initial stage debuts. Several members of the line were getting $75 and one around $150, but the average was $40 per girl.

The estimated payroll tab for the Kollmar-Gardiner offering included $16,450 for 55 principals and chorus members. The figure is be-

Nederlanders Visiting Detroit Area Schools As Legit Missionaries

Detroit, May 15.

In a "Building Future Theatregoers" program, James Nederlander, manager of the local Shubert Theatre, and his brother, Joey, treasurer of the house, have visited 60 Detroit area high schools in an effort to stir up interest in legit productions.

They have lectured, shown photos of past and current legit stars, offered special student rates and begun an essay contest, in cooperation with English and drama teachers, on "Why I like the live theatre." So far, over 1,000 entries are in and more are expected before the end of this month. Drama critics of the three dailies will act as judges.

Joey Nederlander said the project has been more successful than expected, with many high school students taking advantage of reduced rates to attend Monday and Tuesday night performances. When a large group of 50 or more have attended, actors have given group interviews after the final curtain.

Anna Wiman's Solo Bow Is Spanish Prize Play

London, May 15.

As a sequel to the current theatre shortage in the West End, the Fortune is dropping its policy of booking amateur shows and will henceforth be taking only professional productions. The change will be inaugurated June 6, when Anna Deere Wiman will open with the Spanish Academy Award play, "El Baile," with Conchita Montes as star.

This import will be Miss Wiman's first solo production here. Previously, she has been associated with other managements in the presentation of "Reluctant Debutante," "Morning's At Seven" and other shows.

The U.S.-born producer will next present "Sight Unseen," an American comedy by Allen Vincent, with Barry Sinclair, Donald Stewart and Derek Blomfield starred, and Belita in the femme romantic lead. The play starts a provincial tour in Bath on May 21, prior to going into the West End. It's being staged by David Pelham.

Belafonte Will Break Tour for Waldorf Date

The touring "Sing, Man, Sing," starring Harry Belafonte, will lay off for a month, following the May 26 windup of a fortnight's run at the Shubert Theatre, Chicago. The show's trek is being interrupted to permit Belafonte to fill an engagement at the Starlight Roof of the Waldorf-Astoria, N.Y., beginning May 27. The revue will resume its tour July 2 at the Greek Theatre, Los Angeles.

The presentation, written, directed and produced by Belafonte's personal manager, Jay Richard Kennedy, has been playing to healthy business since the start of its hinterland hike last month. The show opened in Chicago last Monday (14).

'Can-Can' Closes; Nets $1 Million

"Can-Can," which ended its tour last Saturday (12) in Washington, netted over $1,000,000 on a $300,000 investment. That includes $125,450 forthcoming from 20th-Fox next December. The latter coin represents the balance of the studio's $250,900 net share of the proceeds from the purchase of the film rights for $650,000.

The Cy Feuer-Ernest H. Martin production began its road trek last June after a 112-week Broadway run. An approximate $740,000 profit, including half of the total film income, had been piled up on the New York run. Another $160,000-$170,000 was picked up on the hinterland hike. The Cole Porter-Abe Burrows tuner is now scheduled to tour musical tent and al fresco operations this summer as a package production.

The warm-weather presentation will be sent out by Monty Shaff, general manager for the producers. Several members of the touring company are expected to be retained for the package production.

BURR-MEREDITH SKED 'SPEAKING OF MURDER'

Courtney Burr and Burgess Meredith now have two properties on tap for Broadway production next season. Latest acquisition of the new producing team is "Speaking of Murder," by Bill and Audrey Roos. The pair previously optioned "The Girl From Sardi's," a musical comedy, with book by Charles Robinson.

"Murder," to be directed by Delbert Mann, was peddled by Official Films, repping the authors and the stager. Mann copped the Academy Award Oscar this year for his direction of "Marty." Offbeat angle on the deal is that Meredith is also an Official client (but as an actor, not producer) and therefore was in the unusual position of having to haggle with his own agents over the terms of Mann's contract.

It's understood Metro and Columbia are considering for a preproduction deal on the film rights to "Murder."

Hamilton-Russell to Offer Coward's 'Values'

Noel Coward's "Relative Values" is scheduled for Broadway production next fall by Lance Hamilton and Charles Russell, who produced the playwright-performer's three "Four Star Jubilees" on CBS-TV this season. It'll mark their Broadway managerial debut. Coward will stage the presentation, which will costar Edna Best and Gladys Cooper, the latter repeating the role she created in the original London production in 1951.

The producing team also contemplates a West End presentation of Coward's "Family Tree" this summer. Pair leave today (Wed.) for London to produce the annual "Night of 100 Stars" at the Palladium, prior to putting on "Tree."

Shirley Jones Opening Cambridge in 'Beggar's'

Cambridge, Mass., May 15.

Shirley Jones has been inked by the Cambridge Drama Festival at Sanders Theatre, on the Harvard University Campus, July 5-Sept. 1, for "Beggar's Opera," second of three productions and skedded to run from July 25 through Aug. 11. She will play Polly Peachum in the original John Gay-Dr. Tepusch version of the 18th century work. The music will be in a new arrangement by Daniel Pinkham.

The Drama Festival opens July 5 with Shakespeare's "Henry V." The closing work beginning Aug. 15 will offer Siobhan McKenna in "Saint Joan."

'Garden' Had Only One Losing ($32) B'way Wk.; Victim of Stop Clause

"Chalk Garden," which lost approximately $25,000 on its recent Broadway run, had an operating deficit only one week of its 23-week run. The debit involved was only $32. Partial waiving of author and director royalties, plus paring of other expenses on three extremely low-grossing frames enabled the Irene Mayer Selznick production to confine its operating loss to a single stanza.

The Enid Bagnold comedy was forced to vacate the Barrymore Theatre, N. Y. last March 31 because it fell below its stop clause a few weeks earlier. That permitted the Shuberts to rent the house to another production, which they did.

"Chalk" registered a total operating profit of $41,020 on its New York stand. As of a March 31 accounting, another $36,841 had been taken in on the show's share of the pre-production sale of the film rights to Paramount for $75,000 down and 10% of the gross on profitable weeks.

The deficit as of the audit was $26,925. That figure was reduced around $2,000 by additional film income on the three weeks ending March 31, The production has thus far repaid $75,000 of the $100,000 capital to its backers, with a full return possible on the basis of the show's share of the profits on the London production, plus royalties from two scheduled strawhat packages and other subsidiary rights.

The Gladys Cooper-Siobhan McKenna costarrer cost $75,826 to produce. A five-week tryout loss accounted for another $19,680, while pre-Broadway opening expenses tallied $9,279. The total cost of bringing the show to New York was $104,785.

ELLIOT NORTON CITED BY EMERSON COLLEGE

Boston, May 15.

Elliot Norton, Boston Post drama critic, recently in the news because of being dropped from the Shubert press list here, was presented the fourth annual Joseph E. Connor Award of Phi Alpha Tau National Speech fraternity of Emerson Collegt last Friday (11). The critic was subsequently put back on the press list but the Shuberts have continued reducing ad space in the Post.

The scroll reads, "To Elliot Norton, drama critic, for his creative contribution to the advancement of theatre arts." The award is made annually in the name of the former head of the Emerson College Speech Department, who was instrumental in the formation of Phi Alpha Tau.

Montreal, May 15.

Gratien (Fridolin) Gelinas, who closed his "Fridolinades '56" revue last Sunday (6) after five weeks at the Orpheum Theatre here, has left for the Stratford (Ontario) Festival to start rehearsals as Charles VI in "Henry V" and as Dr. Caius in "The Merry Wives of Windsor."

The actor-author-producer will also be featured in a revue at the festival for three afternoon performances with Felix Leclerc, Paul Berval, Jean Gascon and Jean-Louis Roux. Latter two also have parts in "Henry V."

Ross an Issue in Equity Election As Campaign Tempo Speeds Up; Rebecca Brownstein in the Cast?

Electioneering is accelerating in the annual election of Actors Equity council. With the balloting set for the annual membership meeting June 1 at the Sheraton Astor Hotel, N.Y., campaign material is being mailed out, rallies are being held and the regular ticket has issued what amounts to a platform.

The offbeat angle of the situation is that the independent ticket, which was put up by the middle-of-the-road element in the membership to oppose the regular slate named by the nominating committee, is being supported by Ralph Bellamy, Equity president, and Margalo Gillmore and Raymond Massey, vice presidents. Another wrinkle is that, in general, the two tickets apparently favor much the same policies regarding Equity matters.

In addition to the somewhat vaguely defined difference of political coloration, the chief issue between the opposing groups appears to be mainly a matter of personalities. In the realm of political sympathy, the independents declare their intention of issuing a complete list of supporters of their ticket, and claim that the regular slate would not dare to follow suit.

Is Ross Boss?

The independents are concentrating on the claim that the regulars are dominated by a small group headed by Bill Ross, former vice-president and council member who is a candidate on the regular ticket. Ross, they point out,

Canadian Players Will Tour 2 Cos. Next Fall

Stratford, Ont., May 15.

Canadian Players, which recently completed its second season repertory tour, will expand next fall with two companies. One will offer "Hamlet" and "Peer Gynt" in eastern and midwestern U. S. and later Quebec province and the Maritimes. The other will present "Othello" and "Man and Superman," treking across the Dominion and down the Coast.

Douglas Campbell, currently playing the title role in the Kipnis-Guthrie film edition of the "Oedipus Rex" after winding up the tour with CP, will direct all the troupe's productions, assisted by George McCowan. Advance arrangements for the dual tours are being made by Mrs. Tom Patterson, president of the outfit, and Laurel Crosby, publicity rep.

Pfeiffer Plans A New 'Bus' Tour

Chicago, May 15.

Jules Pfeiffer will send out a touring edition of "Bus Stop" this summer, in association with Robert Whitehead and Roger L. Stevens, producers of the original Broadway and road versions. He is currently in New York to book the tour, which will probably open in mid-July at the local Selwyn Theatre, where it played a four-week engagement last winter.

The producer has also been huddling with lawyers for Whitehead and Stevens and with Audrey Wood, agent for the author, William Inge, about the release date of the film version of the play. 20th-Fox, which is currently shooting the picture starring Marilyn Monroe, has announced it to open here in July. However, Pfeiffer says that the contractual release date is next Jan. 1, and he intends to hold the studio to that.

In order to obtain an earlier release of "Seven Year Itch," its last previous Marilyn Monroe-starrer, 20th-Fox paid a bonus of $175,000 over and above the original purchase price for the screen rights. Presumably it would have to make some such deal if it wants to release "Bus Stop" ahead of the contractual date.

Pfeiffer says he knows nothing of any such project, however, and is going ahead with the casting and production in preparation for the tour. He has already acquired the "Bus Stop" physical production from Whitehead and Stevens.

Pitlochry (Scot) Fest Preems Summer Season

Pitlochry, Scotland, May 5.

A repertory of six shows is being offered by the Pitlochry Festival Theatre this summer. The group, which was launched six years ago by John Stewart, operates in a semi-tent structure. It's localled in picturesque tourist country.

Current presentation is "She Stoops to Conquer," directed by G. Maxwell Jackson. Kenneth Ireland is general manager of the operation.

Set-Ohio State Sked

Columbus, May 15.

Six plays and one musical will be the offering for the seventh season of the Stadium Theatre, located under Ohio State's horseshoe stadium. The arena-style spot will open June 26, with S. N. Behrman's "Second Man."

Subsequent shows will include "Ten Nights in a Barroom," "Our Town," "My Sister Eileen," "Rain," "Point of No Return" and "Of Thee I Sing."

All shows except "Sing" will play five nights, the musical being booked for two weeks.

Jobs Stay at Peak For Managers, Pressagents In Legit, Pix, Industry

Legit managers and pressagents never had it so good. Employment continues to boom, both on Broadway and out of town.

Approximately 65% of the membership of the Assn. of Theatrical Press Agents & Managers had jobs during the year ended last April 1. The percentage was about the same for the previous year and reflects the current theatrical business surge.

Other sources of employment, besides Broadway and touring productions, include summer stock, industrial shows and special roadshow films such as "Cinerama" and "Oklahoma." In relation to stock work, the union is gaining a strong foothold in the mushrooming tent outlets. Servicing of some of the canvastops may have to be relegated to apprentices because of the unavailability of regular members. ATPAM is also continuing to plug for wider barn employment of its members.

The 544 members of the union include 29 admitted during the 12-month period. A breakdown of the total membership takes in 454 in the overall category, in addition to 60, local areas; 15, music; 1, circus; 13, roadshow; and 1, Canada. As of last March 31, the union's cash account totalled $51,160, an increase of $9,246 over the previous year.

'DESK SET' PROFIT NOW 60G ON A 75G STAKE

"Desk Set," the William Marchant comedy, has earned nearly $60,000 profit thus far on its $75,000 investment. That's figured on a $51,785 profit as of a March 31 accounting, plus additional income for the ensuing five weeks.

The Shirley Booth starrer dropped $4,077 during the four weeks covered in the audit, but the management began using two-for-ones and business has since been running at a profitable pace. Income on the Robert Fryer-Lawrence Carr production includes coin from the 20th-Fox purchase of the film rights for $75,000 down, plus weekly payments up to a $75,000 ceiling.

The profit distribution, as of the accounting, was $15,000. It's been raised to $30,000 since then, with the backers and management splitting 50-50. The show is in its 29th week at the Broadhurst, N.Y.

The Final Ace

London, May 11.

Stewart-Field Productions presentation of a drama in three acts (six scenes), by Charles Fenn. Features John Stuart, Lloyd Lamble, Michael Peake. Staged by Jack McNaughton; decor, Jefferson Strong. At New Lindsey Theatre Club, May 7, '56; $1.50 top.

Lt. St. John Buxton....Michael Browning
Suling ..... Silvia Herklots
Lt. Col. Hedingham..... John Stuart
Maj. Preston ..... David King
Brig. Evan Carding..... Lloyd Lamble
Maj. Wayne C. Mulhauser USAAF. Peter Hutton
Gen. Kwok ..... Michael Peake
Lee ..... Mah Gunn Pang
Prof. Chai ..... John Cazabon

Jennie ..... Tsai Chin
Ah Chung ..... Soon Cheh Siong
Mrs. Chai ..... Sally Lewis

Because of its political slant, Charles Fenn's play would perhaps be questionable material for Broadway, but in the more temperate climate in London it may justify a transfer from its present club situation to a regular West End run. It is an expertly written piece, sustained by action and drama, with the right levening of comedy dialog.

"The Final Ace" is set in China during World War II and purports to show how the Chinese Nationalists were more concerned at combating Red influence than fighting the invading Japanese army. Bridges were left intact to facilitate the enemy advance, for to have blown them up might have been costly to Chinese transport companies ready to come to terms with the conquerors.

The main point of focus is a small British intelligence unit aware of the double-dealing between the Chinese and the Japs. There is also an American liaison officer afraid to use Red agents to help the allies, as he fears the possible effects on his law practice back home. The final scene in which a power station is dynamited by the British without prior consultation with the Chinese general is good dramatic stuff.

Lloyd Lamble as the British commander, Michael Peake as the Chinese general and John Stuart as a Colonel head a good team of performers. Silvia Herklots impresses by her sincerity as a Chinese student who acts as interpreter.

Jack McNaughton's staging is taut and positive. Myro.

The House By the Lake

London, May 10.

Peter Daubeny presentation of a drama in three acts (four scenes), by Hugh Mills. Stars Flora Robson, Andrew Cruickshank. Staged by John Fernald; decor, Fanny Taylor. At Duke of York's Theatre, London, May 9, '56; $2.35 top.

Col. Forbes ..... Frank Royde
Stella ..... Jenny Laird
Janet ..... Flora Robson
Brenda ..... Doreen Morton
Maurice ..... Andrew Cruickshank
Colin ..... Paul Lee
Iris ..... Sylvia Coleridge
Mr. Howard ..... Alan MacNaughtan
Nurse Thomson ..... Annette Kerr

There's not much mystery in this new murder meller and hardly enough dramatic tension to make it a West End hit. Its main strength is in its excellent acting, with notable performances by Flora Robson and Andrew Cruickshank.

The main fault with the Hugh Mills play is that it attempts to be ingenious, but only succeeds in becoming too contrived. The author has a good and interesting basic idea, but has allowed the plot to become involved and complex, without compensating suspense angles.

It takes too long to build up to the final-act climax. The murder attempt under hypnosis, to get rid of an embarrassing witness, is too theatrical to be convincing.

The actual murder in the play is carried out in full audience view—and there's no surprise element there. The plot, however, poses two consequential questions. Firstly, will the ex-doctor and his sister, who committed the crime against their half-brother, get away with it. Secondly, will the dead man's wife, who admitted murderous intentions, be wrongly accused?

Oddly enough, Flora Robson has little more than a negative role for the first two acts, but comes into her own with a powerful final act scene. She plays the part of the ex-doctor's wife, a former manic-depressive, who had twice before her marriage attempted suicide.

The doctor had cured her by hypnosis and when he discovers she knows too much he puts her in a trance and persuades her to commit suicide. The police stop it, however, just before she is due to pull the trigger.

Andrew Cruickshank gives a restrained and sincere performance as the architect of the well-planned murder, but who carelessly leaves a string of clues behind. Jenny Laird appears a little too tensed-up as his partner-in-crime. Sylvia Coleridge makes a vital impression as the dead man's hysterical wife.

The play is tautly staged by John Fernald, and Fanny Taylor's single set is suitable. Myro.

Call Girl

Glasgow, May 11.

Jack Gillam Ltd. presentation of comedy-drama in two acts, by Robert Colwyn. Staged by John H. De Lannoy; settings, Jack Chambers. At Empire Theatre, Glasgow, May 7, '56; 80c top.

Pearl ..... Claudine Morgan
Man ..... Freddy Lees
Gordon Craig ..... Leonard Kingston
Little Man ..... John Chilver
Constable ..... Bernard Stevens
Young Woman ..... Helen McLaren
Elderly Gentleman..... Arthur Barclay
Ruby ..... Mary Kean
Toni Mancini ..... Robert Vaughan
Miss Thompson ..... Jocelyn Ring
Tottie ..... Mary Robertson
Bertha ..... Jill Chadwick
Constable ..... Ryan Jelfs

Simple plot based on the sordid theme of prostitution in an English city is obviously geared only for curiosity value. Billed "for adults only," it is merely cheap entertainment for unsophisticates.

Locale is the Soho and Kensington areas of contemporary London, the action ranging from a side street at night to a call-girl flat in classier Kensington the following evening. The yarn offers an elementary expose of the call-girl racket as operated in most large cities, and aims to point a moral tempered with humor.

The players do a commendable job with cheapjack documentary-style material. Mary Kean portrays sincerity as wife of an investigating journalist, leaving the customers wondering if she is or is not a call-girl herself until almost the final curtain.

Leonard Kingston and Robert Vaughan score as the scribe and call-girl operator respectively, and Jocelyn Ring is suitably enigmatic and bitter as the secretary with a longtime grievance.

John H. De Lannoy has staged adequately, and the Jack Chambers settings of the call-girl office and flat are so-so. Gord.

The Lass Wi' The Muckle Mou'

Edinburgh, May 11.

Henry Sherek presentation of comic fantasy, by Alexander Reid. Stars Stanley Baxter, Mairhi Russell. Lennox Milne. Directed by Edward Burnham; decor, Joy Stanley; harp music arranged and played by Jean Campbell. At Lyceum Theatre, Edinburgh, May 7, '56; $1.20 top.

Lady in Green ..... Marillyn Gray
Thomas the Rhymer..... Ian Bannen
Sir Gideon Murray..... Stanley Baxter
Lady Grizel ..... Lennox Milne
Meg Murray ..... Mairhi Russell
Lizzy ..... Mary Helen Donald
Wattie Duncan ..... Roy Kinnear
Jock ..... Michael O'Halloran
Rab ..... Norman Fraser
Willie Scott ..... Roddy McMillan

Comedy-fantasy by Alexander Reid is an amusing treatment of old ballads and legends of the Scottish borderlands, where families were regularly feuding and fighting. With fairyland settings by Joy Stanley, and crisply directed by Edward Burnham, it provides acceptable humor for native trade, but has little general appeal.

It's based on an old Scot joke about Thomas the Rhymer, a country poet who has spent seven years in elfland and returns to earth to write a final ballad. He finds his potential material at the mansion home of Elibank as the Scott family is about to steal the Murray family's cattle. Willie Scott, played with relish by Roddy McMillan, is captured and given the choice of either being hanged or marrying the daughter of Sir Gideon Murray.

Mairhi Russell reveals naive humor in the portrayal of daughter Meg, the lass whose muckle mou' (large mouth) has scared off all likely suitors. Stanley Baxter, despite his own youth, scores as Sir Gideon Murray, the irascible old gent who captures Willie Scott on his cattle-raid.

Lennox Milne gives a good portrayal of his wife, Lady Grizel, full of tactful practicability. Ian Bannen plays Thomas the Rhymer, who finds ready material in the rustic story of love and thieving. Gord.

Look Back in Anger

London, May 10.

English Stage Co. presentation of drama in three acts, by John Osborne. Staged by Tony Richardson. At Royal Court Theatre, London, May 8, '56; $1.75 top.

Jimmy Porter ..... Kenneth Haigh
Alison Porter ..... Mary Ure
Cliff Lewis ..... Alan Bates
Helena Charles ..... Helena Hughes
Col. Redfern ..... John Welsh

Third in the English Stage Co.'s current repertory season of contemporary plays, this first work by an unknown writer shows dramatic instinct that might develop beyond the limited scope in which this one is confined. It consists of a practically nonstop tirade by a young neurotic against his wife, best friend and mankind in general.

Despite the lack of action, the domestic tension is so real and moving that it both repels and holds interest. It is best suited to specialized small audiences and might make a good bet for new-play producing company with a policy of offbeat script.

In a cheap room in a gloomy provincial town, a young couple share their living quarters with the husband's business partner, who acts as a genial buffer between the bully and his mutely placid wife. The husband comes from the slums, she from an aristocratic army family, and it is an inverted form of snobbery that gives rise to his inferiority complex finding its outlet in mental cruelty.

Goaded beyond endurance at the endless abuse and callous indifference to her approaching motherhood, the wife takes her femme friend's advice and goes back to her family. The friend, despite her repugnance at the husband's behavior, succumbs to his virile domination and moves in to share his couch. She packs her grip, however, when the wife, having lost her baby, comes back.

Mary Ure, as the wife, is silent for most of the play, conveying her grief and humiliation without the use of words. When she finally does speak, the words are all the more effective. As the husband, Kenneth Haigh skilfully keeps up the tirade against life, bringing an air of sincerity to his most obnoxious ravings, and even arousing an element of sympathy.

The two friends are well played by Alan Bates and Helena Hughes and play is ably directed by Tony Richardson. Clem.

Show Out of Town

The Dark Lady

Hollywood, April 27.

Masquers presentation of Clancy Cooper's production of drama in two acts (seven scenes), by Jack Bennett. Directed by Frank Cady. Set decorations, Willard D. Scott. At Masquers Club, Hollywood, Cal., April 2, '56; $1 top.

Narrator ..... Jay Jostyn
Maude ..... Marlan Ross
Sgt. Stuart Hunter..... Arthur Marshall
Mary Fitton ..... Gloria Saunders
Gabriel Spencer ..... Richard Aherne
Hostess Hasty ..... Mary Carroll
Nettles ..... Frank Cady
Christopher Marlowe..... Gene Evans
William Shakespeare..... Peter Hansen
Ben Jonson ..... Paul F. Smith
William ..... John Qualen
Guards.....Howard Townsend, Robert Bridges

The world of Shakespeare, Marlowe and Ben Jonson provides the backdrop for this new two-acter by Jack Bennett which was launched on an experimental basis by the Masquers, local theatrical clubs. "The Dark Lady" an engrossing drama with commercial possibilities despite its highly literate background.

Actually, however, the brightest future for "The Dark Lady" seems to lie in the field of platform presentation along the lines of the experimental tryout here. Bolstered by a couple of names, it could probably clean up on the rejuvenated Chautaqua circuit of colleges and civic organizations and eventually attract interest for a limited Broadway stand.

Script spans approximately 36 hours of the week in which "Romeo and Juliet" was premiered. Bennett has taken two isolated incidents from history (the murder of Marlowe in a tavern and Jonson's fatal stabbing of a tavern roisterer) and juxtaposed them as the climax of his script.

The villain of the piece is the title character, a lady of the court who dangles both Marlowe and Shakespeare, unbeknownst to them, while she actually is in love with a second rate actor. In the Bennett script, the actor eventually kills Marlowe and is in turn killed by Jonson.

Effectively produced in the platform technique by Clancy Cooper, "Lady" has been skillfully directed by Frank Cady. The players stand before lecterns to read their lines, but there is an occasional flash of action to leaven the wordiness.

In the tryout production, fine performances by Gene Evans, Peter Hansen and Paul F. Smith as Marlowe, Shakespeare and Jonson, respectively, carry the bulk of the work. There is notable support from Gloria Saunders in the title role, Marian Ross as her maid, and Cady is around for standout comedy in a lesser role, with a bright assist from John Qualen. Kap.

The N. Y. City Center Light Opera Co. is sticking to form with "Kiss Me, Kate." It's a quality production, somewhat lacking in the performance power of the Broadway original, but major league nevertheless.

Since its 1949 New York preem, "Kate" has received wide showcasing on the road, in stock and as a film. Its popularity attests to the click values in Sam and Bella Spewack's breezy book and Cole Porter's lilting showscore and snappy lyrics. The vet tunesmith really unloaded a barrage of powerhouse numbers for this backstage opus, pegged on Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew."

In the lead roles, Kitty Carlisle and David Atkinson are satisfactory, if not as robust as Patricia Morison and Alfred Drake were in the original Broadway production. Barbara Ruick is good in the part created by Lisa Kirk, but again some of the original sparkle is missing. It's Richard France, though, who grabs top honors in the vocal-hoofing assignment initially handled by Harold Lang. His workover of "Bianca" is particularly strong.

Also standout are Al Nesor and Tom Pedi as the mobster intruders. They've got a natural winner in "Brush Up on Your Shakespeare," which they milk for click results. Besides the scripting and performance aspects, the tuner also has visual impact in Alvin Colt's colorful costumes and Ray Harrison's flashy remounting of Hanya Holm's original choreography. Burt Shevelove's staging likewise rates on the credit side.

"Kate" is the second in a string of three musical revivals being presented at the Center this spring, each for a three-week run. The initial entry, "The King and I," piled up a sock $141,800 total gross. Windup presentation, which preems May 31, will be "Carmen Jones." Jess.

During the tryout tour of "The Lovers," author Leslie Stevens was quoted in an interview as saying that there's no underlying meaning or message in the drama, but that it's just a story that came to him in virtually supernatural manner. If that's true, then "The Lovers" tends to be a great deal of dramatics to not much point.

The play has an air almost of portentousness, as if the author were striving to say something of significance and depth. No such theme emerges clearly, however, so this Playwrights Co.-Gayle Stine production remains merely a slow, hollow and remote drama that's doubtful boxoffice and unlikely material for films, television or stock.

There remains a sneaking hunch that a completely different production approach might have put it over, at least for a Broadway run. According to trade scuttlebutt, there was some discussion about doing "The Lovers" with top-star leads and stylized direction, something in the manner of "Ondine" a couple of seasons ago. That might have given the play enough glitter to have covered its emptiness. All that is just speculation, however.

Possibly the show's title is ironic. The story is a triangle about a 12th century French lord and peasant girl who meet too late, and whose love is disastrous, bringing death to the three principals and sorrow to a whole community. The three dead finally get the blessing of the church, so perhaps the drama is saying that even though circumstances may be too big for us, and love cannot save us, there is salvation in heaven.

The yarn, as a program note explains, deals with "Jus primae noctis" ("right of the first night)", or "Droit du seigneur," a custom alleged to have existed in mediaeval Europe giving the lord the right to sleep the first night with the bride of any of his vassals. In "The Lovers," the switch is that the lord is a decent fellow who falls genuinely in love with the girl.

She instinctively returns his passion, even though she still loves her husband and wishes to return to him. Circumstances overwhelm them, however, and in order to prevent rebellion by the peasants and wholesale loss of innocent lives, the girl kills herself, and the lover and husband slay each other in combat over her corpse.

That keys the drama's prime "problem," the thread that runs through its entire length. Namely, whether the bodies of a suicide and the victims of a crime of passion may be given the sacrament and burial in holy ground. "The Lovers" alternates between a gentle, courageous monk's quest for the facts of the story and flashback scenes of the events themselves. The device seems needlessly complicated and, if the author's disclaimer of "message" is justified, it is pointless as well.

Stevens, who first drew critical attention a couple of seasons ago with the off-Broadway drama "Bullfight," and then missed last year with a farce titled "Champagne Complex," writes with considerable force in this third-produced work, and the audience pays it the compliment of hushed attention throughout. Despite its interest-holding quality, however, it remains unmoving.

The piece is played with varying skill. As the lord whose good instincts brings his destruction, Darren McGavin is persuasive, with suitable swagger and a disarming air of conviction. Vivian Nathan is believably forceful as an indomitable peasant woman whose determination to win last unction for the deceased husband and wife finally overcome the monk's resistance.

Hurd Hatfield is plausible in the somewhat monotonous role of the monk. Morris Carnovsky gives stature to the part of the bridegroom's grief-stricken father, and Robert Burr, Pernell Roberts and Robert Lansing are acceptably swashbuckling as the lord's henchmen-brothers. Joanne Woodward is decorative in the confusingly written part of the bride and Mario Alcade vehement as the avenging groom.

Michael Gordon's careful staging does little to expedite a rather deliberate drama, although an occasional crowd scene has propulsive movement. Charles Elson's scenery, consisting of varied-level platforms, a cyclomama and complex lighting, is mood-suggesting and avoids scene-change delays, but of course can't tighten the script or hustle the playing. John Boyt's costumes properly contrast the status of peasants, clergy, lords and temporal officials.

Inside Stuff Legit

Vincent Sheean, biographer of "Oscar Hammerstein I," may open an old argument anent the famous Cherry Sisters, long known as "the world's worst act." Iowa siblings, brought to Broadway in 1896 by the great Oscar, reputedly performed behind a net, which was rigged across the stage to protect the girls from vegetables, etc. tossed by the customers.

Sheean makes much of the Cherrys' net in his book. Girls themselves (Addie, last survivor of original quartet, died in Cedar Rapids in the early 1940s), denied ever using the protective net. Pros and cons on the net were liberally aired during the mid-'40s in Ward Morehouse's drama column in late N. Y. Sun. Correspondents, submitted no proof positive on either side. Sheean's assertions probably derive from "research."

For once, the author's usually impeccable flair for facts deserts him. Sheean neglects to list Effie, the Cherry Sister who, with Addie, survived longest. Girls formed a familiar antique duo on the smalltime "comeback" trail for many years. Jessie and Lizzie, the other sisters, died quite young.

Addie once ran for mayor of Cedar Rapids on an anti-nicotine and curfew platform and almost got elected as a local rib! Sheean errs in identifying the girls' top number. It was not "Curfew Shall Not Ring Tonight," but "The Gypsy's Warning"—and Hammerstein paid the girls $1,000 weekly, not $100, as Sheean states. Act was also known by its play-on tune, paraphrasing "Ta-Ra-Ra-Boom-De-Ay" ("Cherry Sisters Here to Stay!")

You can now grab a meal and order theatre tickets at the same time at Rosoff's restaurant, N. Y. The new service is being offered as part of a campaign to lure legitgoer patronage. The eatery is installing a theatre booth next Friday (15), which will contain theatrical periodicals, play reviews, legit reference books and seating arrangements of all theatres, plus a direct wire to a broker to take care of diners interested in purchasing tix. The restaurant is also redesigning its menu to include a map of Broadway on the back cover and weekly performer profiles on the inside. Special fast-service theatre dinners are also offered.

The recent "Man in the News" profile of Frank Loesser in the N. Y. Times was written by N. Y. Times drama department staffer Arthur Gelb. The occasion, of course, was the generally favorable critical reception a couple of days previously of "Most Happy Fella," for which Loesser wrote the book, music and lyrics. The "Man in the News" profiles, a fairly new feature in the Times, are contributed by staff members. The writers get no extra pay for the assignment, and no by-line. The only other legit profile was of Julie Andrews, femme costar of "My Fair Lady," a couple of day's after the musical's preem. It was written by Sam Zolotow.

SHEEAN'S KEEN BIOG ON HAMMERSTEIN I

By ROBERT DOWNING

"Oscar Hammersten I" by Vincent Sheean (Simon & Schuster; $5) is a definite life of the eminent impresario. Hammerstein's grandson, Oscar II, supplies a preface revealing that he and his late uncle, Arthur Hammerstein, once assembled material on Oscar I for a contemplated biopic.

Arthur himself was regarded the best authority on his father, having weathered Hammerstein's grand opera period as a "kind of general lieutenant." Data was also gathered from music critics, newspapers, players, singers, theatre employees, members of Oscar's immediate family, and many who remembered "Mr. Times Square" in his heyday.

This information, made available to Sheean, was reinforced liberally from contemporary recollections of Carl Van Vechten, Mary Garden and others, and from the indispensable Prof. George C. D. Odell's "Annals of the N.Y. Stage."

Born in Germany in 1847 or '48, Hammerstein migrated to America in 1863. He became apprenticed to a cigar manufacturer. To the end of his days, Oscar made his own cigars (smoking at least 25 daily). In his prime, he published successful tradepapers for the tobacco industry, and he invented a cigar-making machine which he was able to sell to finance his initial foray into opera.

Hammerstein visualized his theatres on many plots of important Manhattan realestate; and he lived to build most of his dream houses. His first was the Harlem Opera House at the corner of 7th Ave. and 125th St.

A quondam composer and lifelong worshipper of music, Oscar's normal acumen vanished when ghostly woodwinds and sopranos took flight in his brain. While he was able to bring the entrenched Metropolitan Opera to the brink of ruin with his own Manhattan Opera House and its great stars, time and again his vagaries in the realm of music bankrupted his successful enterprises.

In this period (the late '90s), Hammerstein constructed his fabulous Olympia—same site as today's Criterion Theatre—at Broadway and 45th St. (with its built-in Lyric Theatre, and its Winter Garden rooftop, cooled with a waterfall; predecessor of the waterfall now occupying the same site atop the building facing the Astor Hotel). Oscar had built the Columbus, his second Harlem theatre. Yet to come were his Victoria and Republic theatres—houses which established his priority in Times Square and made Hammerstein the undisputed pioneer sponsor of this section as the heart of the entertainment world.

In the days of his greatest opulence, Oscar lived in a single room in one of his theatres, content with a cot to sleep on and a piano on which to compose his unsuccessful music. He preferred streetcars to hacks, and liked to sup alone on oyster stew at Childs. He died in 1919.

Karl Krug, drama critic of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, is in town through next Saturday (19) to catch the Broadway shows.

Off-Broadway Shows

The Iceman Cometh

Circle In the Square revival of tragedy in four acts by Eugene O'Neill. Staged by Jose Quintero; setting and lighting, David Hays; costumes, Deidre Cartier. At Circle In the Square, N.Y., May 8, '56; $3.60 top.

Cast: Farrell Pelly, Phil Pheffer, Albert Lewis, Addison Powell, William Edmonson, Richard Abbott, Richard Bowler, James Greene, Paul Andor, Conrad Bain, Peter Falk, Larry Robinson, Patricia Brooks, Gloria Scott Backe, Dolly Jonah, Joe Marr, Jason Robards Jr., Mal Thrône, Charles Hamilton.

To dispense with heresy first, let it be said that Eugene O'Neill's "The Iceman Cometh" could tell its tragic truth in much less than the four hours-plus required in its original production and now being duplicated at Circle In the Square. Since O'Neill did not wish his script tampered with, any cuts in this revival have been so unobtrusively made as to be scarcely noticeable, particularly since Jose Quintero's lovingly leisured direction has kept the play at marathon length.

Having made that concession to contemporary taste for 2½ hours stage traffic, however, it must be stated that "Iceman" is a brilliant study in self-delusion that will doubtless be around when the majority of current "hits" have become so many vague recollections. It may not be expected that Circle In the Square's reincarnation will fare quite that well, but it should be a substantial off-Broadway entry for some time to come.

The words "pipe dream" are used throughout the play like a constantly repeated chord, so there's never any doubt about O'Neill's theme, thesis, moral or what-you-will. The characters (and they are "characters" in the vernacular sense as well) who inhabit the backroom of Harry Hope's saloon are as squalid and verminous as a playgoer is likely to meet. They exist in a world of submerged past and vague tomorrows, obscured in an alcoholic haze, and it's a horrifying moment for each when he is temporarily induced to stop kidding himself.

It is a salesman, a man of venereal disease and uxoricide, who does the unmasking, and Jason Robards Jr. plays the part with frenetic energy, mouth-twisted smile and nervously snapping fingers. If Robards occasionally seems more the dapper vaudevillian than the tortured drummer, he nonetheless has an intellectual comprehension of the man's tragedy that pays off in his fourth act self-exposure.

Quintero's casting has been excellent. His backroom boys are a crumby lot who, almost without exception, are fully realized by the company. As the saloon proprietor, who hasn't been outside for 20 years, Farrell Pelly easily gets at the man's poignancy and warmth. Peter Falk's night bartender has truthful dimension and mordant humor, while Conrad Bain has a subdued, brooding passion as an ex-anarchist.

Among the rest, Dolly Jonah, boasting a near-Bankhead voice, is sharp as a prostie, and Addison Powell is constantly with it as a Harvard grad who finds the bottle an easier way than practicing law. David Hays' capital setting reeks of sawdust, cobwebs and booze.

Absalom

John Bernard Myers and Theatre Artists Inc. production of tragedy in two acts, by Lionel Abel. Staged by Herbert Machiz; settings and costumes, Robert Fletcher; music, John Gruen & Teiji Ito. At Harlequin Theatre, N.Y., May 10, '56; admission by contribution.

Cast: Richard Baublitz, Leo Lucker, George Gaynes, Kurt Bieber, Will Klump, Irma Hurley, Richard Astor, Sol Serlin, Alan Ansara, Stephen Wolfson, Ric Lavin, Robert Morris, Richard Weinkaupf, Bernard Lund, Stephen Wolfson.

In a loft several flights above lower 2nd Ave., John Bernard Myers and Theatre Artists Inc. are presenting a sumptuous production of "Absalom," Lionel Abel's new philosophical examination of the familiar biblical legend. By virtue of the author's pertinent dialog, and the dynamics normally inherent in the story, dynamics which stager Herbert Machiz has carefully underscored, this history of David and his favored son escapes being a pageant-like repetition of the oft-told tale.

That David chose his youngest son, Solomon, for his heir, denying his sentimental choice, and that Absalom rebelled against his father, forcing the latter to have him struck down, is the familiar theme. In leisurely, always thoughtful fashion, Abel explores the father-son relationship, revealing the distance men can be apart and deploring the tragic implications.

This isn't easy theatre and Theatre Artists Inc. doesn't intend that it should be, fancying itself rather as avant-garde. There's nothing wrong with this as long as the act doesn't come capitalized, and that pitfall has been largely avoided.

That it's done with taste, intelligence and some excitement is to Machiz' credit, although his best efforts, and the assist of a competent company, do not rescue the script from static stretches when discussion supplants dramatic action.

George Gaynes (of opera and musical rep) debut in a straight part as David. Be-whiskered and be-crowned, looking like Lear himself, Gaynes gives a thoroughly mature performance that ranges from gentle wisdom to gruff choler. Alan Ansara is the drivingly ambitious Absalom, and although seemingly handicapped by a slight speech difficulty, he has versatility and power.

Leo Lucker provides the play's few amusing thrusts, as a scribe, Will Klump is a clear-spoken but fearsome figure as David's chief warrior, and Irma Hurley, the sole distaffer, has a tender scene with Absalom.

Robert Fletcher's settings and costumes are opulent, a strong emphasis of Theatre Artists Inc. earnest intent. Geor.

The Traitor

Equity Library Theatre revival of drama in two acts by Herman Wouk. Staged by Alfred Christie; setting and lighting, Jock Gaynor. At Lenox Hill, N.Y., May 9, '56.

There's not much zing to Equity Library Theatre's revival of "The Traitor," and scarcely anything to remind that when main-stemmed in '49 it seemed a pretty taut meller. Whether times have prematurely aged Herman Wouk's dramatic comment on loyalty and espionage, or whether the fault's all ELT's, perhaps only a good revival would reveal.

It has been an up-and-down season at Lenox Hill, a couple of the actor's showcases being crackerjack, some being woeful. Serious plays have tended to be very good (skip "The Traitor"), comedies sad. Reports of employment from the showcases, as program-reported, have been good, however, "Home of the Brave" being credited with 100% for its six-person cast within a fortnight.

Choice of plays hasn't seemed as satisfactory as in recent years, and the outfit caught it from several sides on its community series selections. Weakness has frequently been in the direction.

That's where "The Traitor" again is inept. Credit Arthur Seelen, as the venerable professor, with commendable work, say that Ted Jordan is extremely personable as the Navy Lieutenant hot on the trail of a spy.

From Alfred Christie's staging, nobody would suspect that tension can inform the play. Jock Gaynor's tasty act, however, can be examined to advantage when things get too dull. Geor.

The Witchfinders

The Village Repertory Workshop production of drama in three acts by Louis O. Coxe. Staged by Alan Saunders. At Provincetown Playhouse, N.Y., May 6, '56; $2.50 top.

Cast: Marvyn Dorkin, Doris Michael Conaree, Tom Hammond, Lois Unger, Patricia Davies, Kay Levy, Elise Simon, Jac Fraziar, Albert Ahouaf, Gordon Keyes, Bill Hayden, Jay Cossey, Frank McCoy, Richard Kennel, Kim Berkson, Doris Brodwin, Howard Baldwix, Jack Michaels, Frank Pendolpho.

Louis O. Coxe, co-adaptor of "Billy Budd," has written a discursive play, "The Witchfinders," about the life and times of late 17th century Salem, Mass. The Village Repertory Players are giving it a ponderous production at the Provincetown Playhouse.

While "Witchfinders" inevitably calls to mind Arthur Miller's "The Crucible," similarity primarily involves time and place, although some historical characters are common to both. Coxe is concerned with an adulterous relationship between a minister and a Salem housewife, witch hunts forming the dark background.

While there are some penetrating lines, several vivid characters, and two or three sound scenes, Coxe has not written a compelling play. Each dramatic concept is talked to death before the play moves on.

As in "Billy Budd," the individual is trapped by forces beyond his control, the gallows is the end of the road, and the victim goes willingly. In this case, the adulterous young wife is the martyr, and comely Doris Michael Conaree plays the part with simple assurance. The company bogs down quite early, Elise Simon, Tom Hammond and Kay Levy having most luck in weathering through.

Alan Saunders staged. Geor.

In re: Buffalo As Tryout Stand

By SID PFEIFER

Buffalo.

Recent inquiry made to Collier's (N.Y.) Reference Service by an upper New York State resident, which was in turn referred to VARIETY, as to the importance of Buffalo as a stage and roadshow spot has brought out some interesting sidelights. Collier's questioner wanted substantiation of a crack allegedly attributed to Buffalonians that "if it (legit) goes over in Buffalo, it will go over anywhere" and also whether Buffalo was actually "famous as a legit tryout spot."

Buffalo's VARIETY correspondent, called in as consulting expert, advised that any quote indicating that Buffalo's stamp of approval meant approval universally was strictly a misquote and that anything even remotely akin to the idea was never true. No legit attraction has ever really "gone over" in Buffalo for years, except a few already long-established Broadway successes. The Buffalo stamp of approval on a new legiter has proved of no significance elsewhere, even when the show met with the approbation of local newspaper critics. The final fillip in the situation is that even though a show may have "gone over" big elsewhere (including Broadway), it frequently has met with a dreary b.o. in Buffalo.

As for Buffalo being a "famous tryout spot," fact is that the town has been increasingly devoid of legit premieres over the past half-dozen years. Prior to then, there were four or five tryouts each season, but premieres have narrowed down to not more than one or two a year, due to lack of patronage. The past season saw no first showings whatever. As for run-of-the-mill legit bookings, about half of the available touring road companies showed in Buffalo during the past season which is slightly under average both for there and in comparison with other cities. Absence of local public curiosity, and hence support, for premiere performances ultimately doomed Buffalo as a tryout stand. Permanent shuttering of the Erlanger this spring seems the final writeoff on the tombstone of legit in Buffalo.

was turned down three times last year for council membership—once by the nominating committee, a second time when he ran independently and a third time when the council refused to name him as replacement for a council member resignee.

Through a technicality, Ross has been able to attend council meetings as chairman of the advisory committee on chorus matters. Although that does not give him a vote, it enables him to maintain close contact with council matters and, his opponents charge, exercise control over members of his faction.

It's asserted that Ross and such supporters as Ted Thurston, Del Horstmann and Charles Blackwell, have been working with Rebecca Brownstein, former Equity attorney who gets $5,000 a year pension from the union, with the aim of taking over control of Equity.

Also, it's claimed, the group is cooperating with allied forces in the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists and the Screen Actors Guild to gain control of the whole performer union setup. Members of the Ross contingent scoff at such charges.

The regular ticket held a rally Monday night (14) at the Great Northern Hotel, N. Y., to which all Equity members were invited. Bids were posted backstage at various Broadway shows, and were handed out personally by supporters. Both regulars and independents were readying mailings of campaign literature this week, and Bellamy, acting as an individual as distinct from his position as president, sent a postcard to the Equity mailing list urging support of the indie slate.

Tune Up 'Marching Song' At Ann Arbor Festival

Ann Arbor, Mich., May 15.

John Whiting's "Marching Song," originally produced in London two years ago (and not to be confused with John Howard Lawson's drama produced on Broadway in 1936-37), will be presented the week of May 28 at the U. of Michigan drama festival here. Zachary Scott and Lydia St. Clair will play the parts originated in the West End by Robert Flemyng and Diana Wynyard.

The festival opened last night (Mon.) with Judith Anderson in "Black Chiffon," and the balance of the schedule includes Ethel Waters in "Member of the Wedding," opening Next Monday (21); "Tiger at the Gates," with Ernest Graves and Vicki Cummings, June 4, and Billie Burke in "Solid Gold Cadillac," June 11.

Col Views 'Happy Fella' As Opera for Disk Play; 3 'Full Loesser' LP's

Although there's been some confusion in legit circles as to whether Frank Loesser's "The Most Happy Fella" is a musical comedy, a musical play or a play with music, Columbia Records is going to treat it as an opera, at least for its original cast album. Label has now decided to wax "Fella" in full, complete with song and dialog.

Originally planned as a two-12-inch LP package, the new version will now fill three 12-inch LPs. Decision to go wholehog on "Fella" was made when Loesser gave the diskery the greenlight to cut all of the show. A single LP excerpting the big package will also be released.

In the past, tunesmiths and producers have nixed the use of anything more than a few introductory lines of dialog before the song. The three-pocketer will be priced at $14.98. Previous tab for the two-pocket edition had been set at $9.98.

First disk session was held Sunday (13) with another skedded for the following Sunday. Because of the unusual size of the album, Col is holding separate smaller sessions during the week.

St. Loo to Cool Off

St. Louis, May 15.

Two more humidifiers, huge aluminum fans in 30-foot towers, will be installed in the Municipal Theatre Assn. alfresco playhouse in Forest Park here this summer to combat the heat. They will be ready for the opening of the season June 7 and will double the number of such air cooling devices.

Tests last summer showed a reduction of humidity of 15% to 30%. The humidifiers are operated before the curtain rises and between acts.

'Ziegfeld Follies'

lieved to have taken in 10-15% of the gross for show's star, Tallulah Bankhead.

The Winter Garden rental is based on a capacity take, with the house getting 30% of the first $20,000 gross and 25% of the balance. Tickets for the 1918 version were scaled to a $3 top, while the contemplated high at the Winter Garden was $8.80. The 1918 production was booked for a 10-week N. Y. run, to be followed by a road tour, which was where the "Follies" usually made its profit. The Kollmar and Gardiner show would have had to run 28 weeks at cacity, on the basis of its estimated $14,400 weekly profit, to get into the black.

The royalty setup on the recent folderoo included 6% of the gross to the authors, 2% to the directors, 2% to the choreographer and 1½% to the Shuberts and Billie (Mrs. Florenz Ziegfeld) Burke for permission to use the title. Metro, which produced the film version of the "Follies" was down for $250 per week.

Kollmar was quoted over the weekend as claiming that enough additional financing had been raised to reopen the "Follies" in New York next September, at either the Winter Garden or Shubert Theatre. The co-producer said "positively."

TEAHOUSE IN SPANISH IS HAVING HEADACHES

The Spanish touring company of "Teahouse of the August Moon" is having a rough time. Biz has been sluggish in the three cities played thus far, Havana, Caracas and Rio de Janeiro. Technical problems, poor advance publicity and language difficulties have been mentioned as some of the adverse factors.

Additionally, two cast members, Tei Ko and Stephen Courtleigh, were forced to leave the show because of illness, while expenses were hiked when the scenery was damaged in transit and had to be rebuilt. The productions is current at the Teatro Solis, Montevideo.

Jean Dalrymple, who co-produced the Spanish version with Rita Allen and Jess Hartman, and Robert C. Schnitzer, general manager of the International exchange program of the American National Theatre and Academy, left N. Y. for Montevideo last week to o.o. the situation.

'CAN-CAN' NICE $38,100 FOLDS TOUR IN WASH.

Washington, May 15.

After two years and two months on Broadway and almost 10 months more on the road, "Can-Can" folded in Washington last Saturday night (12) with a smash $38,100 gross for the eight performances. The take, in the 1,677-seat National Theatre was against a house potential of $50,164. National was scaled to $4.95 with $5.50 top for weekends.

The Saturday night take of $7,009.60 (excluding tax) was the highest in the National's history, and the only time the theatre ever took in more than $7,000 for one performance. There were standees for Friday and Saturday night, and scores of turnaways Saturday.

The National is dark this week, but reopens May 21 for a run of several weeks with "Teahouse of the August Moon," with a record advance sale likely.

'Breakfast' $4,600 in 12; Rochester Stock Winds

Rochester, May 15.

Local audiences ate up the Dorothy Chernuck-Omar Lerman production of "Wedding Breakfast," which grossed a fine $4,600 for 12 performances at the Arena Theatre here. Run ended Sunday (13). Several cuffo musical productions in Highland Park Bowl comprise all the stage activity that will be available in the Rochester area this summer.

'Shangri' $45,000, Suspends in Hub

Boston, May 15.

For the first time all season, all legit houses are dark this week. "Shangri-La" cancelled its third week at the Shubert to rehearse.

Lew Ayres left the "Shangri-La" cast last week, was replaced by Jack Cassidy. Shirley Yamaguchi, the Jap film actress, replaced Susan Cabot and Ed Stroll took the Jack Cassidy role of Mallinson.

Over the weekend, also, Albert Marre took over the staging from Marshall Jamison, the latter learning of the switch only by reading it in the papers. Meanwhile, producers Robert Fryer and Lawrence Carr have announced that the show will resume in Philadelphia next week and open June 7 at the Winter Garden, N.Y.

Hub critics gave "Shangri-La" tepid reviews at the opening and couldn't enthuse about it after seeing the replacements. However, audience reception has been o.k.

The local legit season winds up with two openings next week, "Teahouse of the August Moon," Chicago company, at the Colonial Tuesday night (22) in for three weeks, and "New Faces of 1956" at the Shubert opening Friday night (25) in for two weeks before Broadway. Lone extender of the season will be "Pajama Game" to open at the Shubert in June. Technically, that rates as a next season entry.

Detroit, May 15.

Previous week, the musical drew $43,200; first week, $35,300. Show remains three more weeks.

'Follies' $39,400, Folds in Philly; 'Teahouse' $45,795

Philadelphia, May 15.

Collapse of the "Ziegfeld Follies" last Saturday night (12) left "Teahouse of the August Moon" the sole local legiter. "Follies" gave up the ghost, cancelling a third stanza here after failure of last-minute attempts to dig up fresh coin.

Show needed an estimated $50,000 to make needed changes, according to producers Richard Kollmar and James W. Gardiner. The musical needed over $55,000 gross to break even, and both weeks in Philly the gross fell far below that figure. Boxoffice had to return more than $23,000 in advance ticket sales on third week.

Although the cast was reported in complete accord, from Tallulah Bankhead down, two femme leads had left the show, Carol Haney, with injured kneecap, and Joan Diener, who quit.

'Teahouse' $25,800 in 7, Belafonte $4,000 in 2

Omaha, May 15.

First legit b.o. successes of the entire season were racked up last week, with "Teahouse of the August Moon," starring Larry Parks, and Harry Belafonte's "Sing, Man, Sing!" both luring good grosses.

"Teahouse" pulled $20,200 in five performances Monday-Thursday (7-10) at the 3,000-seat Paramount Theatre on a $3.85-$1.65 scale. The John Patrick-Vern Sneider comedy added $5,600 in two performances Saturday (12) at the Auditorium, Sioux Falls, S. D., for a $25,800 total for the seven-show week.

Belafonte show registered a trifle over $4,000 for two shows Friday evening (11) at the 2,626-seat City Aud Music Hall. There was a $3.30 top. Previous legit entries here this season, "Kismet," "Tea and Sympathy" and "Bad Seed" all took financial lickings.

'BOY' SLUGGISH $21,200 FOR FULL WEEK, MPLS.

Minneapolis, May 15.

Despite favorable reviews and word of mouth, "Boy Friend" found the boxoffice going rough, grossing a light $21,200 for six nights and two matinees last week at $4.95 top in the 1,850-seat Lyceum where the potential was about $53,000. Fact that it immediately preceded into town "Teahouse of the August Moon" and the Metropolitan Opera Co., both current this week, apparently hurt the Martin & Feuer musical.

"Boy Friend" played an additional Sunday night (13) here and then went into St. Paul for two nights and a matinee (14-15). "Teahouse," with Larry Parks, opened at Lyceum last night (Mon.) with a $35,000 avance sale for the 10-day engagement.

'Yankees' Slump, $32,300, Opening Week in Pitt

Pittsburgh, May 15.

Despite the usual weekend spurt at higher scale, "Damn Yankees" had a losing $32,300 in its first stanza at 1,700-seat Nixon last week. Top is $5.40 weeknights and $6.60 Friday and Saturday nights. Potential capacity at scale runs close to $50,000. Excellent reviews, good word-of-mouth and constant newspaper encouragement, failed to overcome Pittsburgh lethargy, but with the second week current it remains to be seen whether a fortnight is too long a stand for the town.

It doesn't look as if the Nixon will get anything more in the legit line this season.

Berlin's Rugged Concert Pace

Play Once Every Two Days—165 Concerts a Year—New American Tour—Salzburg in 1957

Berlin, May 15.

From Oct. 1 to Nov. 20 the Berlin Philharmonic will, for the second time, tour the United States. New tour will also include Canada. Besides going to America, a number of important concert dates in West Germany, Italy, Switzerland and Austria (at the 1957 Salzburg Festival) are also in the works.

Philharmonic's home town schedule calls for performance once every two days during the season, 165 concerts in all, of which 70 will be conducted by Herbert von Karajan, orch's chief conductor. Latter, incidentally, recently signed a lifetime contract with the Philharmonic.

According to Dr. Gerhart von Westermann, manager of the Berlin Philharmonic, several famous conductors and soloists will appear with the orch, including Sir John Barbirolli, Pierre Fournier, Niconar Zabaleta, Jakob Gimpel, Robert Casadeus, David Oistrakh, Elizabeth Schwarzkopf and others.

Glasgow, May 15.

Britain's Carl Rosa Opera Co. is looking for a permanent theatre with adequate workshops for scenery and costumes. Company is now in hands of a trust, working with the Arts Council of Great Britain.

Mrs. H. B. Phillips, long the manager, revealed a search here and in other British provincial centers with view to setting up a new home for the Carl Rosa. She foresees a happier future for grand opera after current transition period induced by television's developments.

Mrs. Phillips, who, with her late husband, has been responsible for Carl Rosa management over past 30 years, concedes that grand opera will always be costly, but sees its cultural value justifying subsidy. Present Carl Rosa group numbers 120, including orch of 40 and chorus of 36.

Rating the Disks

Kodaly: Hary Janos; Respighi: Feste Roman (RCA Victor). Arturo Toscanini's 1947 broadcast of Zoltan Kodaly's symphonic suite with the NBC Symphony is characteristically firm, precise, brilliant. The Respighi poem, third in the cycle of works including the previously recorded "Fountains of Rome" and "Pines of Rome," is another sweeping piece of program music. Superbly recorded for hi-fi demonstration purposes.

Johann Michael Haydn: Concerto for Obligato Viola, Keyboard Instrument & Orchestra; Joseph Haydn: Symphony In B-Flat Major (Unicorn). Another traditional 18th Century work by Michael Haydn, the lesser-known brother of Joseph Haydn, played with grace and charm by the Vienna Orchestral Society under F. Charles Adler with Paul Angerer and Marjorie Mitchell soloists. Unrecorded before, this disk is part of the process of filling in the gaps in the classical repertory started with the advent of longplay disks. The Joseph Haydn symphony, also in this album, is still another first recording from the composer's vast catalog.

Irmgard Seefried (Decca). Irmgaard Seefried, the German soprano, is showcased in varied song selections from Schubert, Brahms, Mussorgsky, Bartok, Wolf and Richard Strauss. Her full, flawlessly controlled voice has been lucidly recorded in various German concert halls at actual performances. There is some enthusiastic and hence noisy applause which may recreate the concert atmosphere, but is nonetheless disturbing on repeated plays. Herm.

Milton Cross Rides Again

Milton Cross, radio announcer and opera commentator, has entered a deal with Artists-Producers Associates to do the introduction and narration for "Life and Music of Guiseppe Verdi" and "Figaro, the Barber of Seville." A-PA has distribution rights to the two film imports.

Agreement also calls for Cross to render similar services on the company's future longhair music product.

Philly Won't, But Hub Symph Will Okay USSR Bid

Boston, May 15.

Boston Symphony Orchestra members are jumping with enthusiasm over the possibilities of going to Soviet Russia. The 104 members voted almost unanimously when queried by management.

Invitation from Russia is to extend European tour five days or so. As in the case of the "Porgy and Bess," the Soviet government guarantees expenses no matter what the gross.

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., business manager of the orch, has been in Washington talking over plans with Robinson McIlvaine, State Dept. deputy assistant for public affairs.

In Boston it's understood the Philadelphia Orchestra voted unanimously against a trip to Russia and their nix opened the way for Boston.

David Oistrak, Soviet violinist, played with the Philadelphia Orchestra during his American tour last year, a factor that entered into the Russian invite going to that city first.

Localites are going to be in West Europe and the Scandinavian countries during August and September, and officials are optimistic that it can be arranged to detour into Russia.

Dickinson Play as Opera

"Eastward in Eden" a legiter dealing with Emily Diekinson, will be presented as an opera in January for three performances at the Colonial Theatre, Boston.

Dorothy Gardner, who wrote the play, has also supplied the libretto. Jan Meyerowitz did the music.

Seashore Opera

Wesley Boynton and Morse Haithwaite will again operate the Arundel Summer Opera Theatre at Kennebunkport, Me. "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Rigoletto," "Carmen" and "Kismet" will be among the productions.

Boynton and Haithwaite in winter produce operettas at colleges.

Roland Petit A West End Smash

London, May 15.

Roland Petit Ballet, which opened a month's run at the Palace Theatre last Tuesday (8), under the management of Peter Daubeny, scored an artistic and commercial success with a program of four one-act ballets, highlighted by their presentation of "Carmen." With a top of $3.50 for the orchestra stalls, the company is able to gross upwards of $17,000 a week for eight performances, putting its potential above average for musicals in the same venue.

All four ballets had choreography by Petit, but his verison of "Carmen" is way ahead of the others. Taking full advantage of the Bizet music, he has fashioned a colorful and lively production, enhanced by his own high level dancing and the skill and polish of his wife, Renee Jeanmaire.

The opening item in the program is the Jean Anhouilh and Georges Neveux ballet, "Le Loup," a grotesque narrative, superbly danced by Petit and Violette Verdy in the principal roles. "La Chambre" by Georges Simenon is a typical French example of surrealist art, and "Les Belles Damnees" is a diverting trifle. The four ballets combined make an exceptional program and should be a smash b.o. and artistic success. Myro.

MET'S BIG SVENSK STAND

'Meistersinger' Ducats Alone Lag (For Sunday Matinee)

Minneapolis, May 15.

Due here for four performances this week (17-20), the Metropolitan Opera chalked up advance sale of $96,000.

In the 4,850-seat Northrop Auditorium at $7.50 top, $103,000 represents capacity and that's practically assured. This is the company's 11th annual visit here.

Three of the four operas—"Rigoletto," "Aida" and Boris Godunov"—went clean from mail orders. The only tickets left when the boxoffice sale opened last week were for "Die Meistersinger" Sunday matinee (19).

All-Race Symph Thrives in Hawaii

Barati Takes Smaller Unit on Airplane Island-Hopping Tour

Honolulu and the Hawaiian Islands are hungry for longhair music, according to Dr. George Barati, conductor of the Honolulu Symphony, now in New York to finalize plans for 1956-57 season.

In his six years there Symph has increased annual number of concerts from six to 40. The attendance in same period has jumped over 100% and the budget has zoomed from $15,000 to $90,000. Half boxoffice and half annual fundraising campaign.

Barati considers the Islanders more open-minded on new and unfamiliar music than Stateside audiences. With Tossy Spivakovsky as soloist, he did the Bartok violin concerto, regarded here as heavy going, and it had a great success. He has done other Bartok works, as well as other moderns. His soloists have included such names as Gyorgy Sandor, Joseph Szigeti, Dorothy Maynor, Rose Bampton, Gina Bachauer, Margaret Harshaw, Grant Johannesen and others. Every year, he has a local soloist, in addition to more widely-known name guests.

Barati takes an orch of 35 on an airplane tour of other islands and also conducts summer concerts of lighter fare than regular season. Regular group of 75 includes all races, with some Chinese and Japanese first-chair men.

His Honolulu concerts come close to filling the 2,000 seat hall; on tour last season, to Kauai Island with 25,000 population, his symph played to audiences of 7,000 in four programs, more than one-fourth total population of the island.

Barati also organized a chorus for the symph, which he trained and which joins the orch for choral works. Singers, numbering 175, have performed Beethoven 9th, Mozart Requiem, Haydn's "Creation," "Belshazzar's Feast" by Sir William Walton, other works. Choral events generally draw well, according to Barati. Next season, he will do "Boris Godunov" in concert form, using chorus and guest basso.

Maestro has directed "Traviata," "Carmen" and "Marriage of Figaro" excerpts in his concert programs, and some day plans to head Honolulu opera company.

uproar operatics, some reported, some hinted.

Observers of the American musical scene have been increasingly struck by the seemingly incessant quarrels and dissensions which plague orchestral and operatic organizations almost without exception in this country. Scarcely a musical society has escaped some violent major upheaval which in many instances has torn the organization apart, with the scars remaining in evidence for years afterwards.

Frequent resignations and dismissals of conductors and managers under clouds of rumors and accusations, the sharp conflict and acrimonious recriminations among lay and professional personnel and the sudden drastic shifts and changes in announced plans, policies and programming, each accompanied by the most vehement and sometimes violent airing of bitter partisan charges and countercharges by organization members and sponsors are a recurring and familiar phenomenon of the musical picture. In many cases, influential supporters have been so incensed that they have closed their check books.

Musical Chairs

Game of musical chairs which marked widespread managerial resignations and changes at the beginning of the just-ending season when half a dozen orchestra managers succeeded each other in a round robin of hirings and firings all have posed the question as to what it is that makes the administration and management of musical organizations the most hazardous and unpredictable form of activity in the entire entertainment field. For those who seek the answers, certain facts are emerging as common denominators in the many unhappy situations.

In the first place, it is well known that there is no recognized ultimate head or authority in the administrative make-up of these musical groups which function for the most part on a voluntary basis. few musical societies are set up or administered in reliance on any last-word authority or any well defined division of responsibilities.

This loose organization and haphazard functioning results inevitably in the heads of various departments, such as conductor, manager, personnel director, and the like, feeling free to trespass onto the activities of other departmental heads whenever they choose. The propensity of conductors and musical directors to usurp the functions of management, especially in financial and public relations matters, is a frequent cause of dissension.

The fact that the constitutions and by-laws of most of these societies contain little or no definition of the duties and responsibilities of top personnel or, if they do, that one of the officers or the directorate is sufficiently familiar with them or possess enough courage to insist on their performance adds to the difficulty and confusion.

Amateurs But Autocrats

Membership on boards is generally considered a social red feather rather than a civic responsibility, few of such persons stopping to remember that orchestra operation today must be classed and handled as a big business enterprise, with top bracket budgets, which must be operated on a strictly businesslike basis to assure success. If some member of orchestra directorates were to run their own affairs with the same absence of business judgement as they display in the over-seeing of orchestras, they would probably wind up as insolvent as are some of the organizations which they are attempting to operate.

Lack of business judgment, together with the aforesaid absence of adequate definition of the duties of conductors, managers and the like, and the unwillingness of board members to insist on strict adherence to such definitions where they do exist, which are among the chief cause of the well-publicized headlines and headaches. It is common practice, when a conductor or manager becomes disgruntled over some slight or situation, actual or fancied, to carry his grievance to an influential member or clique of the organization and enlist his or their support. The result is the speedy formation of grim battle lines, and victory or defeat in the ensuing strife results in factional rifts and scisms, culminating in resignations or withdrawals, with the organization as a whole suffering inevitably as a result.

Directors and trustees who up to this time have gone along complacently for the social ride now become violent partisans and all lose sight of their responsibility to the public which in response to public appeals for financial support is footing a large part of the deficits thus created everywhere. Nor has the current exaggerated emphasis on women's auxiliaries with their memberships dedicated to conductor-worship and other offbeat projects proved to be an unmitigated blessing—these subsidiary women's groups frequently ending up as the tail wagging the main dog.

Because most musical societies are unwilling (1) to confer authority upon management or (2) to stand by management once such authority has been conferred, potential trouble is always in the offing. The spectacle of a manager proceeding to carry out a policy announced to have been approved by his directorate and then finding the rug pulled out from under him owing to pressure from other cliques or departments is another frequent manifestation which constitutes one of the big banes of musical societies, and it, together with interference by busybody volunteer officials, has caused some of the greatest griefs these societies have known. It is only where managers are given full authority and where the grant is backed up uncompromisingly by the governing Board that progress is made. In this, musical societies are no different than any other kind of organization; and here as elsewhere the authority and jurisdiction given to managers and conductors must be clearly outlined with specific instructions in the basic "what and what-not to do's" before they can be held accountable for faults or failures in administration.

Exceptions

Once granted such responsibility, management must be left to carry it out and should be credited with its success or held responsible for its failure. The few organizations, such as the Philadelphia and Boston Symphonies, where management has been given a strong independent hand, are good examples of the point and of the result; and if one is looking for proof of what sole undivided ownership and management can do one has but to look to the London Philharmonia. And the management of the New York Philharmonic, while perhaps suspect in other respects, has never been criticized for maladministration.

Regardless of other considerations, no long-term success of an orchestra or musical organization can be long assured without a hard and fast definition of authority covering employees and departmental heads, followed by a hands-off policy after such authority has been conferred. This, together with the insistence of influential sponsors on adherence to previously established plans and policies and the refusal to take sides in any attempts to break down the delegated authority and duties of employees, without consent of the entire membership, would be a giant step in the direction of a successful and certainly happier era in the operation of musical organizations.

Pittsburgh, May 15.

Bill Beegle, who retired from the concert business a few months ago after running the Mae Beegle series, founded by his aunt and operated by his father following her death, for years, is re-entering the field again but only on a partial basis. Together with Bob Baltz, who runs a ticket agency in Volkwein's Music Store downtown, Beegle is bringing Liberace back to town on June 7 for a one-nighter at Syria Mosque.

Baltz will handle most of the promotion since Beegle's now regularly employed as an account executive for the Ketchum, MacLeod & Grove agency.

Mary Dauplaise's 'Big Story'

Mary Dauplaise of the Houston Press was awarded $500 for her "Big Story" which will be dramatized on the Pall Mall tv show Friday (18). Her coverage, and exposure, of medicine man Doc Estep resulted in mumbo-jumbo man being laughed out of town.

Program will be seen locally in Houston on June 1.

News' Show Biz Features

The N.Y. Daily News has been going for show biz-style features of late. It started with Jess Stearn's series on rock 'n' roll, followed by a series on Darryl F. Zanuck. This Monday (14) Kay Gardella and Phil Santora, of the radio-tv department, started a series on "TV's Endless Rate Race (Stars Thrown By A Low Nielsen)."

Incidentally, Stearn, who followed up the r&b series with a feature on "how song hits are made," just had his expose book on "prostitution in New York," titled "Sisters of the Night," published by Messner. It was a direct result of a city room assignment to see why "b" girls, "pony" girls, call girls and out - and - out streetwalkers flourish in a community like N.Y.

Maude Adams Biog

"Maude Adams, an Intimate Portrait," by Phyllis Robbins (Putnam; $5), is the admiring work of one of the late actress' few lifelong friends. Despite her close association with Miss Adams, which produces exhaustive memories, the author really adds little to the "intimate" knowledge of the star; and she provides no solution to the Adams enigma. Since few persons were closer to her for so long a time, Miss Robbins would seem to present the last opportunity for a penetrating study of the most elusive of Charles Frohman's leading ladies.

Beyond liberal quotations from unpublished letters, and food charts prepared by Maude Adams, Miss Robbins' book supplies only continuing documentation of a luminous stage career.

Mike Stern's Encore

Michael Stern, roving European correspondent for Fawcett Publications, returns to his Rome homebase this weekend following story conferences that ranged from New York to Washington and Las Vegas. Among other deals Stern placed his new book, "The Voluptuaries," with MCA's Jay Sanford, with a pix-tv and other rights tied into the publishing package. It's a sequel in the same expose idiom as Stern's "No Innocents Abroad," a Random house bestseller.

Writer broke the Major Holohan case and was frequently on official D.C. consultative call during the recent probe into the alleged murder and sabotage.

pay between $2,500,000 and $3,000,000. He won't say yes or no on "War" until the first project is completed.

Soviet Houses Get Todd-AO

(2) He'll equip one or two Soviet houses to show Todd AO, the projection equipment to come from Eindhoven, Holland.

(3) The U. S. State Dept., which last week informed VARIETY it wasn't consulted by Todd on his coproduction plans, was definitely kept informed every step of the way, says Todd and Ambassador Charles Bohlen had full knowledge of the negotiations (on the outcome of which he was originally skeptical).

Sending Crews Across

(4) The purpose of coproduction with the Russians is "to get people closer together." Todd said there would be separate negatives on each production for Russia and the western world. He'll split the proceeds with the Soviets on a geographical basis, with Moscow keeping income from the Red orbit and Todd retaining the other revennue. The only countries in doubt are India and Yugoslavia.

Todd said he was sending crews, including four American technicians, to Moscow in three weeks preparatory to shooting the first picture. Latter will see him invest "about $500,000" of his own backers' money. He stressed that the Russians he met "liked everything American."

Swap deal with the Soviets gives them the first American picture since the war. "If I had just sold them the film, what do you think I could have gotten?" Todd asked. He said he hadn't contacted the Motion Picture Export Assn. on his deal. MPEA to date has pursued a hands-off policy re the Russians and the satellites.

are Ely Landau's National Telefilm Associates and the networks. Broadcasters' bids are on a selective basis. Wall Street sources are inclined to believe that Chesler has a good chance to sew up the deal although Loew's Inc. prexy Arthur M. Loew is said to be still reluctant to commit the company to any deals involving the outright sale of the films. The $50,000,000 price tag, however, is said to have intrigued the Loew's Inc. topper.

Recent flurry in Loew's stock is attributed to the pending tv agreement. On Monday (14), trading in Loew's shares was especially active, with 55,900 being traded. During the day's activity, the stock hit a new high of 25⅛ for the year, but eased off to 24⅛ at closing, up ½ from the Friday (11) final market price.

According to Wall St. reports, PRM and Ridgeway are prepared to make a down payment of 29½% of the $50,000,000 purchase price, or $14,750,000. The time and method of payment on the remainder is still under discussion, with some wrangling on this point said to be taking place.

The Chesler $50,000,000 bid is for complete worldwide rights to the Metro films and, like the WB deal, would include theatrical, tv, remake, legit and other affilated rights. If Loew's accepts the offer, it would mark an about face in the company's previously stated position. Prexy Arthur Loew is on record as being opposed to an outright sale, preferring a modified leasing or company-controlled distribution to tv. Change in thinking might have been induced by the necessity of settling up the company's funded debt of over $30,000,000 which has to be taken care of before Loew's Inc. splits its shares between the production-distribution company and the new theatre company.

Key figure in the current Chesler negotiations is Edwin L. Weisl, of the law firm of Simpson, Thacher and Bartlett and a board member of Paramount Pictures. Weisl has taken a prominent role in other top-level industry negotiations, having been involved in Louis Lurie's bid to acquire Warner Bros. several years ago.

Ridgeway Corp., auto equipment firm mentioned for the first time in the film bidding, is listed on the big board. It is reported to be in an especially strong cash position, resulting from its buyout of Campbell, Wyant & Cannon and reselling the physical assets to Textron. PRM Inc. is listed on the American Stock Exchange.

like turning the clock back. Finally, RKO Theatres has acquired the Cleveland Arcade Co., active in textiles and other products, including oil and gas in Kansas.

Some see an irony in the fact that it was the small exhibitor who instigated the Paramount antitrust suit, which culminated in divorcement; and it is the same exhibitor who, today, is struggling as never before to survive in the face not only of the tv competition, but also the short-product market created by the studios.

In recent weeks, theatre business throughout the country has been uneven, to say the least. Some big pictures, which by all rules of thumb should have been big grossers, have been disappointing at the b.o. The company presidents met in New York Monday (14) to discuss possible ways of stimulating the business.

"We are only now beginning to realize what a huge mistake divorcement really was," commented a prominent New York circuit man this week. "Perhaps even the Government is beginning to realize that the theatres cannot survive under these conditions." He cited the Justice Dept.'s willingness to allow circuits to go into production as proof of a dawning in Washington that the decree had upset the natural balance of the business to a point where one branch was doomed to shrivel up without the needed flow of product.

Out of the UM&M's own production and distribution stable are "New Orleans Police Dept.," "Hank McCune Show," "Television Court" and "Do You Know Why?"

NTA will absorb the fulltime sales staff of around 18 men from UM&M. The deal marks the end of a fascinating telefilms experiment, a setup under which UM&M had upwards of 175 parttime salesmen working for it. This setup was accomplished via the organizational makeup of the company, since partners in the venture with prez Charles M. Amory were Motion Picture Advertisers Service of New Orleans and United Film Service of Kansas City. These are vet screen commercial producers whose sales staffs were ordered to sell UM&M telefilms as well as the theatre commercials. With NTA having bought out UM&M completely, the two companies will no longer be involved in the selling of the product. As for Amory, he's going to quit the telefilm business for awhile.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Palm Springs, May 15.

Brother, am I waterlogged. Due to "The Man Who Never Was," "Mad Sea," "A Night To Remember" and "The Last Voyage of the Lusitania," I feel I need water wings to walk to the nearest sand dune. And coming up are picture versions of "Moby Dick" and "The Old Man Who Got Clipped of His Marlin By A Stinking Shark"—two salty items that are full of fresh sea breezes and tough going for even fishermen. Even "Carousel" got shifted to the lobster shift and the coast of Maine.

I remember when Don Marquis wanted a day off he reprinted his "Noah, an' Jonah and Cap'n John Smith," which was exactly a column long. In fact, he reprinted it so often that George M. Smith, m.e. of the Evening Sun, wrote him that the next time he did it "by request" to be sure the request was quite overwhelming.

The thing that awed me about that poem was that Don could get away with an apostrophe instead of a letter "d" before Jonah and the full word "and" after it. It must have had something to do with the rhythm. Anyway, the printers learned to respect his caprices and followed them to the letter.

Lincoln's New Opposition

I began my newspaper career the year the Titanic went down and it seems I haven't been allowed to forget it since. About 25 years ago the English tried a version of the Titanic and in order to keep the heat off them they called it "Atlantic." A few years ago Hollywood tried its hand in a picture starring Clifton Webb. This one, too, dodged putting the finger on anybody. But the Kraft Theatre's television version finally found the heavy. That was the president of the steamship line who was aboard and made it back to land.

Of all of these versions Lord's "A Night To Remember" struck me as the best. It's no easy task to urge a practically dead horse to get up and finish a winner, and Lord made it come off. To leap into another field of metaphors, he reconstructed the sinking out of thousands of pieces and made it a beautiful mosaic. That a picture could be cut so fine I doubt, but there may be editors in Hollywood who could do as well on the screen as Lord did in a book.

As for the Lusitania, which in its latest version by A.A. and Mary Hoehling, has just been brought out by Holt, this seems to be the obverse of the Titanic medal. Whereas the Titanic was coming to New York, the Lusitania was going to Europe, and whereas an iceberg was the chief heavy in the Titanic's sinking, a German U boat's torpedo was the heavy in the Lusitania's terrifying last run.

Ships That Sink In The Night

Since that time so many ships have been sunk by so many submarine torpedoes it seems surprising that people can still be found to react with a peculiar indignation whenever the Lusitania's sinking is brought up. The notice of the Imperial German Embassy that any ship in British waters was liable to destruction was printed in all the newspapers, in most cases in a column adjoining the announcement of the Lusitania's sailing, and taking about the same space. But it was in a day when people didn't believe half of what they read and so "Lusy's" sinking on May 7, 1915, came as a terrific shock, especially to those who thought Americans, not yet in the war, were sacred cows which no mad bull would attack. (Of 159 Americans aboard, 124 drowned, and of 129 children, 94 never made land alive. Altogether 1,198 perished out of 1,959 aboard.)

I remember it was my job on a Sunday morning to interview notables around New York, especially those who were trying to maintain a measure of neutrality in what was considered at that time as a war between two great colonial empires, and as such none of our business.

Most of them were too stunned to affirm that Sunday morning a point of view they had expressed the week before. Only one of them, John Haynes Holmes, of the Community Church, remained an unreconstructed pacifist. The rest in time moved, like Woodrow Wilson, to taking a decisive side against the U boats. By then, having fairly run out of French and British material, the krauts had begun working on our ships.

Death—'Life's Most Beautiful Adventure'

Among those who checked into Davy Jones' locker was of course Charles Frohman, considered at that time the top quality producer shuttling between Broadway and the West End. Also Elbert Hubbard, the sage of East Aurora who had heard from the balcony the ship's orchestra play Carrie Jacobs Bond's "The End of a Perfect Day."

One of Hubbard's closest friends who had been with him for several days before the Lusitania left Pier 54 told me only a few weeks ago that Hubbard was not scared off by the likelihood of the liner's being spurlos versunkt, that in fact he rather welcomed the idea, which goes to show that men can get pretty tired of pitching for big biz.

The Lusitania was supposed to have gone down loaded with gold and divers have been trying for the last 40 years to get their hands on some of it. Some have claimed they have seen its masts above water at low tide off the Irish Coast, but since it sank in a spot about 300 feet deep I suspect they were seeing a mirage. Jim Jarrat, a British diver in 1935, believed he had actually walked across the plates of the Lusitania but an underwater sound camera showed the vessel was lying on its keel and headed toward St. George's Channel.

Captain Turner of the ship, thinking that he was the last man off, was saved and lived for 18 years at Great Crosby, which is not a town named after Bing, but an English settlement. Few of those who survived the sinking are still alive and those seem to be well beyond the three score and ten the Bible figures as a fair shake for those of us who have lived a little sensibly in this mad, mad world.

As for "Mad Sea" I find it hard to believe that I am a contemporary of a guy who actually sailed in clipper ships and square riggers around the Horn 50 years ago. But I am credited by his publishers as having brought the book to their attention and they are thankful for my acting as an agent so pure that even the AAU couldn't bar me from the next Olympics.

The Great Dane Of The Sea

He is Hjalmar Rutzebeck, author of "Mad Sea," a giant of a Dane for years has made pilgrimmages to wherever the Scully Circus was because, in his own words, he was sort of homesick for us.

In "Mad Sea" there are half a dozen pictures, but since it is in autobiographical and documentary form he'll have to be mighty clever in protecting his property from homeopathic raids by those who borrow from here and there and call it "research."

It seems incredible that such a cheerful mountain of a man could have gone through all those hardships as a boy, but his story reads as authentic as Dana's "Two Years Before the Mast," and in many respects seems to have a greater driving vitality than the classic. It is written in a terse, modern English and having corresponded for years with Rutzebeck I know it's his, and not a ghost's.

In fact, I read the manuscript of "Mad Sea" years ago and all the printed version proves is that none of us is so good that a good editor won't make us better. Doc McDowell, of the house of Greenberg, edited "Mad Sea," as he did Scully's "Cross My Heart," and in both instances proved that an editor, at least a good editor, is worth his weight in gold bullion. But if he wants to get it he'll have to join a diving crew and get it out of the waterbound strongrooms of the rusting Lusitania.

He was outspoken about his past and his frankness on the subject was reflected in an unusual no-holds-barred obit in the N. Y. Times. He hit his peak during World War I and the years shortly thereafter through his performances in "This Is the Army" and "Make Mine Manhattan."

Oshins contributed a hilarious moment in "Army" when he told a general, "Break me—make me a civilian." He took over the lead role in "Manhattan" from David Burns, and a couple of years ago he assumed the Sam Levene part in "Guys and Dolls."

His theatrical career was launched in the Catskills where he met Ben Lessy (now Patti Moore &). Jed Prouty, 77, veteran legit, film and radio-tv actor, died May 10 in New York after a brief illness. A onetime song-and-dance man in vaudeville, he started his theatrical career some 65 years ago. He was best known for his role as the father in radio's "Aldrich Family" series.

When only 16, Prouty formed a vaude act known as Maddux & Prouty which trouped throughout the U.S. doing parodies and pop songs. The team split up in 1909 after theatre owner A. L. Erlanger engaged Prouty to appear in "Girlies," the first summer show at the New Amsterdam, N.Y.

His stint in "Girlies" marked the start of a 13-year association under Erlanger's aegis for Prouty later was seen in such productions of the late impresario as "Pink Lady," "Miss Springtime" and "The Only Girl," among others.

Prouty's legit credits also include such Broadway hits as "Something for the Boys" and "Harvey." He was noted on the screen as the father in "The Jones Family" series. In 1947 he withdrew from picture work to devote himself primarily to radio-tv roles.

addition, getting a flat $125,000 for co-starring in the film with Rita Hayworth, which rolls next January.

Sidney emphasized that the "Pal Joey" project is his unit's only commitment with Columbia although it's expected that there will be further associations. In addition to the feature program, Sidney's indie will embark on a television program and will make deals with other producers to function under the GSP banner for release through distributors other than Columbia.

Elder Sidney will concentrate on lining up properties. He recently took a 90-day option on Harrison Forman's "The Hills of Mahli."

Departure of George Sidney from Metro marks the end of a one-studio success saga spanning a generation. He came to MGM as a messenger boy, rising to become one of the Culver lot's top film makers.

incidents — British espionage at Penemuende, the German rocket center, and the defense of Paris. following the Allied landing in Europe. Pic will be titled "On Order of Canaris."

Lustig said in N. Y. last week that he was doing research on the film. Canaris, when he realized that defeat was inevitable, turned on the Nazi regime and was involved in a plot against Hitler. He finally died in a concentration camp.

Lustig's film will show that Canaris knew all along about British espionage activity at Penemuende; also that Paris wasn't defended by the Germans in contradiction of Hitler's orders. It was Canaris who gave the order to the German commander of the French capital to withdraw rather than fight and risk the destruction of Paris.

side track with 20th, but after having agreed on terms, 20th and Hygo couldn't get together on titles and the same day, Monday afternoon, NTA stepped in. Deal was signed at 1 a.m. Tuesday morning. Consummation of the deal doesn't rule out a subsequent deal between 20th and Hygo-Unity, since 20th has several such packages up for grabs.

For NTA, the purchase climaxes a series of top film aquisitions. (Purchase of UM&M is covered in a separate story in the TV-Films Section.) Several months ago it leased 10 David O. Selznick features, and prior to that, made the first big deal with the J. Arthur Rank Organization for tv rights to the British pix, along with a concurrent deal with the late Sir Alexander Korda. NTA is still very much in the picture in current discussions with Loew's about the Metro pictures, and is said to be talking to other product sources, among them Samuel Goldwyn.

Other titles in the package include "The Ox-Bow Incident," "The House On 92d St.," "Kiss of Death," "The Foxes of Harrow" and "Mother Wore Tights."

The near-miss was a scheduled interview last Sunday with Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D.,N.Y.) on which the Harlem congressman was to speak out for the first time on charges that his secretary kicked back her salary to him. Rep. Powell pulled out of the show Friday (11) morning on advice of his counsel that making a public statement would not be proper in light of the current income tax evasion trial of his secretary and her husband. Station stated he wanted to do the show but that courtroom etiquette prevented.

. . . . . his current booking in the Plaza Hotel's Persian Room marks his emergence into the big time as a solo performer. He's a topgrade harmonica handler, but more important, he's got an entertaining act.

For his Plaza stint, Hayman works over several pop numbers, a little longhair and some special material. His musicalizing is easy to take, while a medley of tunes culled from tv commercials is standout in a humorous vein. Another strong item is his use of a miniature piano in offering his version of "The Threepenny Opera" theme. He also gets in an inoffensive plug for his Mercury LP album in a gag intro to a routine with a one-inch harmonica.

The act moves swiftly and registers solidly.

LECTURE LOOP: MONEY TALKS

Why Hasn't Britain Cashed In?

A sales topper familiar with the worldwide film markets observed, "What an opportunity Rank or any of the British producers now have to really barge in on the American film markets.

"The big cry, according to almost any issue of VARIETY, is the product shortage, and you know the American exhibitor is willing to buy almost anything to fill up his screens.

"So if the British really had something to offer the American market this would be their great big opportunity."

U.S. Air Base 'Network' Linked Thru Closed-Circuit TV; H-Bomb Via TNT?

The U.S. Air Force will use the facilities of Nate Halpern's Theatre Network Television for "a top secret" big screen closed-circuit telecast some time next month. The closed-circuit hookup will link a number of airbases in the continental U.S. Halpern's outfit will install the large screen receivers and handle the technical end of the telecast.

Event marks the second time a Government agency has employed closed-circuit as a rapid communications medium. It was previously employed some five years ago by the Federal Civil Defense Administration to train volunteer workers who had assembled in a number of theatres to receive instructions direct from Washington.

Government use points up the extended employment of closed-circuit, as characterized by the use of large screens, for communications purposes in various fields. It is already used extensively for business meetings, medical conventions, and has made some inroads in the political field, the recent "Salute to Eisenhower" dinner being the most notable example of the latter.

In a sense, closed-circuit has be-

Chevalier and Legrand May Do B'way Concerts

Maurice Chevalier and French maestro Michel Legrand may team up for Broadway next season. A concert program of song and instrumental is currently being worked out by the duo for a break-in at the Alahambra Theatre, Paris. Broadway bow of the Chevalier-Legrand team will hinge on the success of the Paris tryout.

Chevalier and Legrand were teamed for the first time in the U. S. Sunday (20) on an NBC-TV spec. It was Legrand's initial appearance in this country. He's currently Columbia Records' top pop album seller.

See $5,000,000 As Jackpot On 'Lady' Labels

The recorded music from "My Fair Lady" on the Columbia label alone will net $5,000,000 at the retail level. That's the estimate of Hal Cook, Col's director of national sales.

Cook bases his figures on the aggregate sales of albums and singles of "Lady" music. Col has three albums on the market and four singles with several more to come.

In addition to the original Broadway cast package of the tuner, which was kicked off to a 100,000 advance order, Col has a Percy Faith and a Sammy Kaye LP of the score.

Singles include Rosemary Clooney's "I Could Have Danced All Night," Vic Damone's "On the Street Where You Live" and Percy Faith's "With a Little Bit of Luck" and "The Rain in Spain."

SHOW BIZ TAKES A BIGGER ROLE

By JOE COHEN

An increasing number of show bizites are finding their way to the spiel circuits, where many have discovered that talk doesn't come cheaply. The lecture bureaus are on the prowl for more entertainment names and a new batch of performers is finding that lecture work is becoming a more important part of the income.

The fees are generally on a level higher than can be obtained on club dates and the work, according to many, is more satisfying inasmuch as the various organizations before which they lecture treat them as lions for the day.

The greater attention to show biz personalities by the oldline and well established lecture bureaus although not new, is part of an upbeat stemming from the changing tastes of the lecture circuits. For example, commentators on international subjects, de rigeur during the war years, are comparatively difficult to sell. Prophets of world doom are unpopular during this era of prosperity, and spielers with political taints have to be sold carefully.

One of the facets of modern-day literature that the rostrum-rousers haven't been able to latch on to is the "Bridey Murphy" business. The various organizations feel that any gabber presented under their auspices has to be equipped with a certain IQ level that doesn't represent an unproved fad.

Prevailing prices for lectures run from about $100 to $2,500. It's good money for entertainers on tonsil tours. The W. Colston

Platter Biz 12% Ahead of 1955

The record business is continuing on the upswing. According to a recent survey made by Columbia Records, the overall disk sales picture for the first quarter of this year is 12% ahead of the sales during a similar period in 1955.

Survey for the four-month period of this year showed that this was the largest April in the industry's history and pulls up the year's total by 17% over '55.

Col itself is riding a hot sales streak. Survey showed that the label's business for the first quar-

B'way's Current Bumper Hit Crop Promises Road Boom Next Season

Minneapolis, May 22.

The current Broadway season, with more than the normal number of hits, is having repercussions in the hinterland, where the word about good shows sparks greater interest in legit. That is the opinion of Willard Keefe, executive of the Council of the Living Theatre, national legit sponsoring organization. Keefe was here last week from New York to survey the subscription situation for next season.

There has been a substantial increase in the number of subscribers in many of the Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society cities during the past year, Keefe says. He attributes this in part to Broadway's surge of quality shows this season. The exceptional number of Broadway successes also means that there'll probably be more first-rate offerings on tour next season, which tends to hypo subscription and will also boost the boxoffice for the shows themselves.

All this may mean that next season will be the legitimate theatre's best for many years if economic conditions remain sound, in Keefe's opinion. Among the likely subscription entries for next season are "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," "Hatful of Rain," "Inherit the Wind," "The Lark," "Great Sebastians," "Janus" and "Chalk Garden."

The CLT, with the Guild-ATS, feels that it has done a good job this season for its various cities as far as fulfilling its promises as to number and quality of shows. For example, there were five shows

'Demo Party' Disk As Presidential Pitch

A disk will be used as political ammunition for this year's election campaign.

An independently produced 12-inch LP tagged "The Democratic Party" is now being peddled to local Democratic clubs around the country which will give them out cuffo for contributions to the party. The platter will not be sold through regular retail outlets.

Disk, which narrates the history of the Demos in narration and music, was put into the groove by an all-star cast. Henry Fonda acts as narrator with David Wayne, Arthur Kennedy, Robert Preston, Myron McCormack and Martin Gabel enacting historical roles. Music was arranged and conducted by Hershy Kaye.

NBC Will Convert 'Jack & Beanstalk' TV Spec to B'way

After the Helen Deutsch-Jerry Livingston "Jack and the Beanstalk" spectacular appears on NBC-TV next November as a tuneshow, the network intends providing total backing to turn it into a legit musical.

It's a complete turnabout to the route taken so far by network-financed legiters. NBC put up the coin for "The Great Sebastians," the Alfred Lunt-Lynn Fontanne starrer now on Broadway, as much to get a choice tv vehicle after its theatrical run as to make "angel" profits, and CBS has done likewise with "My Fair Lady." But it's the first time that any plans were laid to make a tv stanza into a legit showcasing before it even appeared on the homescreen.

All of the NBC top brass has previewed the musical for exposure sometime around next Thanksgiving. In a session late last week, web chairman Sylvester (Pat) Weaver, prexy Robert Sarnoff, RCA-NBC veepee Manie Sacks and a string of about 10 first-line veeps and production execs, and Joe Carlton, RCA Victor pop artists and repertoire chief gave

Sheffield, Eng., May 15.

The BBC is banning Don Cornell's recordings of semi-religious songs "on general grounds of taste and not on any religious grounds," according to the Archbishop of Canterbury, head of the Anglican church.

The Archbishop has replied to Cornell's recent protest, when he asked the cleric for his personal viewpoint on suitability of his tunes.

"I do not for a moment suppose that the BBC is banning your records on any religious grounds," says the Archbishop, in his reference to "general grounds of taste."

He points out that Britain differs in many ways from the U.S.A., and that "there is a general unwillingness to have religious subjects loud-speakered into restaurants and milk bars."

Cornell sent the English cleric a copy of the words of "The Bible Tells Me So," as well as copies of his banned records.

In a reference to this, the Archbishop of Canterbury adds: "I have not played your records over, but

Church-Banned French Film Yanked by TV'er

Without a single word of criticism, the Catholic Legion of Decency extended its influence to the video sphere this week. WABD, DuMont owned-operated tele station in N.Y., was to have played the Gallic feature, "Manon," as part of its Sunday (20) "French Film Festival," but when station management discovered that the pic had been banned by the Legion for theatres it pulled it off the sked and replaced it with "Panique."

Though the Legion has explained that it sees no way to curtail objectionable material on tv and has no say, according to station sources, WABD's management thought enough of legion strength to make its own move. WABD exec explained that distributor, Hamilton Productions, informed the outlet that it had censored the pic which was then cleared for tv by the legion, but when the station couldn't locate the legion man allegedly responsible it decided to take no chances.

Will Oakland's Uphill (& Down) Show Biz Saga

By LEONARD TRAUBE

Will Oakland, who died last week (15), at 73 while aboard a bus in Bloomfield, N. J., really "gave it" to Harry Richman 30 years ago in a popularity contest for radio singers sponsored by the old New York Evening World. Oakland, trademarked by his highpitched tenor, was then at the height of his ballad singing prowess and a radio-phono pioneer and operator of a multiplicity of night clubs spanning two generations. He polled 500,000 votes. The runner-up was "youngster" Harry Richman (the former & Co. to Mae West, who was not only far behind in the tally but actually was disqualified. The prize was a Packard car, the Caddy of its day.

Oakland claimed later that Richman "wanted this so bad, he printed his own votes, got caught and was put out of the running." (There's a show biz footnote here in that a few years later, when Al

Weavers Stink-Bombed In Chi; Near-SRO 5G

Chicago, May 22.

A stink bomb that exploded a few minutes before curtain time delayed slightly a concert presented Friday night (18) by the Weavers, folk singing quartet, at Orchestra Hall. Group drew a near-capacity $5,000, according to Allied Arts head Harry Zelzer who booked the appearance. Zelzer says he plans to have the balladeers back next spring.

Weavers' Peter Seeger and Lee Hays were the subject of an open letter sent out the week before by Edward Clamage, chairman of the anti-subversive committee of the Cook County council of the American Legion. Letter was addressed to the Kemper Insurance Bldg., under the mistaken impression the group was appearing there in the Civic Opera House.

Film Technician Shortage Marked; Prod Colleges

Much-discussed problem of the acute technical labor shortage in Hollywood has been tossed in the laps of educators from two directions. George Bilson has proposed a plan to Dr. Robert O. Hall, head of the U. of Southern California's Department of Cinema, under which students enrolled there could gain practical training in the studios. Students would be graded by studio executives according to the quality of their supervised work.

Almost simultaneously, Mervyn LeRoy prepared a formal proposal to both the Screen Producers Guild and the Screen Directors Guild calling for a recruitment of 50 to 75 new technicians annually from the nation's colleges. Labor shortage is growing worse daily as the telefilm industry expands.

Adler Re-Heating Durante Biopic

Buddy Adler at 20th-Fox is hot for the Jimmy Durante biopic, from the Gene Fowler biog, "Schnozzola."

About three years ago Durante was caught in the middle of a hassle between Joe Pasternak at Metro and Don Hartman at Paramount, both wanting the property, with result neither did it. Pasternak even had Frank Sinatra set for the title role; Gene Kelly to personate Lou Clayton and Bobby Van, then a Metro contractee, as Eddie Jackson.

Adler has asked the Schnoz's personal rep, Abe Lastfogel (William Morris), for all the overage notes and tape-recordings that Fowler made—"there's enough for four books," says Durante—as further source material. This indicates 20th is really serious about working out a firm deal.

Footnote: The Age We Live In

Washington, May 22.

Color television is being used by General Electric to help its scientists keep an eye on radioactive areas of the Hanford plutonium plant, near Richland, Wash., GE discloses. Company operates the plant for the Atomic Energy Commission.

Crane operators formerly observed their work in one of the "hottest" areas via periscopes. Now they use a closed circuit color tv system. The high "image brilliance" on the screens makes the operation of their giant crane hooks easier.

Two cameras are mounted to show what is happening. They are wired to two receivers with 7-inch screens, with magnifying systems to enlarge the pictures to 10 inches. The men watch the receivers in a windowless, steel-walled crane cab from which they operate the cranes. Interestingly, they use the old-fashioned color wheel, rather than an all-electronic tv operation.

WHERE'S THE LOGIC?

By ABEL GREEN

On the one hand the picture business decries the grave competition from the free home-television pictures. On the other the industry deplores the product shortage. And on top of it all the majors are selling many of their cream pictures down the Fort Knox drain to television. They're also making a direct and strong contribution to tv programming via special shows.

The resultant confusion and wonderment is not to be unexpected.

Is this the beginning of the end of Hollywood as a lifeline for the commercial theatre?, asks the exhibitor.

Is this pattern of the commercial cinema of the future—only the blockbusters for the cream 4,000 accounts and the devil with the rest of the houses?, they want to know.

Is Wall Street pulling the strings now, with no regard to the history of producer-distributor-exhibition relations, eyeing only that rich cash-in of residuals?, others want to know.

It's known that, within the Loew management structure for example, president Arthur M. Loew has been opposing certain bankers on the board in selling off those pre-1948 pictures, $50,000,000 or not.

And, still another school of inquiry wants to know, is all this acquisition of product a precursor to tollvision? Will they pay a fee for seeing them at home as against battling traffic, the elements, the babysitting problem, etc., when going to the conventional hardtop picture theatre?

These are milestone days indeed.

London, May 22.

The will of the late Sir Alexander Korda, published last Friday (18), showed that the British film producer left a gross estate of more than $1,000,000, with a net value of around $442,000.

He left $28,000 to his 34-year-old son Peter, $5,600 to his first wife, Maria, and $1,400 to his chauffeur. His 29-year-old widow receives his personal chattels belonging to him in his residence if she survives him for six months, as well as a quarter of the residue of his estate. One half of the residue of the estate goes to his son and the remainder is divided among the children of his two brothers, Vincent and Zoltan.

London Editor Scores Quentin Reynolds For Tieup With Ben Hecht

London, May 15.

John Gordon, editor-in-chief of the Sunday Express, who recently urged a boycott of the Bob Hope-Katharine Hepburn British picture, "The Iron Petticoat," because it had been scripted by Ben Hecht, last week launched an attack on Quentin Reynolds who, he declared, had been one of Hecht's "chief henchmen." Reynolds had emceed the opening program on the new Granada commercial network, which was launched in the north of England May 3.

Gordon commented that the "tv boys lauded Reynolds for those magnificent broadcasts of his which helped us so powerfully in the grimmest days of the war. Not a word did they say about the afterwar days when he ceased to be our friend.

"Reynolds shared the joy in Hecht's heart when British soldiers were murdered in Palestine," Gordon added. "He helped to finance Hecht's provocative anti-British play and crowed with delight when the arrival at Haifa of a ship full of illegal immigrants organized by Hecht looked like involving us in trouble and shouted across America that Hecht would give the British enough rope to hang themselves with."

It was, Gordon opined, an insult to British viewers to put this man on their tv screens as an honored and welcome guest.

'Bridey Murphy' (Ruth Simmons) Gets Plenty of Nuttin' Else

Hollywood, May 22.

Mrs. Ruth Simmons, Denver housewife whose experiences while under hypnotism led to the writing of "The Search for Bridey Murphy," will be the only one connected with the Paramount picturization of the book not to see any of that green stuff. Pat Duggan, who is producing, said: "She gets nothing, and I haven't met her."

Sharing financially in film, percentage-wise, are Libby Block, Duggan's spouse who purchased film rights to tome, and Morey Bernstein, Colorado bizman who conducted Mrs. Simmons back to her recollection of Bridey. Pic will be made as a "non-fiction presentation," budgeted "under $1,000,000."

Salute Sick Jean Hersholt; Few Cracks But Levant, Disneyland Are Gibed

By JACK HELLMAN

Hollywood, May 22.

"He engraved a timeless memorial of service" wrote Jesse Lasky of Jean Hersholt, who was paid high tribute last Wednesday night at Beverly Hills hotel by 500 of the industry's leaders. It epitomized the sentiment of those attending the $100-a-plate testimonial to commemorate Hersholt's 50 years in show business and devotion to the Motion Picture Relief Fund and other charities. Proceeds went to Mt. Sinai hospital for an entertainment wing.

Hersholt left a sick bed to accept the homage of top figures with whom he has worked for industry betterment and Hollywood's many charitable projects. Said Hersholt in response to a standing ovation, "when I came to this coun-

Other Shareholders Mutter Against Gravy Price to Warner Freres

Purchase of 800,000 shares of common stock in Warners by the Serge Semenenko group looks subject to criticism by other stockholders unless they, too, are offered the same kind of deal. Semenenko paid $27.50 per share for a major part of the holdings of Harry M., Jack L. and Maj. Albert Warner, whereas the trading price of the shares has hit as low as $18.50 over the past year. Bolstered by the anticipated deal of some kind—the specifics weren't known to many investors prior to the formal announcement, a high of $24.62½ was reached.

On the basis of private conversations with disinterested Wall Street interests, other WB shareowners in certain instances feel the three Warners shouldn't be privileged to collect a fancier price if they, the minority individuals, are left to the everyday quotation whims of the open market.

It was further underlined that Howard Hughes, in buying all the RKO assets, in effect gave all stockholders of that film company the opportunity to sell out at a uniform price. But this, of course, was a unique situation, for Hughes already had maintained voting control and one of the reasons behind the complete buyout, reportedly, was to quiet stockholder unrest.

In the case of WB, Semenenko is not under any obligation to buy out the small WB investors. And it's a matter of traditional fact that the sale of voting control stock—say, 25% of the total outstanding—inevitably brings a higher price than that quoted on the exchange.

The 700 final playdates of a feature film average less than $25 per date.

Payroll Axings Show Company Slump Blues

Film business currently finding itself in a severe spring slump, several of the companies are starting to economize via reduction of staffs.

First on line was Warner Bros., where Jack L. Warner has instructed department heads to trim their forces as much as possible. This is taken to mean that production at the studio, where the Serge Semenenko group has just taken over, will proceed at a slow pace, at least for the time being.

Staff trim also is in the works at 20th-Fox, but no exact decision has been made as yet as to the extent of axings.

Company execs, pointing to the fact that most distribs in recent weeks failed to gross more than $1,000,000 a week, say that the cost situation is slowly getting out of hand and that, unless there's a drastic improvement, more stringent economies on all levels will have to be instituted.

The May slump is not unusual, but it has rarely been as severe since 1952 when the bottom seemed to fall out of the business.

Several reasons are cited for the failure of even some promising pictures to perform satisfactorily.

(1) Television, still intact as an alibi, which seems to hurt more now than ever.

(2) The quality of the pictures, which is high but in only a handful of productions. "You can't live on an occasional good entry," noted one exec.

(3) The bad weather, which has delayed the start of the drive-in season.

(4) The general economy of the country, with drastic shifts in population, living and spending and entertainment habits.

Who's 'Expendable' On WB Payroll?

Hollywood, May 22.

With production activity virtually at a standstill, Warners laid off a large number of employees as a prelude to the takeover of the firm by the new management headed by banker Serge Semenenko of Boston. A studio spokesman said between 65 and 85 persons were dumped but grapevine estimates run higher.

Department heads were notified last week to submit a list of "expendables" to studio business manager Edmond L. DePatie.

Studio publicity chief Bill Hendricks emphasized that the employees were being laid off, subject to future recall, and were not being fired. Move, he said, affected only those without immediate assignments in view of the fact that there is little future production scheduled.

Apparently the only department totally unaffected is the music department since studio-pacted wind-jammers are under a blanket AFM contract which guarantees them an annual wage regardless of the amount of production at the studio.

UNITED ARTISTS IN ON ALLIED'S PRODUCTIONS

Allied Artists and United Artists are on the verge of wrapping up a co-production deal involving two top properties on the AA schedule. That is, it's co-production in the sense that UA will provide part of the budget money and in return will take foreign rights, with the exception of South America.

The two films, both to roll this year, are Billy Wilder's production of "Ariane," Gary Cooper starrer, and John Huston's "Typee," with Gregory Peck.

This is the third such tieup with AA. Loew's recently put up around $700,000 for William Wyler's lensing of "Friendly Persuasian" with AA retaining the domestic and Latino releasing rights. AA has offices in South America, thus holds on to this territory, but doesn't have its own outlets in other foreign areas.

Some Exhib Resistance To Old Warner Features Due for Televising

Dominant Pictures, the theatrical distribution arm of Eliot Hyman's Associated Artists Productions, is meeting opposition from exhibitor quarters in its efforts to market as reissues a batch of selected films from the 750 Warner Bros. pictures recently sold to television.

Two packages of 52 pictures, representing the best films in WB pre-1948 backlog, are being released theatrically, with the guarantee that the first 52 won't go on tv until September, 1957. The second package of 52 is destined for video exposure six months after the theatrical showing.

Argument offered by exhibitors in opposing the booking of the films is that the theatremen are being made "patsies" if they buy these pictures, "if six months to a year after playing them, our patrons will be seeing these same pictures free on television after having paid to see them in the theatre." The Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, quoting one of its members, says: "This is another example of the exhibitor being used as a way station by the film companies. We have enough com-

RUNS ON GUMS BUT NEEDS FANGS

One of the most immediate problems facing the Hollywood Production Code revise committee is the absence under 1956 conditions of any enforceable penalties to make Code provisions binding on the industry.

Situation has, of course, existed for some time, but its realization has never before been as acute as it is now, nor has the need been more pressing to come up with a formula that would obligate the studios to stick to the Code.

Ever since divorcement, the one strong club—ownership of the big circuits by the major studios—has been removed and the Code has in fact become a loosely enforced document with nothing to force the retail outlets to see eye-to-eye with the Motion Picture Assn. of America.

The Howard Hughes instance, when RKO released "The French Line" sans seal, and the more recent withdrawal of United Artists from the MPAA over the "Man With the Golden Arm" tempest,

Joe Schenck Sells Out in UA Circuit

Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the board and a founder of the United Artists Theatres circuit, has sold out his remaining interests in the chain to a group composed in the main of George P. Skouras, Edward H. Rowley and Joseph Seider. Schenck got $875,000 for his 100,000 shares and plans to retire from the business.

Controlling interest in the chain now passes to Rowley as the majority stockholder with several hundred thousand shares. Schenck sold out his stock at $8.75 several weeks ago. He's expected to resign also as chairman of Magna Theatre Corp., parent company for the Todd-AO process. Schenck has recouped personal advances he made to finance Magna's "Oklahoma."

Paramount Pictures Stock Priced (1st Time) Under Divorced Theatres

This Is Revolution!

Cracked a Manhattan distribution official in reaction to disappointing boxoffice of one of his pictures:

"Maybe next time they'll read the book before they make the film."

For the first time since divorcement six and a half years ago Paramount Pictures trailed its former theatre affiliate in terms of trading price on the New York Stock Exchange. The former United Paramount Theatres, now listed as American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres to take into account the merger with ABC, hit a new high of $32.25 on the big board Friday (18). This compares with a low for the year of $24.62½.

Par Pictures closed the day at $31.62½, as against a high for the year of $36.50 and a low of $30.25.

While Par has continued to operate financially fine, attractive to investors are the gains shown by AB-PT. Theatre business has softened but the network division, long in the red, is now well on the profit side of the ledger.

Further, strides taken by AB-PT could mean an upped dividend rate, according to some Wall Street opinion.

Santa Barbara Pressing to Get Film Festival

Renewed efforts to stage a United States film festival similar to the events at Cannes, Venice, Berlin and elsewhere is again being actively pushed by a Coast group. In the forefront is the city of Santa Barbara, 90 miles from Hollywood. Business men of the community have organized the Santa Barbara Film Festival Inc. with the aim to organize and conduct an international film fete in the city in 1957. A representative of the film committee has been designated to visit the European festivals to study their operations.

Authority for this is George Murphy, Metro public relations official who just returned from the Cannes Film Festival as a representative of the U.S. Government. On the basis of the activity of the Santa Barbara group, the Motion Picture Assn. of America has taken the idea under advisement. Murphy reported to and discussed the fete proposal with MPAA topper Eric Johnston in New York recently.

Murphy estimates, as a pure guess, that it would cost as much as $1,000,000 to stage a festival in the U.S. In contrast, he noted that the Cannes fete represented a $400,000 tab.

If a Yank Film Fest, Who Pays?

In the wake of the Cannes film festival, the idea of an American fest is currently being explored on various levels, with exhibitors particularly enthusiastic over the possibility of such an event.

First big question that crops up, however, is one of costs. The big European fests, such as Cannes and Venice, are subsidized by the respective governments which consider the competitions not only convenient market places for film, but also firstrate tourist attractions.

"If we have a festival in New York, let's say, or in Los Angeles, the American industry would have to foot the bill for most of the European visitors," opined one U. S. exec.

This, inevitably, brings up the question of who'll pay. One an-

Pre-Holiday Sluggish; 'Knew Too Much' Champion, 'Mamie' 2d, 'Alex' 3d, 'Holiday,' 'Suit' Next Week before Memorial Day session finds biz limping in many key situations. Currently, it is not a matter of product, with some of new fare doing well, but mostly the seasonal trend.

A newcomer this week, "Man Who Knew Too Much" (Par) is soaring to take over No. 1 position, with big to whopping trade in some six key cities covered by VARIETY. Pic is supplanting "Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th) in first spot, but "Mamie" is a close second.

"Alexander the Great" (UA) is pushing up to third place by dint of a flock of new, big bookings. "Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) is landing fourth money while "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) is winding in fifth.

"Oklahoma" (Magna) will capture sixth place. "Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G) is taking over seventh position while "Tribute To Bad Man," from same company, will be eighth.

"Ladykillers" (Cont) is finishing ninth, with "Gaby" (M-G) in 10th spot. Latter is doing considerably better than a week ago.

"World Without End" (AA) and "Cockleshell Heroes" (Col) are the two runner-up films this stanza.

"The Searchers" (WB) started out like it would be a comer. This newcomer is socko in Detroit, boffo in Buffalo and good in Chi. "Bhowani Junction" (M-G), great in Frisco, looms brisk in Buffalo. Other new entries are not so encouraging aside from "Man Who Knew Too Much."

"Maverick Queens" (Rep) is inclined to be spotty although nice in Cleveland and okay in Philly. "Bold and Brave" (RKO) looms good in Cincy but is mild in Philly and Cleveland. "Great Day in Morning," from same company, is light in Portland, fair in Denver and okay in N. Y. "23 Paces" (20th) is slow in N. Y.

"Touch and Go" (U) looks good in Balto and okay in Frisco. "Birds and Bees" (Par) still is uneven with too many mild or slow spots to get it far currently.

"Forbidden Planet" (M-G), tall in Minneapolis, looms nice in N. Y. "Harder They Fall" (Col) shapes big in N. Y.

"Seven Wonders of World" (Indie), good in Pitt, shapes great in Philly, smash in N. Y. and fancy in St. Loo. "Madam Butterfly" (IFE), big in Chi, still is solid in N. Y.

Don't Sell Brick-and-Mortar Short!

Circuit Operators See Producers Tempted From "The Faith"—Theatres Still a Giant Industry, Though Hollywood May Sluff Off That Fact

In the last few weeks events have moved with startling rapidity in the American motion picture industry. Resultantly some broad currents of trade opinion are becoming clearer and not the least significant question of the moment is that asked by theatre operators with respect to picture producers:

"Have they (the producers of features) lost faith in the importance of theatres, and their future as the chief retail markets for celluloid entertainment?"

There is, of course, nothing new about film men going into tailspins of emotional panic. It has happened many times in the past. In a business which wagers vast stakes on judgment and hunch, chronic nervousness can become acute temporary hysteria if bad omens pile up during a number of consecutive weeks, as recently.

VARIETY has been asking questions among circuit and non-circuit exhibitors. The answers reveal a deepseated uneasiness over the electronic competition and an even greater concern over the future attitude of the producers and distributors. The theatremen, whose relation with the distribs has never resembled a love feast, are no longer sure that their suppliers consider them a safe bet in a market that has seen theatres losing out against other forms of competition of which television is but one.

There is a feeling that the new industry pattern now evolving will see fewer houses, with many of the fringe situations and subsequents likely to shutter.

"These are the houses that are going to be most affected by television in the years to come, because they are the ones that play the types of pictures television is offering for free," noted Harry Brandt, New York circuit operator. He added that he had shuttered some of his theatres already and that he was convinced that, as part of the general streamlining, he would have to close others.

"However," warned Brandt, echoing the sentiment of most exhibitors, "don't let anyone make the mistake of selling the theatres short. This is still a giant industry, something which we tend to lose sight of. The great pictures are still apt to do great business, by far outranking anything tv can afford."

Challenge to Showmanship

Brandt's optimism is shared by Walter Reade Jr., board chairman of Theatre Owners of America, head of the Reade circuit and also a distributor of foreign films. "Exhibitors, with millions invested in brick-and-mortar, simply must fight harder now to protect their investment," he said. "There is no use discounting our new competition, but this is a challenge to showmen to get out and fight."

Reade opined that, if exhibs hadn't done their best along the showmanship line, the fault was with the distributors. "With the terms they offer, we are left with too little of a margin of profit to be an incentive," he stated. "In this country it's the profit motive that keeps business going. Eliminate that, and there isn't much purpose to the game any more."

Like others, Reade noted the recent activity on the Motion Picture Assn. of America front, where Eric Johnston has begun to take an initiative in seeking ways and means to stimulate the boxoffice. However, exhibs don't have much confidence in the MPAA or its effectiveness in the domestic market, claiming that past experience justifies their reservations.

Most theatremen shrug off the sale of features to video as an inevitable consequence of the economic squeeze on the companies. At the same time, they say, the real impact of the libraries' transition to the stations won't be felt for another two years or so.

"Providence only knows what'll happen then," said one circuit exec. "With a lot of really good films on the air, it will be more difficult than ever to get people out of their livingrooms. We are, after all, asking them to pay for something that they can get at home for nothing."

Thrown in here and there is a reference to subscription-tv. "Let them start that with some of those big color pictures they are getting from the companies, and the effect of that blow to our boxoffice will be incalculable." Most exhibs stick to the belief that toll-tv will not come about in the foreseeable future, and they refuse to worry about it much beyond that.

RKO circuit's Sol Schwartz said he thought that the oldies on the air wouldn't mean much to the b.o. one way or another. "It's the newer Hollywood pictures that will hurt us," he said.

Other exhibitors have taken heart from S. H. Fabian's attempt to become head of Warner Bros., a project now in the lap of the Justice Department. "This business was started by the exhibitors and it now seems gradually to come back to it," noted Brandt. He said that he was also encouraged by the entry into the field of such indies as Whitney Productions with "The Searchers" and the fact that a tv outfit like General Teleradio was determined to make feature product first for the theatres. Brandt saw double features as one of the greatest evils besetting exhibition today.

Exhibs are sharply aware that their business seems to have lost its attraction to certain audience groups, but—with a few exceptions—they tend to blame this on a variety of factors stemming from the producer-distribs. At the same time, they seem to feel that the remedy also lies with the distributors and the producers who, despite the recognized need of the theatres, have cut down on the flow of product.

Tendency towards diversification on the part of the circuits is explained by some as being in line with a general trend, and by others as an insurance against an uncertain future. RKO Theatres now is part of RKO Industries, which owns the Cleveland Arcade Co.; Stanley-Warner is in International Latex and other interests; United Paramount is tied to the American Broadcasting Co., National Theatres is going into production via CineMiracle. United Artists Theatres cradles Magna ("Oklahoma") etc.

There is a strong feeling that exhibition must grasp the production helm if it is to survive. Indie circuits are talking with indie producers both here and abroad; the feeling that the theatres could and should stimulate the kind of pictures that will make money is stronger than ever.

Yet, underneath the optimistic front and the brave words, there are undertones of a slight panic. The very poor b.o. of the past month, even on some good pictures, has 'em looking frantically for solutions that don't seem to be readily at hand. There is an effort to pin the blame on somebody or something, and a dim realization that maybe time itself may be catching up with an institution that has prospered for close to five heetic decades.

Slur Stock Manipulators

As Fred Schwartz of the Century Circuit and Distributors Corp. of America put it: "The stock manipulators are moving in." Significantly, the interest seems to be primarily in production, which can't lose since the demand for celluloid will continue theatres or no theatres. Latter, with no easy gravy train to latch onto, will have to buck the tide. There is no doubt that many will perish in the attempt.

[AS ANSWER TO 'DEAD' SHOWMANSHIP]

Exhibitors today have become little more than "middle men" and their showmanship talents should be brought into play again via "live" presentations, says Spyros P. Skouras Jr., Skouras Theatres topper.

"Right now, we seem to be 'dead' showmen," commented Skouras. "We get a can of film and we play it. We have little to do with what goes into the making of the picture. Flesh shows, in which we can use our imagination in attracting audiences, or even color theatre television, could start us off again on the right road."

Skouras expressed high hope that S. H. Fabian be installed at the head of Warner Bros. "At least he knows what exhibition needs," he said.

Civil Liberties Asks Safeguards: No Ads-No Monopoly Home-Toll

Stressing a need for diversity in the mass communications field, the American Civil Liberties Union this week came out in favor of subscription-television.

Patrick Malin, the Union's executive director, told the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee that toll-tv should receive a trial "provided that important safeguards are included."

Listed among these safeguards were (1.) That there be no advertising sponsors of toll shows; (2.) That toll-tv should not be authorized in any city, unless there are at least two other free channels broadcasting; (3.) The experiment should be limited in time; (4.) Toll-tv programmers must give ample guarantees that the program content will add something not now available.

The Union said that present toll video plans "do not provide such safeguards" but that it would approve of pay-as-you-see on an experimental basis "if these safeguards are adopted, together with any others that might seem appropriate in the public interest."

Reference is puzzling since the suggestion of sponsored toll shows has rarely been heard, the Skiatron petition to the FCC specifically put a three-year limit on any authorization, and the entire argument of the toll proponents has been based on the contention that they can add something new and valid to present program content.

SCHARY OWNS 50,000 SHARES AT METRO

Dore Schary, Loew's production chief and v.p., now has 50,000 shares of the corporation's common stock. He picked up the hefty block of shares over the past month and prior to this held no part of the issue.

Benjamin Thau, studio v.p., bought 22,000 shares.

While Joe Pasternak and Sam Katz, as his businesss associate, have been talking about going to Columbia with their indie setup, Metroites believe that Pasternak-Katz will wind up releasing via the Loew organization.

Pasternak has been a longtime Culver City producer and with Metro now housing some 15 different independent units this ties into the new concept of production and distribution.

12% B.O. Drop: 1948 to 1954

Washington, May 22.

Receipts of motion picture theatres fell 12% between 1948 and 1954, dropping from $1,600,000,000 in 1948 to $1,400,000,000 in 1954.

This apparent confirmation of the exhibitor's plight is painted by the U. S. Census Bureau in a report on the 1954 census of business, covering motion picture theatres.

However, the figures are loaded with gimmicks, so that the decline is not as sharp as appears on the surface. The Census Bureau explains that its totals include Federal, State and local admissions taxes, and the sale of candy, popcorn, etc., when the theatre operates the concession itself.

The census survey is sounder, in other respects. It discloses that the number of conventional theatres declined from 17,689 in 1948, to 14,761 in 1954. On the other hand, the number of drive-ins climbed from 820 in 1948 to 3,799 in 1954.

Capital Gain Vigil at Warners

Still Await U.S. Treasury Okay for Chesler Group To Acquire Oldies

Treasury Department is still mulling the $21,000,000 capital gains deal involved in the purchase of the pre-1948 Warner Bros. library by Canada's Lou Chesler. No ruling has been made.

A Warner spokesman said this week (21) that all parties involved were in touch with Washington. "We are not discouraged," he declared.

Unlesss the Treasury okays the capital gains aspect, the whole deal is off. Both the WB exec and Eliot Hyman, who's to distribute the WB library, denied a report that there had been a negative decision from the Treasury.

JAP FILM SHOWMAN OHTANI IN GOTHAM

Ryuzo Ohtani, exec director of the Shochiku Co., Japan's top production-distribution-exhibition outfit, arrived in New York from London over the past week for a once-over of all aspects of the Yank film industry operation. After talks with officials of United Artists, whose films Shochiku releases in Japan, and other companies, Ohtani will cover Washington, Buffalo, Chicago, San Francisco and Hollywood.

This is Ohtani's first trip to the States and is part of a world tour which began last month. Earlier his associates at Shochiku did similar global hopping in an effort to acquaint themselves with the world market and promote the acceptance of their films.

MAIN ST. DECLINES MARTYRDOM

More Data About Audience Taste? Great! But How Does East Get Studios to Act on Findings?

Faced with a pronounced boxoffice slump during the past couple of weeks, with even the good pictures doing below-par business, the industry is once again beginning to take an interest in the composition of its audience.

Feeling is being expressed that, to fight the inroads of television, which seemingly have become more severe, Hollywood must first of all gain a knowledge about the public—what it likes and what it doesn't like, why certain audience sectors seem to have fallen away from the b.o., what could be done to stimulate audience interest in pix, etc., etc.

Subject came up during a meeting in N. Y. last week of the ad-pub heads of the companies who were asked by Eric Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, to suggest ways and means to overcome the current slump.

Earlier, the company prexies had gone over similar ground, huddling not only on the b.o., but also on the long thought about project of distribution economies. Latter might include a consolidation of shipping facilities and a study may be made to determine the extent of possible savings via such a move.

At the ad-pub directors meeting, the question of an audience study was brought up. Point was made that past studies, dealing in post-fact conclusions (i.e. this and that percentage of the audience has fallen away, etc.) served no practical purpose since they established something of which astute company execs were certainly aware.

"What is needed," commented one of the participants at the meeting, "are studies to guide the way to future action. We know, for instance, that the juvenile audience is off even though there are more kids around than ever. What we need is a study to indicate to us in which way we could get those patrons back again."

As the b.o. situation grows worse, the frustration of a lack of data

Date 11 RKO Starts

Specific starting dates for 11 productions to roll at RKO between June 7 and Oct. 15 were set by Daniel T. O'Shea, president of the company, and William Dozier, production v.p., in the course of two weeks of conferences in New York. Dozier returned to the Coast Monday (21).

Leading off the list is "Bundle of Joy," to be produced by Edmund Grainger with Eddie Fisher, Debbie Reynolds and Adolphe Menjou in the leads.

Since taking over the company from Howard Hughes, the O'Shea-Tom O'Neil regime has completed four new pictures and has another, "Public Pigeon Number One," now before the cameras.

Tint-Filming Of Bard's Works May Take 20 Years

The Stratford Shakespeare Festival of Stratford, Ontario, in cooperation with film producer Leonid Kipnis, has embarked on an ambitious undertaking to film the entire first folio of Shakespeare in color. The project, which may take as long as 20 years to complete, involves the formation of a new Canadian film company under the artistic direction of Tyrone Guthrie.

Endeavor is an offshoot of an initial film production of a Stratford Festival presentation of "Oedipus Rex," which Kipnis' company has just completed. The new project resulted from approaches made to the Festival board of governors by Kipnis and Guthrie.

As conceived by A. M. Bell, president of the Festival, Kipnis and Guthrie, the plan would result in the creation of "a permanent record of one generation's ideas on the production of Shakespeare." Aim, it's said, is not use Shakespeare as the basis for screenplays, "but rather to film the full text using, where feasible, stage production as the interpretive basis of the films."

Kipnis will provide all the financing for the project, with the Festival benefiting from a share of the distribution profits.

MANAGER POKES CRITIC IN 'JUBAL' AD COPY

Cleveland, May 22.

The critic versus the theatre manager feud has erupted here. Principals are Omar Ranney, film critic of the Cleveland Press, and Jack Silverthorne, manager of the Hipp Theatre.

Silverthorne took exception to Ranney's review of Columbia's "Jubal," the only unfavorable comment in the local press. In ads obviously aimed at Ranney, Silverthorne headed his copy with "It's True You Can't Please Everybody—But 17,267 Clevelanders and The Critics Agree!" The ad in large type carried the praise comments of W. Ward Marsh of the Plain Dealer and Arthur Spaeth of the News. In smaller type was a rap line from Ranney's review—"'Jubal' is a mine-run western."

Ranney in his Saturday (5) column took notice of Silverthorne's tactics. Said Ranney in part: "The fact that the most glowing rave in the morning paper was carried in 14-point type, while this column's view was sneaked in 10-point, seemed a little like loading the dice.

"But what we were most curious about were those 17,267 Clevelanders the ad mentioned.

"'How do you know,' this department inquired of the Hipp management, 'that all those people thought 'Jubal' was terrific?'

"'Well,' the manager replied with finality, 'that many paid to see it.'

"This may be some way of feeling the pulse of the public. But I can't help thinking that the teacher I had in the first grade would have taken a pretty dim view of it."

BERGER PELTS 20TH EXECS WITH POSIES

Minneapolis, May 22.

President Bennie Berger of North Central Allied ordinarily doesn't have anything nice to say about film companies' executives, but he tossed some bouquets at the NCA convention.

Introducing Alex Harrison, 20th-Fox general sales manager, Berger remarked that he isn't acquainted with Harrison, but the latter must be "all right" if chosen for the job by Spyros Skouras.

"That's because Mr. Skouras is a great humanitarian and one of our fairest and finest American citizens," said Berger.

When he introduced W. C. Gehring, 20th-Fox executive vice president, Berger also was in a complimentary mood and described him as "one of the industry's top personalities who is sympathetic to exhibitors' problems." If there were more like him, declared Berger, "we might not have to go to Washington for relief."

L'IL EXHIBS ASK: WHO'S STARVING?

By LES REES

Minneapolis, May 22.

Broad interviewing among a number of small-town exhibitors who attended the North Central Allied convention here last week suggests that, NCA president Bennie Berger and other "exhibitor leaders" to the contrary, most theatre operators are still (a) reasonably happy and (b) moderately optimistic regarding their future, and (c) expect to be able, and desire, to remain in the exhibition business.

This VARIETY reporter's interviews with these "little fellows" brought out, among other things, that while things aren't so flourishing as they used to be business still averages "pretty good."

Surprisingly, there seems to be little ill feeling or bitterness among the rank and file toward the film companies because of picture rental terms or for any other reasons.

Those exhibitors in television fringe areas—most remote from competition—are, understandably, the happiest. But the others, for the most part, think they're at least "living comfortably" with video and they feel that boxoffice results "aren't too bad."

The interviews indicated that, where there's severe boxoffice distress, peculiarly local conditions, such as depressed agricultural, are largely to blame.

"Little fellows" feel that the small-town theatre shutterings that have been occurring involve communities where all kinds of businesses are off.

Several exhibitors conceded that, in order to be fair, it should be cited that increased admissions have somewhat offset higher film rentals.

Bingo Graze

Demands on people's times by church, school and civic activities, a bingo "craze" and night sports are hurting the boxoffice as much, as video, if not more, in some situations.

For example, Mrs. Howard Gould, exhibitor at Glencoe, Minn., population 3,000, said that in her town school and church activities, consuming young people's time four or more nights per week, pose the worse problem. Mrs. Gould said she couldn't figure out where the youngsters find the time to become delinquent.

Another exhibitor, "Chick" Everhart of Walker, Minn., population 2,500, declared it devolves upon exhibitors to be "honest" with film companies in their dealings, as well as vice-versa. If both sides would be "honest" with each other, he believes, "things would be better all-around."

There was little disgruntlement manifest because of film companies' sales of pre-1948 features to tv. The small-town exhibitors, for the most part, appear to be taking this development as a matter of course. Most of those interviewed professed not to be fearful of the parlor medium.

It was significant, perhaps, that at the convention's open forum discussion nobody accepted President Berger's invitation to take the floor and state their film rental and other grievances and problems. Berger insists that smalltown exhibitors are being forced out of business because they can't buy the top boxoffice pictures at live-and-let-live and an "ability to pay" basis and that federal control is necessary to bring relief to these "little fellows." Told about VARIETY's interview's, he asserted that the small exhibitors are reluctant to speak up because of fear of distributor reprisals. He pointed out his organization had 17 complaining affidavits from this territory's small exhibitors to take to the Senate small business subcommittee's hearings at Washington and that it has letters on file telling of "unconscionable" film rental terms that theatreowners can't meet, thus preventing them from playing top boxoffice pictures, and reciting how they're suffering as a

Minneapolis, May 22.

Film circle here is still buzzing because of what it regards as the courage of W. C. Gehring and Alex Harrison, 20th-Fox executive vice president and general sales manager, respectively, in hitting out from the shoulder in their talks at the North Central Allied convention.

Gehring bearded the lion in his den by declaring to the gathering that the government intervention in the industry advocated by NCA president Bennie Berger would be a calamity.

The 20th-Fox vice president didn't spare Hollywood either. Pointing out the big business chalked up by such pictures as "The Blackboard Jungle" and "Mister Roberts," he said "we may need a different type of entertainment" and pictures "should hold a greater appeal for the younger elements."

"It devolves upon Hollywood to realize, for instance, that a 55-year old Clark Gable making love to Dana Wynters doesn't excite youngsters," asserted Gehring. "Let's build for the people we should be entertaining.

"What can we think when such a great picture as 'Carousel' is outgrossed in Memphis by rock 'n' roll?"

Gehring took a pot shot, too, at the constant beefs about film rentals.

"We've been told ever since the film industry started that film rentals 'are too high,'" he pointed out. "But those exhibitors who from the outset squawked the loudest and are still crying have become the richest."

Pointing out that a serious problem is Hollywood's skyrocketing production costs, due in considerable part to the actors and writers' huge demands, including percentages of pictures' grosses, he also rapped talent agencies.

Raps Talent Agents

"Our company and others are at the mercy of two or three large talent agencies that are making talent almost prohibitively expensive," said Harrison. "These agencies, mainly responsible for our sky-high production costs, which are a factor in your boosted film rentals, apparently don't care whether the film industry succeeds or fails. They seemingly are concerned only in getting all that the traffic will bear for their clients and selves."

20th executives told of their company's present move to develop its own new, young talent in an effort

Extras Wanna 'Talk'

Hollywood, May 22.

Formal demand for a contract negotiating session was served on the Motion Picture Producers Assn. over the weekend by the Screen Extras Guild, "In a final effort to reach agreement on all remaining disputed issues" before the "imminent termination of our Basic Agreement on May 28, 1956."

According to H. O'Neil Shanks, exec secretary of SEG, main issue is the employment of extras in more than one telepix of a series during a single day. Shanks stated that Charles Boren, AMPP v.p. in charge of industrial relations, refuses to conclude the SEG contract unless continued concessions are granted to members of the Alliance of Tv Film Producers on this point.

British Producers Turn To Yankee Capital Sources

Sir Carol Reed has it figured that the key to wider global markets is a meshing of Yank and British production interests in instances where the film property is laid in England or on the Continent. Americans receive production quota advantages plus the economy factor of having Anglo staffs available to them. And the Yank patricipation means selection of story and casting that give the pic the international appeal.

British indie producers are stymied by the lack of bank financing, thus the U. S. capital is of major importance. Both sides thus benefit from getting together, said Reed.

The Briton was in New York last week for talks anent "Trapeze," which he directed in Paris for the Hecht-Lancaster organization. If this had been made by indie British film-makers the reduced budget would have meant diminished cast and production values.

Tight money situation for the British indies is the result of uncertainty about continuance of the Film Finance Bank, said Reed. Top-caliber operators such as J. Arthur Rank and Sir Michael Balcon have access to financing; affected are the relative newcomers. American financing would go a long way toward bringing out the talent of younger directors, for example, who have yet to establish their reputations.

"Trapeze" was Reed's first experience in working with an American unit. He stated he liked the arrangement fine, acknowledging aid from Harold Hecht on story and casting as well as the business angles. They'll work together again if they can come upon a mutually acceptable script, perhaps one that would have Reed calling the turns in Hollywood for the first time.

He left for Chicago Sunday (20) for a round of press meetings and then continues on to the Coast for confabs with Hecht, more publicity sessions and to catch the May 29 bow of "Trapeze" at the Fox Wilshire.

Loew's Regular 25c

Loew's Inc. last week declared its regular quarterly dividend of 25c per share on the common stock.

Melon is payable June 30 to shareholders of record June 14.

TODON, OUT OF LONDON, LINES UP 8 SCRIPTS

Latest indie to expand is Todon Productions, partnered by Tony Owen and Donna Reed, which will operate out of a London headquarters. Unit will turn out a program of eight pictures, costing $9,250,000, during the next 12 months, all to be made abroad. To date, Todon has six films to its credit, likewise produced overseas.

Six of the eight already are in various stages of pre-production, two to roll this summer. "Twist of the Night" rolls in July on the west coast of Africa, in association with Anglo Guild Productions, and "The Man Inside" gets away in Lisbon in August.

Balance set to date include "The Last Pursuit," to be co-produced with British Lion in Bavaria; "The Eddie Calvert Story," London; "It's Not Cricket," England; and "Wherever You Are," Naples and Sorrento.

Walt Disney has gone back into the historical archives for this account of a Union railroad raid into the Deep South during the War Between States. In CinemaScope and Technicolor, it varies between good and fair entertainment values, with enough exciting passages to promise okay prospects at the boxoffice.

Thrill high spots are in the chase action when a Confederate conductor takes after his stolen train, first on foot, then by push car and then by locomotive, in determined pursuit of the disguised Union soldiers led by secret agent James J. Andrews. After the chase is over, and the spies are captured, the film becomes rather anticlimactic. Overall, however, the Buena Vista release which Lawrence Edward Watkin wrote and produced, does maintain substantial period authenticity, thanks to antique rolling stock and well-chosen Georgia locations.

Fess Parker, as the Kentuckian Andrews who served the North, and Jeffrey Hunter, as the true Southerner, William A. Fuller, who frustrated the Union scheme to destroy Confederate railroad supply lines between Atlanta and Chattanooga, turn in convincing portrayals under Francis Lyon's able direction. John Lupton, too, rates credit for his work as William Pittenger, member of the raiding party who later authored an account of the actual incident. Lupton also does some bridging narration.

Jeff York, Eddie Firestone, Don Megowan, Claude Jarman Jr., Harry Carey Jr., and others enacting the raiders play their parts well, as do Kenneth Tobey, rail superintendent who joins Hunter on the chase; Slim Pickens, engineer, and the sundry other types, some native recruits on the location sites.

Paul Smith did the scoring and included are such old songs as "Roll, Jordan, Roll" and "Tenting Tonight," plus "Sons of Old Aunt Dinah" for which Smith and Stan Jones did the music and Watkin the lyrics. Charles Boyle's photography is firstrate, as are the editing by Ellsworth Hoagland, art direction by Carroll Clark, set decorations by Emile Kuri and Pat Delaney, and the other technical contributions. Brog.

Foreign Intrigue
(COLOR)

Television title and flavor transferred, beautifully lensed in foreign locales. Okay outlook though slow paced and overlong.

Hollywood, May 22.

Original story treatment, Reynolds. Harold J. Bloom, Gene Levitt; camera (Eastman Color), Bertil Palmgrem; editor, Lennart Wallen; music, Paul Durand; "Foreign Intrigue Concerto," Charles Norman. Previewed May 18, '56. Running time, 100 MINS.

In some aspects "Foreign Intrigue" is overdone, mostly in the deliberate directorial pacing that stretches the plot to an unnecessary 100 minutes and slows movement to a walk at times, and in the overemphasis on music. Film has a good score by Paul Durand, which includes a catchy, simple theme that attracts the ear. When the cleffing is kept simple the inherent suspense of the tale is heightened. However, the "Foreign Intrigue Concerto" by Charles Norman and other musical passages are pretentiously used, sometimes competing with dialog and story mood.

Title, overseas locales and flavor are derived by Sheldon Reynolds from his own television series. The locales are much improved in Eastman Color for theatre projection. The skullduggery of foreign spying is the same. Not that this is a literal transference from video. But the picture is a full length, and over-long, exploitation of a tv-built property.

An opening, back-dated, black-and-white scene sets the note of intrigue for the story which Reynolds wrote and directed before it moves to the present at Nice and the death of a mysterious man, whose pressagent, Mitchum, had built into a strange, romantic figure of wealth. Questions asked by odd characters lead Mitchum to back-track on the man and around that search into truth is built the suspense of the plot. The man is a blackmailer, living off of the hush-money supplied by quislings in countries that Hitler failed to invade. It's good spy stuff, and had not Reynolds spun his tale out so long would have been even more intriguing.

Mitchum gives a good account of himself in the lead role and there are any number of colorful characters to hold interest among the others in the cast. Genevieve Page, wife of the dead man, and a pretty deadly femme herself, is attractively used. Ingrid Tulean, encountered by Mitchum as the trail leads to Stockholm, has an unorthodox beauty as well as acting talent and scores soundly as the girl with whom Mitchum falls in love. Frederick O'Brady clicks as a self-seeking foreign agent, as does Gene Deckers, a bonafide government agent. Inga Tidblad is fine as Miss Tulean's mother. Frederick Schrecker and others are good types.

The production has been given exceptionally standout lensing by Bertil Palmgrem, with locales in Paris, Stockholm and Nice serving for the various international sites of the plot. Lennart Wallen's editing features those long walking shots and those quick closeup cuts seen quite often on tv dramas, and which are well suited to this story. Other technical aids are good. Brog.

Port Afrique
(BRITISH—COLOR)

Pier Angeli and Phil Carey in British-made melodrama with Moroccan backgrounds; fair b.o. hopes.

London, May 15.

Columbia release of David E. Rose production. Stars Pier Angeli, Phil Carey, Dennis Price. Directed by Rudolph Mate. Screenplay, Frank Partos and John Cresswell; camera, Wilkie Cooper; editor, Raymond Poulton; music, Malcolm Arnold. At Odeon Theatre, Marble Arch, London. Running time, 99 MINS.

Ynez ..... Pier Angeli
Rip Reardon ..... Phil Carey
Robert Blackton ..... Dennis Price
Colonel Moussac ..... Eugene Deckers
Nino ..... James Hayter
Diane Blackton ..... Rachel Gurney
Pedro ..... Anthony Newley
Abdul ..... Guido Lorraine
Grila ..... Denis Shaw
Franz Vermes ..... Christopher Lee
Police Driver ..... Guy Du Monceau

By starring Pier Angeli and Phil Carey in his color production of "Port Afrique," David E. Rose has values to help sell the picture in U.S. That's the biggest aid he has because, as an entertainment, this is lacking in suspense and tension. Little is gained from the potential exotic atmosphere of the Moroccan background.

In most respects, despite its colorful setting, this is little more than a conventional meller which tries to exploit its background. The story rarely comes to life, the dialog is mainly unspirited, and the acting never reaches accepted standards.

The story, taken from novel of the same name by Bernard Victor Dryer, has a contrived appearance in its transition from book to screen. Phil Carey plays an American airman who returns to his Moroccan home after war service to find his wife murdered. Although they know better, the police suggest it is a case of suicide, but obstinately, he refuses to accept their dictum and pursues his own inquiries. The principal suspects are a nightclub owner (James Hayter), who had been making overtures to the dead woman, and his business partner, Dennis Price, who was anxious to sell their plantation. Carey, for his part, suspects Pier Angeli, a nightclub singer, who had been a house guest with his wife. The denouement, which reveals the real killer, packs little surprises or conviction.

For the most part, the yarn is revealed in pedestrian style, the action being confined to a couple of incidents within the Casbah. Otherwise, there is no excitement or suspense. The backgrounds have a genuine look, but are hardly strong enough to sustain the main story line. The characterizations, too, lack the color and conviction to hypo the atmosphere while the total effect is disappointing.

Miss Angeli infuses a dramatic allure into her role and sings as well as she can act. Her song numbers make a romantic and dramatic impact. Carey is handicapped by a heavyhanded script, but he puts plenty of determination and sincerity into his role. Dennis Price is too obviously the suave heavy while Rachel Gurney is too clearly guilty. Eugene Deckers never convinces as the subtle police chief, but James Hayter is unfailingly polished as the tough nitery operator. Denis Shaw impresses as the latter's gorilla-like bodyguard. Rudolph Mate's direction appears to have a negative influence; other technical standards are average. Myro.

Murder On Approval

So-so London-located mystery meller.

Hollywood, May 15.

RKO release of Robert S. Baker, Monty Berman production. Stars Tom Conway, Delphi Lawrence, Brian Worth, Michael Balfour; features Campbell Cotts, John Horsley. Directed by Bernard Knowles. Screenplay, Kenneth R. Hayles; camera, Monty Berman; editor, Jack Slade. Previewed May 11, '56. Running time, 70 MINS.

Tom "Duke" Martin ..... Tom Conway
Jean Larsen ..... Delphi Lawrence
Geoffrey Blake ..... Brian Worth
Barney ..... Michael Balfour
Coburn ..... Campbell Cotts
Inspector Taylor ..... John Horsley
Gordoni ..... Ronan O'Casey
Merleigh ..... Launce Maraschal
Lord Valchrist ..... Colin Tapley
Henry Warburg ..... Alan Gifford
Lady Hawksley ..... Grace Arnold
First Man ..... John Collicos
Yamina ..... Magura
Sergeant Grant ..... John Watson
Second Man ..... Reg Morris
Woman Cleaner ..... Marianne Stone
Manager ..... Derrick Whittingham
Garage Attendant ..... Frank Pemberton
Fingerprinter ..... Neil Wilson
Hawksley Maid ..... Olive Kirby
Receptionist ..... Rosamund Waring
Air Stewardess ..... Margaret Rowe
Girl at Airport ..... Maureen Connell

This London-located mystery meller is only so-so as entertainment and will just get by in lower-case programmer bookings. With possible exception of Tom Conway, the British cast is unfamiliar, so there's no help there for playdates.

Kenneth R. Hayles' plot and dialog aren't credible in telling the story of a super private investigator sent to London to find out whether a rare and expensive stamp bought by a collector is a phony. In between getting himself involved in a couple of murders and picking up unlikely clues, Conway, as a sleuth, finds time to act kittenish with all the girls that cross his path, even Delphi Lawrence, who's in on the stamp racket with Brian Worth, worthless nephew of the late, titled owner of the original rarity.

Bernard Knowles' direction is poorly paced and seldom builds to any thrills. His comedy handling is inept, too, but the script lines are no help in the chuckle department to him or to Michael Balfour, doing an ex-crook friend who helps Conway clear up the case. None of the cast can do much with the stereotype characters. Production by Robert S. Baker and Monty Berman has only fair budget values and technical assists are stock. Brog.

The Killing

Suspenseful melo for good showing in action market.

Hollywood, May 18.

United Artists release of a James B. Harris production. Stars Sterling Hayden; costars Coleen Gray, Vince Edwards; features Jay C. Flippen, Marie Windsor, Ted DeCorsia. Directed by Stanley Kubrick; screenplay, Kubrick, from Lionel White novel, "Clean Break"; camera, Lucien Ballard; editor, Betty Steinberg. Previewed May 16, '56. Running time, 84 MINS.

Johnny Clay ..... Sterling Hayden
Fay ..... Coleen Gray
Val Cannon ..... Vince Edwards
Marvin Unger ..... Jay C. Flippen
Sherry Peatty ..... Marie Windsor
Randy Kennan ..... Ted DeCorsia
George Peatty ..... Elisha Cook
Mike O'Reilly ..... Joe Sawyer
Nikki Arane ..... Tim Carey
Leo ..... Jay Adler
Tiny ..... Joseph Turkel
Kola Kwarian ..... Maurice Oboukhoff

This story of a $2,000,000 race track holdup and steps leading up to the robbery is sturdy fare for the action market, where it can be exploited for better than average returns. Occasionally told in a documentary style, which at first tends to be somewhat confusing, it soon settles into a tense and suspenseful vein which carries through to an unexpected and ironic windup. Hard-hitting and colorful performances point up story values. It's first production of the new team of James B. Harris and Stanley Kubrick.

Sterling Hayden, an ex-con, masterminds the plan which includes five men. Kubrick's direction of his own script is tight and fast-paced, a quality Lucien Ballard's top photography matches to lend particular fluidity of movement, and Harris makes wise use of his budget for first-rate production results. Excellent stock footage augments outfit's own filming of racetrack scenes.

Characters involved in the crime include Elisha Cook, a colorless little cashier at the track who is hopelessly in love with his glamorous, trampish wife, Marie Windsor; Ted DeCorsia, a racketeering cop; Jay C. Flippen, a reformed drunk; and Joe Sawyer, track bartender. Each has his own job to do in the scheme that Hayden has evolved, and action follows each to the moment when Hayden dons a rubber mask and enters the track office to grab off the loot while a riot he has arranged is occupying the cops. As he's making a later getaway at the airport, a large suitcase carrying the coin falls off a baggage truck and the bills fly to the wind in the propeller wash of an arriving plane.

Hayden socks over a restrained characterization, and Cook is a particular standout as a man prodded by his wife's demands for luxury. Miss Windsor, in this role, also is particularly good, who digs the plan out of her husband and reveals it to her boyfriend, Vince Edwards, a small time hood who tries to cut himself into the deal. Both Edwards and Coleen Gray, costarred, are in only briefly, but satisfactorily. Flippen is up to his usual topgrade, and DeCorsia and Sawyer meet demands of their respective roles. Maurice Oboukhoff, a wrestler whom Hayden hires to start the riot, stages a bruising battle with the cops.

HEAR REPUBLIC UP FOR GRABS

Can You Snub $50,000,000?

That's Banker Slant on Chesler Terms Opposed By Arthur Loew—Bud Barry Feels Out Webs

A basic difference of opinion on the best manner to release the pre-1948 Metro films to television exists among the board of directors of Loew's. The banking group, as represented by Paul Manheim of Lehman Bros. and Charles Stewart of Lazard Freres, is strongly in favor of accepting Lou Chesler's offer of $50,000,000 for 970 features and 1,000 shorts including, some sources say, others deny, "Gone With the Wind." The Loew's management, however, under the leadership of prexy Arthur M. Loew, is opposed to the outright sale of the backlog and is supporting a leasing or supervised distribution system.

Despite reports that Loew's has nixed the Chesler offer, via the Ridgeway Corp., the corporate shell of the former Campbell, Wyant & Cannon Foundry Co., the deal still has a 50-50 chance of being consummated, according to informed sources. Some Wall Street sources even give it better odds and aver that there is an "excellent" chance that the Chesler offer will be accepted. "Any offer for $50,000,000 has to be given serious consideration," observed an informant involved in the negotiations. The Chesler offer was submitted in writing following the informal board discussion last week and is presently being studied by the Loew's management.

A spokesman for Loew's insisted that the company hasn't worked out "its destiny yet" in relation to its future in television. He said the company was still studying "several offers" and he stated that "purely in my opinion" the outright sale to Chesler "won't go through." Under consideration, it's said, is an offer of $35,000,000 from National Telefilm Associates for a long-term distribution deal.

As is customary in film industry corporate negotiations, there were many reports and counter-reports last week. Outside distributors mentioned as possibilities in addition to NTA were Ziv, MCA and even Columbia's Screen Gems. Wall Streeters, however, discounted the distribution reports and continued high on the Chesler agreement.

If the Chesler deal is completed, it's understood that Ridgeway will make a $20,000,000 down payment, with $10,000,000 due after the first year of the signing of the contract and the balance being paid over a two-and-a-half to five-year period.

The discussion at last week's Loew's board meeting involved arguments offered by both sides on the advisability of each method of releasing the films to television. The banker members, it's reported, stressed that the value of the library might decrease if the company continued to withhold its release to tv. The $50,000,000 offer, it was argued, was most generous and would place the production company in a good financial position when the stock of the present company is split between the theatre company and the production-distribution company. After a capital gains tax, the company would net $37,500,000.

The management argument was that Loew's would eventually get into tv in some form and it did not want to see a situation arise where it would have to compete with its own library. Management also discounted the possibility of the backlog's value decreasing, noting that tv is insatiable and that the Metro films would always get a good price on the tv market." In addition, management felt that a distribution method, either through an established tv distrib or through the company's own set-up, might in the long run bring in more coin than an outright sale at present.

According to one board member, it boils down to "a matter of judgment" and if the difference of opinion continues, a situation might arise where there would be a showdown via a vote of the board.

In the midst of the various considerations, there were reports that Charles C. (Bud) Barry, elected v.p. in charge of television at last week's board meeting, was making the rounds of the networks exploring the possibility of the release on a package basis of the films directly to the networks.

Also named a v.p. at the board meeting was Frank B. Walker, general manager of MGM Records.

Board also declared a dividend of 25c on the company's common stock, payable June 30 to stockholders of record June 14.

Censor Bill Dies In Penn.; 3% Tax On Rentals Nixed

Harrisburg, May 22.

Film industry won a dual-pronged victory of major importance here today (Tues.) as the Pennsylvania State Legislature adjourned. On the first count, a new censorship measure died as the 17-month-long session came to an end. Bill had been introduced in the House, was amended in the Senate and all the while threatened exhibitors and distributors with a new set of blue-pencil do's and don'ts.

Secondly, film rentals have been exempted from the state's new 3% sales tax. Whether the levy was to apply to rentals was subject to legislative interpretation; it's now been rendered clear that the trade will escape the tax.

Trio of industryites worked together in the state capital against both the censorship move and the 3% bite, namely William P. Clark, president of National Film Carriers; William Goldman, circuit owner, and Manning (Tim) Clagett, director of public relations at the New York office of the Motion Picture Assn. of America.

BEVHILLS BANK IN YATES DEAL?

Hollywood, May 22.

Unconfirmed reports here are that Herbert J. Yates has granted an option for sale of his controlling stock in Republic Pictures to Cantor, Fitzgerald Co. Inc., Beverly Hills investment bankers.

Deal is said to involve 650,000 shares, representing one-third of the total outstanding.

Music Corp. of America has been rumored as being interested in the film company but it was emphatically stated by an exec at that agency that there's no link with the reported Cantor - Fitzgerald transaction. He further added that MCA is not considering any kind of Rep buy at all.

Over the past several years Yates had been approached many times by would-be buyers whom he has always turned down. Particularly choice property of the Rep corporation is the North Hollywood studios which the company uses for feature and telefilm production plus rental to outsider theatrical and tv producers.

PLOT TO EXCLUDE?

Fanciful, Thinks Sir Carol Reed Of John Davis' Charge

Sir Carol Reed states he never heard of any "conspiracy" among American exhibitors to restrict the playing time of British pictures. Informed that John Davis, general manager of the J. Arthur Rank Organization, had made such a charge, the British director retorted "there's no foundation for it."

Reed said further he was against the idea of sending an American rep to London to advise on how to slant British pictures for the Yank market. It's better to align with an American producer, such as Harold Hecht, and seek out his counsel, he aded.

As for production formula for low-budget English product, Reed advocates aiming for the native boxoffice appeal.

Gilbert Didn't Know Question He Asked Was in 20th Report; Skouras Refuses Him a Reply

Stockholder ignorance and management secrecy were highlighted at last week's 20th-Fox annual stockholders meeting and resulted in a lively exchange between Lewis D. Gilbert, prexy Spyros P. Skouras and Robert Mahan.

Both Gilbert and Mahan are stockholders and, before a meeting that registered a mixture of amusement and annoyance, they engaged in a shouting match over a question put by Gilbert to Skouras. The question was: How much had it cost 20th to acquire the Schlesinger theatre interests in South Africa?

Skouras refused to supply the info, pointing out that there were occasions when it wasn't in the interest of either the company or the stockholders to make certain figures public. He offered to supply the data privately to interested stockholders.

What neither Skouras nor the stockholders seemed to be aware of was that the answer to Gilbert's question was spelled out, quite in detail, in the 20th stockholders report which is public and available to all.

On page 16, under the heading "Deposit on Account of Acquisition of Foreign Theatres," the report said hat a wholly-owned subsidiary of 20th had deposited in escrow approximately $4,200,000 as part of the purchase price, of which $1,400,000 was advanced by the corporation and the balance obtained via South African bank loan. The report said that, following consummation of the deal, "additional advances of $3,500,000 in U. S. funds ultimately will be required, making a total cost in United States dollars of $4,900,000."

Skouras also refused to tell stockholders terms of the 20th sale of 52 feature pix to National Telefilm Associates. Details were printed in many papers, including VARIETY and the Times, the next day.

Gilbert pressed Skouras for an answer to the Schlesinger question, stating that the lid should be kept on such info for only a limited time. Mahan took the position that the management had a perfect right to withhold certain information, and both he and Gilbert issued invitations to one another to step outside to settle their differences. A third stockholder rose to remind one-and all of Gilbert's right to ask any questions he pleased, which in turn seemed to please the rest of the stockholders.

Whole timewasting incident could have been avoided had someone only bothered to read through the annual report.

Hyman Points Up Moral of Good Product For May

Business racked up over last weekend by Paramount's "The Man Who Knew Too Much" and Warner Bros.' "The Searchers" in American Broadcasting-Paramount houses is evidence that there are no seasons in the film industry, according to AB-PT v.p. Edward L. Hyman.

Hyman, who with AB-PT prexy Leonard Goldenson has long campaigned for an orderly release of pictures, said the returns on the two pictures served to demonstrate that "a good attraction can bring in a healthy gross any time of the year." Hyman had previously charged that the film companies withheld top product during May and that the month had become an "orphan" period.

Yank Film Folk Shudder at 97.5% Tax in Britain

By HAROLD MYERS

London, May 22.

The entire American film colony in London will take a severe knock if a new income tax proposal, slipped quietly into the Finance Bill, becomes law. It may compel many of them, for economic reasons, to quit their London posts and return to their New York base.

The proposed amendment to the tax laws would make it necessary for all Americans employed in London to pay income tax at the maximum rate on all their earnings which accrue to their credit

RIVALS FORCE 20TH ALL-FRONT RETREAT FROM ORIGINAL C'SCOPE CRITERIA

The leadership in widescreen development assumed by 20th Century-Fox in 1954 was accompanied by a fixed set of principles.

The rough and tumble realities of the markets and the failure of its competitors to conform with Skouras-Zanuck quality standards on CinemaScope have now compelled the company to retreat from three basic conditions originally set forth as regards:

1) Sound
2) Color
3) Width

Most recently a decision has been reached by 20th prexy Spyros P. Skouras to utilize combination optical-magnetic prints. Policy goes into effect starting with the release of "Bus Stop." 20th plans to service fewer stereophonic prints in the future, cutting them down from a former 270 to around 200.

In another area, Skouras acknowledged in N.Y. last week that 20th was now ready to make CinemaScope pictures in black-and-white "if the right subjects come along." He pointed to the example of Metro, which is making "The Power and the Prize" in monochrome C'Scope, and noted that there was no reason not to skip tinting if it aided the effects in the film. In the past, at least while Darryl F. Zanuck headed up the studio, color was a "must" for all of 20th's features.

By using combo optical-magnetic prints, the width of C'Scope is cut down by about 10%. 20th execs have, from time to time, held that this represented a "bastardization" of the medium. For several years, they have maintained that the combination of width, color and stereo sound was necessary to present CinemaScope under the possible conditions.

There are now indications that 20th may, at times and depending on the nature of the film, choose to cut stereo-striped prints even below the 200 volume. It's pointed out that there are certain films in which there is very little stereophonic recording in the first place.

The combination prints, now used by Metro (which also adds Perspecta-Sound), allow a theatre to play the picture according to its equipment. Only a slight change in the sprocket size is necessary to accomodate these prints.

Foreign Market, Too

According to present indications, 20th intends to intro the combo versions also in the foreign market. There, however, the situation is somewhat different, since there are countries where there are actually more stereophonic installations than optical ones.

In the U.S. and Canada, where there are presently 17,058 houses equipped for CinemaScope, only 3,658 are fitted for stereophonic sound and 12,457 can play optical. Total of theatres that have installed the 20th-sponsored penthouses runs only to 116. The penthouse allows a theatre with only optical equipment to play a stereophonic print by picking up the second, or catchall magnetic track.

20th's problem, both in color and sound, has been primarily an economic one. While it has felt a strong responsibility towards the houses which originally equipped for stereophonic sound, it has also found that the magnetic prints, which are very expensive, have been laying idle after a very limited playoff. The combo versions will make these prints available for additional use.

It's believed among film execs that 20th's insistence on color and sound has cost the company an added $3,000,000 each year in print costs.

Other distribs, such as Universal, for a time adopted the combination prints, but then dropped them for the overseas market. U found that it was too expensive to send a striped print into a territory where only one or two theatres might be equipped for stereo.

There is some bitterness among 20th's top echelon over this whole situation. Feeling is that 20th was "let down" by the other companies which didn't seem to care as much for quality of presentation. Fact is, however, that the stereophonic sound never came to mean very much, at least at the U.S. boxoffice.

At the start, 20th insisted on CinemaScope with stereo sound only. It wasn't long, however, before the company agreed to make optical versions available also.

CARTOONISTS HEADING FOR JURISDICTIONALISM

Hollywood, May 22.

Jurisdictional hassle seems imminent, with filing by indie Screen Cartoonists Guild for jurisdiction over Warner Bros. and Walter Lantz Productions cartooning employes last week. Both these firms, plus UPA Pictures, for which SCG previously filed jurisdiction proceedings with National Labor Relations Board earlier last week, are currently repped by IATSE Motion Picture Cartoonists Local 839.

SCG move was initiated by petitions from the various firms' employes, asking that it move in, it's understood. Some 60 workers are involved at Warners and 10 at Lantz.

Until recently, the IA Cartoonists have generally held sway in entertainment cartoons, while SCG has had the teleblurb field. However, in the recent past, the IA Local has inked a number of teleblurberies and SCG's move presages a putsch into the entertainment field.

"Anything Goes" is rated fair $12,000 in three spots plus $30,000 in eight nabes. "Screaming Eagles" looms modest $17,000 for two large houses.

Chicago, May 22.

Strong new entries are not helping much, with current session still sluggish.

"The Searchers" looks like good $48,000 in first round at the Chicago, helped by a John Wayne opening personal. Also new, "Helen of Troy" is rated light $25,000 at State-Lake.

Pittsburgh, May 22.

Downtown finally showing a little life after a depressing month. Stanley had latched onto a winner in "The Man Who Knew Too Much." Fulton is up considerably, too, with "Revolt of Mamie Stover." "Ladykillers" continues to slay 'em in third week at Guild, art naber. "Hilda Crane" dying at Harris and "Gaby," paired with "Wedding at Monaco," is doing nothing at the Penn.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 65-$1)—"Revolt Mamie Stover" (20th). Tall $7,500, way over what house has been doing recently. Will probably stay. Last week, "Creature Walks Among Us" (U) and "Price of Fear" (U), $3,500.

Warner (SW) (1,365; $1.25-$2.40)—"Seven Wonders of World" (Indie) (5th wk). Off a bit but not enough to hurt much. Socko $20,000, way above preceding Cinerama pix at this stage. Last week, $21,400.

Estimates Are Net

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

'Alex' Oke $11,000, Mpls.; 'Heroes' 9G

Minneapolis, May 22.

Two boxoffice giants, "Alexander the Great" and "Cockleshell Heroes," top the fresh entries here this round. They are helping to overcome a seasonal slump here which has been spreading gloom. Presence of legit "Teahouse of August Moon," the Metropolitan Opera Co. and local American Association baseball club in its new muchly ballyhooed new $4,500,000 stadium is distracting attention away from films to some extent. Weekend weather, again favorable for outdoor activities, didn't help the cinemas either with hot Sunday weather cutting in.

Estimates for This Week

RKO Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 75-$1)—"Cockleshell Heroes" (Col). Crix and patrons have gone for this one. Good $9,000. Last week, "Bold and Brave" (RKO), $6,000.

World (Mann) (400; 75-$1.20)—"Naked Night" (Indie). Swedish pic advertised as definitely "not for junior," a probable boxoffice asset for this particular house. However, moderate $3,000 looks about all. Last week, "Doctor at Sea" (Rep), $3,400.

'Mamie' Torrid $10,000, Prov.; 'Birds' Fair 7G, 'Las Vegas' $9,500, 2d

Providence, May 22.

Grosses are running the scale hereabouts this week with little explanation for the sharp declines in some spots. Majestic is tops with "Revolt of Mamie Stover," a smooth session being in sight. State's holdover of "Meet Me in Las Vegas" is nice. Strand's "Birds and the Bees" shapes very mild.

D.C. Down; 'Mamie' Best Bet, Oke $10,000 in 2d

Washington, May 22.

Main stem biz seems to have sunk prematurely into summer doldrums, despite unusually cool weather. Lack of sock product and prevalence of holdovers are combining to give the firstruns the lowest stanza in months. Sole newcomer, "On the Threshold of Space" at RKO Keith's is tepid. Holdovers are generally mild. However, "Cinerama Holiday," which is maintaining steady pace in windup of eighth month at the Warner. "Revolt of Mamie Stover" too is fine in second Palace week.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (SW) (1,490; 75-$1)—"Distant Drums" (WB) and "Dallas" (WB) (reissues). Okay

Mild weather and shortage of new, strong product are being blamed for the current tone at the Broadway deluxers. However, despite the general downbeat, a few situations are faring well.

Ace newcomer is "Man Who Knew Too Much," which wound up its initial session with a smash $65,000 at the Paramount where it looks in for a longrun. Next best showing by a new entry is being made by "While City Sleeps" although only fair $16,000 in first week at the Criterion.

"23 Paces To Baker St." with Ralph Slater on the stage is heading for a light $15,000 or near at the State. Also new, "Great Day in Morning" with vaudeville looks like a slow $14,500 at the Palace which obviously, too, was hurt by the general slump.

"Battle of Gettysburg" and "Wedding in Monaco" looks to hit smash $15,000 opening round at the Guild after hitting opening day record. "The Killing" at the Mayfair started out mildly and looks only $12,000 or less on week.

"Harder They Fall" held strong $21,000 in second stanza at the Astor. "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" with iceshow continues nicely with $41,000 in current (6th) session at the Roxy. "Flesh Merchant" and "Sword of Granada," firstrun combo, is landing a terrific $10,000 at Rialto, and looks in for longrun.

"The Swan" with stageshow look okay $118,000 in final (4th) week at the Music Hall. "Bhowani Junction" with new stageshow opens tomorrow (Thurs.). "Crime in Streets" opens today (Wed.) at the Victoria after three very lean weeks with "Hilda Crane."

EX-AMBASSADOR (CHILE) BEHIND PLAN TO HYPO LATIN PIX CO-PRODUCTION

Hitherto ignored by Hollywood filmmakers in the expanding global production scheme, South American countries now are making a strong pitch for coproductions to be filmed in the Latin American countries. Movement is being sparked by Hernan Santa Cruz, former chairman of the United Nations delegation of Chile who is in the process of organizing a South American production company.

As a starter the former Chilean ambassador, who is assembling a group of social, business and political leaders of various Latin American countries, has made an arrangement with indie producer Lester Cowan to launch the first South American project—a biopic of Simon Bolivar, "the George Washington of South America."

Under the deal with Cowan, negotiated by Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr., the Latin American group will provide a portion of the financing and also arrange for the use of facilities in various South American countries. Cowan, for his part, must deliver the major part of the financing as well as distribution by a leading U. S. film company.

U. S. Chiefly Finances

According to Cowan, he will approach a major distributor for the financing and release guarantee as soon as he is armed with a finished screenplay, stars and director. Santa Cruz, in New York last week, left for Latin America over the weekend and will visit Panama, Venezuela, Columbia, Ecuador and other Latin American countries to arrange for the necessary cooperation as well as financing from local groups. He said he did not expect any conflict among the different countries and that his aim was to seek out people who are endowed with an "international spirit" and who are interested in presenting to the world a true picture of South America.

He stressed that he hoped the Bolivar project would be the beginning of a series of films dealing with South America. While the first would be a historical subject with spectacle appeal, subsequent films, he said, would have as their objective the presentation of "interesting and entertaining" stories with a South American background. He cited as examples such U. S. films as "Summertime" and "Three Coins in the Fountain," which extolled the beauties of Italy, as the types of pictures which could be made with South American backgrounds. These films as well as other foreign-located pictures, Santa Cruz felt, can be of inestimable value in building up tourism. He also was of the opinion that serious films, dealing with various aspects of S. A. life, would have an appeal to U. S. and world-wide audiences. He cited the story of La Prensa, the Argentine newspaper suppressed by the Peron regime, as a possible film subject.

Objective in pitching for coproductions, according to Santa Cruz, was to correct the false picture of Latin America as shown in Hollywood films. He said Bolivar marks the beginning "of a series of intense efforts to break down the wall of ighorance and misrepresentation" that exists in North America relative to itis South American neighbors.

Other Angles

"Latin American people," Santa Cruz said, "have often been presented in caricatures, which emphasize and even exaggerate their picturesque customs and idiosyncrasies. Our countries resent this type of presentation and ardently desire that the people of the United States know our history, our achievements in the fields of science, art and literature, and our efforts towards economic, social and cultural progess and our desire to reach a standard of democratic living similar to our brothers in the North."

Santa Cruz said that, except for a few theatres in the U. S. catering to Spanish-speaking audiences, Latin American films have been unable to crash the U. S. market. He hoped that the coproductions, made in English, would get widespread distribution in the U. S. and throughout the world and thus serve as a public relations medium for South America.

Basis for the film on Bolivar will be "Simon Bolivar," a new historical novel by Enrique Campos Menendez. The author is currently in New York working on a screen treatment. Both U. S. and Latin American stars and technicians will participate in the films which will be shot in the Bolivarian countries—Bolivia, Equador, Columbia, Panama, Peru and Venezuela. Use of the troops of these countries will be sought by Santa Cruz to recreate the major campaigns of liberation, including Bolivar's crossing of the Andes. Romantic angles will be included in the film via Teresa, the girl from Madrid whom Bolivar married, and Manuelita, the Equadorian girl who loved Bolivar and fought at his side to the very end. Cowan will visit South America during July to line up the actual locations. He expects to start filming in February, 1957.

RENTAL STUDIO DISPUTE

Ted Allen Settles With Auto Dealer & Mortician

Los Angeles, May 22.

Litigation between cameraman Ted Allen and A. C. Burger, St. Louis auto dealer and mortician Paul Glass over operation of a small rental studio was settled out of court here after an involved tangle. Allen and his wife had asked for $711,666, contending they had remodeled the studio from a market in a partnership agreement with the defendants but were left out of control and Allen eliminated from employment when the studio was incorporated and Burger took over.

Burger said he had advanced coin for remodeling and was entitled to a controlling interest. Understood Allen and his wife dropped the action in return for cancellation of two judgments totaling $3,000 which Burger held against them for personal loans.

Darryl Zanuck Contract Covers $9-Mil Financing, Advisory Compensation

Under the proposed new contract between Darryl F. Zanuck and 20th-Fox, the studio will provide 50% of the negative cost of each picture to be produced by Zanuck. In addition, 20th will supply studio facilities and will stand ready to loan the producer his remaining 50% share of the cost.

Contract, under which the current Zanuck deal with 20th would be terminated as of June 30, 1956, has been approved by referee Abraham Greenberg. Supreme Court Justice Thomas A. Aurelio will rule on the contract May 29.

Pact provides that Zanuck can independently produce a maximum of five pix a year with a top aggregate cost of $9,000,000. No film can cost more than $5,000,000, and if one hits above the $4,000,000 mark it'll then be Zanuck's only production for that year.

If Judge Aurelio approves the contract, Zanuck goes on an advisory basis starting July 1 for a 10-year period at $2,885 a week for the first seven years and $1,923 for the last three years. However, he can terminate that partime arrangement during the last three years of the deal.

Under the agreement, Zanuck has to start his indie production wheels turning not later than Dec. 1, 1956. No more than two films can be in actual production in any one year. Contract eliminates the controversial death benefit clause, which has been attacked in a stockholder suit, and it provides that the producer buy up his $1,092,500 life insurance policy before the end of the year. Insurance was taken out by 20th.

Contract gives 20th a 21-year license on the Zanuck pix which the producer is allowed to make with complete autonomy.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

One of those grim comedy of errors which one savvy showman thought couldn't happen to him, has snafued longtime Paramount Pictures' London rep, Richard L. Mealand, who is now convalescing at his Old Lyme, (Conn.) home from cancer of the jaw, contracted in England. Refusing to return to the States, at Par international topper George Weltner's invitation, he underwent operation in England. Apart from the inept surgery, there was also a bungling in the administration of the anasthesia, with result it has also affected Mealand's mobility.

However, since returning to the U. S., the Par production topper in Britain has conciliated himself to preliminary therapy, to be followed by plastic surgery and other expert medical care under American methods.

Weltner cites the progress made by Pat Purcell, Par's longtime traffic manager in France, who contracted leukemia in Paris but, upon his return to New York's Memorial Hospital, for transfusion's etc., he is at least now ambulatory and making progress.

Mealand had been a magazine editor and writer until joining Par's eastern story department under Russell Holman, shifting to England several years ago as London rep for the company. He has since been succeeded by the late J. G. Bachmann's son, Lawrence; the father was a Par producer in the middle span of Par's development.

John Krimsky, an exec at the Donahue & Coe agency, is beginning to feel that the film and legit properties which he initiated in the thirties had a delayed fuse on them. No fewer than five projects with which he was associated, or which he owned, have been revived or are under active consideration again.

Remake of "Maedchen in Uniform" (1932), on which Krimsky owns the German-version distribution and English-language remake rights, is under consideration, and he may complete the dubbing job on it for possible tv presentation; in 1933 he produced Eugene O'Neill's "Emperor Jones," not considered commercial at the time because of its Negro theme. Now Universal has bought it from him and the O'Neill estate for a remake, and it's also been on tv.

Krimsky originally produced "The Threepenny Opera" in 1933 at the Empire Theatre and introed Kurt Weill to America. It ran only 12 performances. Now it's a big hit at the Theatre de Lys. In 1936, Krimsky acquired the flim rights to "High Wind in Jamaica," but couldn't sell the property. Now 20th-Fox will make it. Krimsky also owns the rights to Jules Romains' "Dr. Knock" and hopes to lick translation problems to bring the satire to Broadway.

Conclusion: In the long run, it pays to be ahead of your day.

Being involved in all phases of creative show business, including television, theatrical films, and the legit theatre, is apparently intriguing a number of young producers. The spark for the multi-faceted approach is usually ignited by the initial transfer from television to feature pictures, which is obviously giving the young showmen the confidence to attempt to conquer new worlds.

The new modus operandi, a gleam of a number of indies, is the goal of Sheldon Reynolds, the 32-year-old telepix producer who rose to fame via his "Foreign Intrigue" series. Reynolds is currently launching his theatrical film career with a feature-length offshoot of "Foreign Intrigue," which he wrote, produced, and directed.

In New York to confer with United Artists, which financed "Foreign Intrigue," Reynolds plans to form a producing organization made up of a "group without limitation." The unit, he said, would be "complete in itself" and will not be "pinned down to any media."

Reynolds is talking to the distribution company's toppers about future picture deals. He is dropping his "Sherlock Holmes" tv series and possibly the "Foreign Intrigue" telepix, the future of the latter depending on the reception of theatrical film.

Five Asian cultural leaders told a U. of Minnesota press conference that American films and comic books "are bringing a distorted picture of the United States and its people to the Orient." Five are in the U. S. to attend a series of conferences arranged by UNESCO. One said, "You Americans have so much good writing and literary work generally it is too bad most Asians see you through the eyes of the movies and comics." Another asked, "Can't films of educational nature that depict the true America be made and circulated to counter the typical Hollywood type?"

Although no decision has yet been reached on the picture she'll do, Lana Turner is understood to be guaranteed in the neighborhood of $300,000—against a 50% participation in the profits—for her one-picture deal at Universal. She has story approval as well as approval of certain other elements. She's still under non-exclusive contract to Metro which has a pre-empt right on her services.

Sol Lesser Productions Inc., owned and operated by Sol Lesser, will continue to produce Tarzan and other pictures under the supervision of Lesser. Company sold to Jacques Grinieff was the Sol Lesser Pictures Service Corp., a subsidiary which engaged in the trading of foreign films. Name of this company has been changed to Prudential Motion Pictures Co. and Lesser has no part of the company.

L.A. BOOTHMEN DEMANDS

Los Angeles, May 22.

Pay boosts of 40c an hour for the first year and 30c an hour for the second year have been demanded of local circuit and independent theatres by Projectionists Local 150 IATSE. Union also wants double-time on legal holidays, an improved vacation schedule and an eight-cent-an-hour payment by the theatres into a welfare fund.

Demands now are being studied by the Southern California Theatre Owners Association and a negotiation session is slated for Thursday (15). Local 150's pact with the indies expired Jan. 30 and the contract with the major circuits runs out June 30.

RKO Foreign Staff Moves

Melvin B. Danheiser, member of the exec staff at the RKO foreign department, has been elevated to assistant to foreign sales manager Sidney Kramer.

In another switch made by global sales chief Walter Branson, Julius Stein has moved from the domestic accounting division to the foreign end, taking over sales control of Latin America and the Far East.

Eugene W. Castle Fights Losing Battle; Congress Ups Info Appropriation

Washington, May 22.

An appropriation of $115,000,000 for the U. S. Information Agency was okayed last weekend by the Senate Appropriations Committee. This was an increase of $5,000,000 over what the House voted. One of the final witnesses heard by the committee before its action was Eugene W. Castle, a Republican and author of "Billions, Blunders & Baloney," who has been campaigning for several years for a sharp reduction of USIA funds. Castle urged that no more than $50,000,000 be provided for the next fiscal year.

The sum recommended by the committee would be a record-breaking total for the agency. Generous provision is made for the Voice of America and the motion picture service.

However, the Senate Committee did join the House in killing a USIA proposal to convert a World War II baby flattop into a floating Cinerama theatre for the Far East. Project would have cost about $3,250,000.

EXHIB DATA FAKE, SAY DISTRIBS

Invitation to the Danse Macabre

Washington, May 22.

Waxing bitter on the Senate witness stand here, Paramount's studio chief Y. Frank Freeman offered theatre operators the following barbed invitation:

"Get out of the side of the film business which is so unfair to you and come over to the side where you think all the glamor and money is. Paramount will rent you space and let you use Paramount's producers and directors—of course, at the salaries we pay them."

Freeman Speaks For Hollywood

Tells Senate Studios Get Next to No Exhib Support For 'New Faces'

Washington, May 22.

More than two-thirds of the "high quality" pictures that will be made in Hollywood during 1956 will involve the participation of independent units with the major film companies, Paramount production chief Y. Frank Freeman opined in his testimony yesterday (Mon.) before the Senate Small Business Subcommittee investigating industry trade practices. Freeman, in his prepared statement, cited this situation to give the solons a picture of Hollywood's changing modus operandi and to answer exhibitor charges that the film companies are deliberately creating a product shortage by producing less pictures.

Freeman maintained that the "transition from the old order to the new" (participation agreements instead of contract performers and creative talent) is rapidly taking place at all studios and that it is impossible to plan a specified number of pictures annually. The control of this, he said, is in the hands of the indie units.

As an example of the changing economic status of Hollywood, Freeman noted that the number of pictures made in Hollywood has declined from a high of about 425, not including 100 so-called quickies, to about 300 in 1955. He pointed out, however, that the 300 pictures, not including participation payments, cost $300,000,000 as compared to the $250,000,000 cost of the 525 pictures. Thus, he stressed, it cost the industry $50,000,000 more to make 225 less pictures now as compared with 15 years ago.

Noting the limited number of personalities that are b.o. draws, Freeman said there is high competition for their services and that "they are in a position to decide what motion pictures they will make and the terms under which they will make them." Top stars, he said, can command as much as one-half of the profits with the studio taking all the investment risk. Top producers, directors, and writers, he said, can command not only substantial salaries but substantial participations as well.

Hollywood, he emphasized, is making every effort to develop new personalities but "receives little help or no help from the exhibitor" although they continue to clamor for new faces. Efforts would continue to develop new stars, the Par exec said, but as a representative of stockholders he must make deals for pictures "that will most nearly insure the success of the picture."

Freeman said that 15 years ago Hollywood's revenue was derived 75% to 80% from the domestic market and 20% to 25% from the foreign market. Today, he asserted, 42% to 45% of the income is derived from the foreign market and that if it were not for this foreign income every Hollywood studio would be out of business in a short while. He said, therefore, that the film companies must produce pictures with an international appeal.

The Par studio chief, in discussing rising production costs, pointed out that the salaries of studio craft workers has increased over 100% and in some cases as much as 150% since 1939.

Investment Risks

Washington, May 22.

In explaining the investment risks undertaken by the production companies, Y. Frank Freeman, in his testimony before the Senate Small Business Subcommittee yesterday (Mon.) cited Paramount's experience with "The Gold Rush."

The picture, according to Freeman, cost $2,250,000, less print, distribution, and advertising costs. He said the film rental in the U. S. and Canadian market will not exceed $800,000.

Schimel Uppercuts TOA on Walkaway From Arbiter Plan

Washington, May 22.

Adolph Schimel, v.p. and general counsel of Universal, devoted the major portion of his prepared statement to the Senate Small Business Subcommittee hearing yesterday (Mon.) to reviewing the efforts to establish an industry arbitration system.

He expressed his "disillusionment and keen disappointment" at TOA's superficial presention to the committee and its sudden turndown of the arbitration system after two years of work.

In discussing the pre-release section of the arbitration plan, Schimel noted that the 10 film companies had released approximately 275 pictures per year during the last several years and that since the 1953 hearings of the committee there has not been a single prerelease.

He termed the testimony of the exhibitors as "shotgun shooting," with no effort being made to present factual data to back up their charges.

TOA's aboutface on the arbitration system, he said, was a "betrayal" to the distributors as well as to the recommendations of the Senate committee.

On exhibitor demands for arbitration of film rentals, Schimel said the "abdication of decision on price necessarily involves a complete disruption of the producer's business . . . Nowhere in American industry can a parallel for this suggestion be found."

The profits of the producer-distributors as presented by the exhibitors include profits from unrelated enterprises as well as production-distribution profits, Schimel noted.

Universal's door is open to every exhibitor with a complaint, but as a matter of practice, U cannot take "counsel with our competitors" or permit "our competitors to sit in judgment on the propriety of our policies." This statement was an answer to the exhib request for an all-industry conference.

SENATORS JUMP AT ALLEGATIONS

By HERMAN A. LOWE

Washington, May 22.

Exhibitor complaints against film distributors are largely deliberate misrepresentations and refusals to recognize the true situation existing in picture production, the U.S. Senate's Small Business Subcommittee was told during the two days of hearings which end this afternoon (Tues.).

Spokesmen for Hollywood and the distribution end of the business hit back with specific answers to the charges made by the exhibitors before the same committee last March.

There was no pulling of punches by big company witnesses. They used such terms as "betrayal—deliberate and shameless," and claimed affidavits submitted by many exhibitors were misleading, inaccurate and even faked.

The producers went on to point out that the exhibitors seek a virtually guaranteed profit from the film companies, but have no interest nor sympathy for the losses sustained by the studios from pictures which fail to make their costs, sometimes by $1,000,000 or more.

At one stage of the hearing, members of the Senate committee told exhibitors who submitted affidavits to be careful of the authenticity of "a notarized document." Committee staffers might be sent into the field to check the affidavits, the committee warned.

The producers blamed television and drive-ins for most exhibitor grief.

The producer-distributor hearings brought a substantial turnout of company observers as well as reps of Allied States Assn., TOA, and other exhibitor groups.

Among highlights:

Abraham Montague, general sales manager of Columbia, went into a detailed refutation of exhibitor affidavits which brought angry explosions from Senator Andrew Schoeppel (R., Kans.), and a supporting warning from Senator Hubert Humphrey (D., Minn.), the committee chairman, against faked affidavits.

Montague attacked Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied, for asserting that a sharp increase of Columbia profits following reduction of the admissions tax in 1954, proved the charge that distributors were grabbing the relief which belonged to the theatres. Montague pointed out that the profit gain started before the tax cut and was due largely to a run of extraordinary pictures, such as "From Here to Eternity" and "Salome," etc. He said a very big share of it came from foreign distribution; from the unblocking of frozen coin in France, Italy and Brazil, and from sales to television.

Montague disclosed that "almost 50% of the pictures released each year are losing ventures for Columbia" and, except for three productions—"Caine Mutiny," "On the Waterfront" and "Here to Eternity," Columbia would not have broken even domestically in 1954 and 1955.

It was Adolph Schimel, general counsel of Universal, who charged that a "betrayal—deliberate and shameless" on the part of TOA wrecked the arbitration negotiations. (See separate story).

Producers' Initiative

William C. Gehring, 20th-Fox v.p. and exec assistant to prexy Spyros Skouras, discussed in length the technical developments in widescreen photography. His purpose was to ridicule the exhibitor charges that the introduction of new processes was designed to injure and put out of business the small theatre operator.

He explained that the film companies had spent considerable coin to come up with new and different presentations in order to lure the public away from their tv sets and into the theatre. He said 20th alone spent $9,000,000 in developing CinemaScope and other devices

Paramount's Phillips Points to Exhib Leaders' Unpublicized Personal Pelf

Washington, May 22.

Elaborate, prepared statements, ranging from 11 to 44 pages of printed materials have been presented by various distributor witnesses appearing before the Senate Small Business Subcommittee probing film industry practices. The statements, in the main, were designed to answer the charges made by exhibitors when they had their innings before the committee last month. Experts and leaders from various phases of distribution and production were employed to present the film companies side of the story at the hearings which commenced here yesterday (Mon.).

The following is a digest of the statement presented by Louis Phillips, general counsel of Paramount Pictures. He testified: The statements of the exhibitors were rash and irresponsible and represent many false declarations and half-truths. Distribution would offer documentary evidence as distinguished from the "undocumented and free wheeling statements made by exhibitor witnesses."

Paramount's objective is to make the best possible pictures and to distribute them to as many theatres as possible in order to recoup its investment. It's foolish therefore to argue that Paramount is trying to drive any theatre out of business.

Allied States Assn.'s position is inconsistent. It fought for divorcement and is now asking that the formerly affiliated theatres be permitted to produce pictures. This illustrates lack of sincerity of exhibitor leadership "which demands divorcement one day and soon after seeks integration."

TOA-Allied Deal

The withdrawal of TOA from arbitration just prior to the date of the Senate hearings "leads one to draw the inference from that conduct that Allied and TOA made a deal." No responsible executive of any film company could with propriety consent to the arbitration of film rentals or sales policies since he would not be discharging his proper duty to the stockholders of his company. No investor or banker would permit his money to be used in so hazardous an undertaking. In no other business would the buyer have the effrontery to make such an unbusinesslike demand.

The exhibitors' case lacks factual proof. Their spokesmen are important exhibitors who have grown rich in the industry, owning and operating large chains. In contrast to the public financial statements of the film companies, exhibitors' income figures are not public property. Not a single exhib who has appeared before the committee has presented an audited profit and loss statement to prove whether or not their claims are true.

Poverty Plea Phoney?

Phillips presented in detail the financial operation of the theatres controlled by Rube Shor, president of Allied, showing that they had been operating profitably. In addition, he noted that Wilbur Snaper, George Keresotes, Benjamin Berger, and Trueman Rembusch, exhibitors who had testified before the committee, "reputedly are well-fixed, successful exhibitors," but that not one had presented his own financial statement.

The exhibitor complaints are general. In many cases, Paramount charges less film rental than it costs to handle the accounts. If it were trying to put the small theatres out of business, it wouldn't service for as little as $12.50 per picture. Some theatres are destined to fall by the wayside no matter what is done for them, including giving them pictures free. There are theatres that cannot succeed because of changing conditions in their localities, competition from drive-ins, impact of television, and other causes. None of these things can be blamed on the distributors.

Reagan Round-Robin

Metro is mailing to more than 7,500 exhibitors throughout the country the complete text of sales chief Charles M. Reagan's statement before the Senate Small Business Subcommittee probing industry trade practices. The statement runs 22 pages.

In an accompanying letter, Reagan did not request formal acknowledgement, "but if you wish to comment on my statement or any phase of the hearings, or regarding government regulation of our business in any form, your correspondence is invited and your comments are welcome."

Says C. M. Reagan: MGM Adjustments Total $2,038,412

Washington, May 22.

Adjustments on film rentals totalling $2,038,412 were granted to exhibitors by Loew's during 1955, sales chief Charles M. Reagan told the Senate Small Business Committee yesterday (Mon.). The adjustments amounted to $1,634,191 in 1954 and $1,125,604 in 1953, Reagan disclosed.

There is no parallel to this practice in any other industry, Reagan noted, stressing that the policy was a "one way street" since the exhibitor never volunteered to increase the terms "if a picture does unusually well at the boxoffice."

Exhibitor complaints totalling 50 affidavits, Reagan stated, do not contain a semblance of proof on the broad basic charges in light of the fact that there are thousands of exhibitors throughout the country. An investigation by Loew's, he said, "shows beyond doubt that the charges are baseless . . ." The charges made by the exhibitor leaders, he maintained, are not representative of the feelings of the large body of exhibitors throughout the country. Loew's, he said, has received scores of unsolicited letters from theatremen praising the company's dealings with its customers.

The sales topper reviewed the financial status of Loew's to point out that the figures presented by Allied's Abram F. Myers were misleading. Loew's, he pointed out, showed a profit, before taxes, of $2,866,000 in 1955 on gross rentals of $103,688,800 or a return of 2½%, "an earning ratio which is probably lower than any other major industry in this country . . ."

On the charges of the deliberate creation of a product shortage, Reagan pointed to the fact that many pictures received only 5,000 bookings as compared to 13,000 to 15,000 for others. News of boxoffice value quickly spreads, Reagan said, and what the exhibitor complaint actually boils down is "Mr. Producer, you must make a greater number of pictures, regardless of cost to you. We will then license only the pictures we choose to exhibit. As to the pictures we do not license, you can keep them and take your loss."

The Metro sales chief explained that the film companies can only produce the "most outstanding pictures" at tremendous costs in efforts to fight television. In the last two and half years, he said, there was an increase in the average negative cost of M-G pictures of over $500,000, being $1,307,000 in 1952-53, $1,566,000 in 1953-54, and $1,815,000 in 1954-55. In determining the number of pictures to make each year, Reagan explained, "we must continue to recognize these new factors in addition to the basic risk aspect of our business."

Glasgow, May 15.

Sir Alexander King, cinema magnate, announced a plan to make five Scot color pix for showing in world cinemas and on tv. He would spend $60,000 on them. King is chairman of the Films of Scotland committee. Films will deal with Scot country dancing, horses, island shipping, Aberdeen and ancient castles, including Culzean Castle, Ayrshire, where President Eisenhower has a clifftop suite reserved for his all-time use.

"Highland Trail," scripted by Alastair MacTavish Dunnett, newspaper editor, is to be lensed next July in the Highlands. A $30,000 color pic of the Robert Burns country is also being lensed. Walt Disney unit is filming local landmarks in CinemaScope for the "People and Places" series.

Mexico City, May 15.

Swanky firstrun, the 3,500-seat Cine Tlacopan, brings to 138 the number of local cinemas in operation. Its owner-operator is the exbanker, Carlos Novoa, who directed the government's Bank of Mexico for some time.

It opened with a double-feature bill headed by "The Robe" (20th).

Lower Calif. to Supply Coin for Tiajuana Pix

Mexico City, May 15.

Government of Baja California, Mexico's youngest state, has thrown in with film studios just built at Tiajuana, a key city in the state, by offering to finance producers using the plant. Previously, practically all provisions of coin to pix makers who didn't use their own funds, was by the trade's own bank.

The Tiajuana studios have obtained all okays for operations, including approval by the National Cinematographic Board and by the Picture Production Workers Union (STPC), which had opposed establishment of the California border plant on the ground that it would undermine studios here by syphoning off biz. STPC aboutface stems from a powwow Juan Jose Perez Padilla, Tiajuana studios prezy, had with STPC brass.

British Film Biz Slump Confirmed by BOT 1955 Survey, Down $11 Million

London, May 22.

The full extent of the b.o. slump in Great Britain is illustrated by the Board of Trade's published official statistics for 1955, based on a survey of 4,483 picture theatres, equal to 99.9% of the country's seating capacity. To'al admissions were down by 94,000,000 and gross dipped by more than $11,000,000.

The BOT breakdown, which gives comparative returns for the years 1950 (when their surveys first began) and 1954, shows that attendance has slumped by upwards of 200,000,000 in five years, although, because of changes in admission prices, there is a slight improvement between gross receip s in 1950 and 1954. Gross in 1955 was $296,324,000 against $294,506,000 in 1950. In 1954, the gross totalled $307,997,000. Admission duties lopped off $83,590,000 from gross receipts and payments to the Eady pool reduced the total by a further $7,420,000.

Comparative figures for previous years show fluctua'ing returns. While the level of admission duty payments has dropped from over $104,000,000 in 1950, net takings and the exhibitors' share have improved by about $5,000,000, compared with the 1950 results.

Producers collected as their $41,865,600, almost 4% less than in 1954. Foreign producers received $29,996,400, about the same as in 1954, but the British producers' share fell from $13,552,000 in 1954 to $11,869,200 last year, a decrease of more than 12%.

After deduction of direct distribution expenses and payments to producers, distribs retained $12,916,400, again showing a drop of 4% from the previous year. The BOT repor records a sharp rise in direct distribution expenses for prints, advertising, trade shows, etc., in the second half of last year, accounting for more than 20% of gross rentals, compared with only 16% for the corresponding period of 1954 and 17% for the first half of 1955.

ASFP Sees Need Of Eady Levy Increase

London, May 15.

A demand that the Eady levy should be upped to a minimum of $14,000,000 a year has been made by the Assn. of Specialized Film Producers. The figure was first revealed by Frank Hoare in his presidential address, and the same suggestion has presumably been made in the association's reply to the Board of Trade questionnaire on the future of the British film industry.

The ASFP, according to Hoare, is advocating a higher supporting quota to start at 30% (against the present level of 25%), a discriminatory tax in favor of British pix, statutory minimum rentals and a re-introduction of distrib's quota.

British Enter Strong Films in Berlin Fest

London, May 22.

In line with the British film industry policy of active participation in Continental film festivals, a strong lineup of product has been chosen for next month's Berlin junket.

The British Film Producers Assn. announced that "Iron Petticoat" (Remus), "Long Arm" (Ealing) and "Loser Takes All" (IFP) have been selected for entry. Also that "Richard III" goes forward as an invited participant.

Auld Lang Syne TV Hits New Snag

Glasgow, May 22.

Independent tv, as distinct from the BBC variety, may be delayed another six months here. New tentative teeing-off date is named as September 1957.

Due to coin problems the appointment of a Scot program contractor is being held up.

A few weeks ago the Independent Television Authority reduced the proposed annual license fee from $990,000 to approximately $660,000. It is now considering further applications from interested groups.

The ITA is not now disclosing how many further applications it has received. This is to avoid publicity and controversy, which it regards as "unwelcome."

Many problems have to be thrashed out with individual contract applicants.

The original three applicants, Roy Thomson, newspaper boss, Mavis Films Ltd. of Glasgow, and Templar Film Productions of Glasgow, have reapplied. There is also a new fourth applicant.

Total of 15% of the viewing material will be of local origin, thus raising further coin problems in the early stages before wide range of viewers is established.

Additional money commitments include the down payment of approximately $90,000, plus $300 a day for news service originating in London. There will also be an annual payment to the Post Office of $1,500 per mile of television cable from the Glasgow telephone exchange to the site of the studios.

MOSS EMPIRES' TAX HIGHER THAN PROFITS

London, May 15.

Moss Empires, the theatre chain which controls the London Palladium, Hippodrome, Victoria Palace, Prince of Wales and a string of suburban and provincial houses, paid substantially more in admission tax than it registered in trading profit during the year ended last Dec. 31.

The outfit, headed by Prince Littler, paid in admission duty upwards of $1,226,000, but its trading profit was just over $820,000. Taxation lopped off over $500,000 from that total.

Stokowski, Shearer Top Zurich June Festival

Zurich, May 15.

Stadttheatre, Schauspielhaus and Tonhalle (Concert Hall) have announced programs for the traditional Zurich June Festival, June 1-July 3. Stadttheatre (opera) presents guest performances by the Teatro dell' Opera di Roma with Rossini's "Barbiere di Seviglia" and Puccini's "La Boheme." As a memorial to Swiss composer Arthur Honegger, who died last November, two of his operas, "Antigone" and "Amphion," will be staged June 16 and 20.

Schauspielhaus (legit) announces "Theatre in Four Languages," devoted exclusively to classics. Program opens June 9. On June 11-12, France's Theatre National Populaire will do Moliere's "Don Juan," with its founder and managing director Jean Vilar in the title role. The Bristol Old Vic Co. will present Sheridan's comedy "The Rivals," with Moira Shearer, June 20-22. Tonhalle presents five symphony concerts, with conductors Leopold Stokowski, Otto Klemperer, Ataulfo Argenta, Hans Rosbaud and Georg Solti. In the Stokowski concert, pianist Kurt Leimer will play his own piano concerto.

Arg. Exhibs Refuse to Prolong Tax, Leave Prods. With Coin Shortage

Buenos Aires, May 15.

Argentina's motion picture producers are getting a dose of their own medicine after having thoroughly antagonized the exhibitors by their action in jockeying the Entertainment Board to shutter cinemas for violations of the Protection Law. The exhibs have retaliated by refusing to prolong an agreement to continue applying the 60-centavo tax on all tickets sold, which gave them 21 centavos. But more important, this covered most of their production costs.

With only limited credits from the State bank, and these only paid to them on completion of each picture (not before the start as previously), and without the millions of pesos they got from the 60-centavo tax, the producers are without capital to cover their daily overheads. So they claim. One of them has put up for sale an apartment house he had been building throughout for the last five years. Not all are as poor as they pretend, but are crying misery to give an impression that their connections with the late dictatorship brought them no profit.

The producers' main trouble is that the pix which they are now releasing are of the indifferent type, produced when they had unlimited State protection. They made no effort towards quality production in that era. This makes for disastrous boxoffice results and exhibs actually announce the native productions with apologies to their patrons for moving out foreign pix when they could be held for many weeks if they did not have to comply with the Protection laws.

The only studios currently active are Sono Film's, which has now started leasing to independent producers; the Baires studios, occupied by Artistas Argentinos Asociados, with talk of shuttering; Guaranteed, which has become most active since the Revolution; and Libertador, which uses the San Miguel Studios.

Tokyo, May 15.

Toho Motion Picture Co. plans to beat Sir Laurence Olivier to the boxoffice with a film based on Shakespeare's "Macbeth." The Japanese production, budgeted at $350,000, alltime high for a Jap film, will turn the ambitious Scotch general into a power-hungry samurai (warrior chieftain) of ancient Japan.

Toshiro Mifune, star of "Rashomon" and the more recent "I Live in Fear," will have the lead with a native actress playing Lady Macbeth. Akira Kurosawa, who directed "Rashomon," will do this color flim.

Location work gets underway this month at the foot of Mt. Fuji where Toho is constructing a life-size castle. Kurosawa hopes to finish the film by September.

War Vs. Nudity, Dirty Lines Sweeps From Pix To Mex Stage Prods.

Mexico, City, May 15.

The raging war against femme nudity and crude lines and routines against the Mexican films has spread to the theatre again, this time to vaude-revue houses, after a swipe at the legit and art spots.

This drive began with the shuttering of the Teatro Tivoli here by the city government, on the grounds that the show there, cutely advertised as "burlesque, like in Paris," often verged on the pornographic. The closing was endorsed by the Catholic League of Decency, which is in the vanguard of the drive to clean up Mexican and all other pix exhibited here.

But the shutdown is being protested by the Theatrical Federation and the National Federation of Theatrical and Public Spectacles Unions.

The Theatrical Federation asserted that Adolfo Bustamante, city amusements chief, has steadfastly refused to permit reopening of the vaude-revue theatres, the Cervantes and Covadonga, which it claims he shuttered "arbitrarily." The department announced that both theatres had been closed because it disapproved shows they were presenting, saying they were much broader than burlesque. Mayor Uruchurtu announced that he approves Bustamante's action in the Tivoli case.

No March in May Day Parade, Fined by Union

Mexico City, May 15.

Dolores del Rio, Arturo de Cordoba, Maria Felix, Cantinflas and many other top Mex stars can expect to find a one day's dent in their next pay checks, it was stated by actors union authorities here. Deductions are based on the fact that these thesps failed to march in labor's 1956 May 1 parade. Union has a standing order that all members must appear and be reviewed by the country's president. Announcement that those failing to do so would be docked a day's pay, was revealed well in advance. Most top actors just didn't appear.

Toughest part for the actors involved is that the union holds all the trump cards, since it collects their salaries from the producers and can make deductions before passing on what remains. Total take for the union coffers is calculated to be $10,000 to $15,000, with stars having to pay plenty for that free day at home.

Ex-Vienna Operetta House to Be Cinema

Vienna, May 15.

Theatre an der Wien, once the scene of Vienna operetta productions and for 10 years after the last world war a branch of the State Opera, will be turned into a cinema unless a miracle happens.

Ernst Marischka, film producer, bought half of the building, the other half belongs to his brother, Hubert.

CBS Workshop Sets 'World Preem' of Opera In Col. Records Tieup

CBS has arranged one of its rare tie-ins with Columbia Records, wherein the "CBS Radio Workshop" will world-preem a one-voice opera based on an August Strindberg monolog preliminary to a Columbia album release of the same opera. It's called "The Stronger," and was written by Hugo Weisgall to the original Strindberg monolog.

First-time-anywhere broadcast, slated for sometime in June, exact date to be correlated to the Columbia album release, will star Adelaide Bishop with the Alfredo Antonini orch. Album will have the same artists. As an added offbeat touch for radio, the monolog consists of a woman talking to a corpse, the corpse being the mistress of the speaker's husband and her own murder victim.

Southeast Asia Film Fest to Be Largest

Hong Kong, May 15.

The third annual film festival in Southeast Asia, to be held here starting June 12, shapes to be the largest to date, both in number of entries and in delegates attending from the eight member countries of the Federation of Motion Picture Products in Southeast Asia. Thirteen feature films and nine documentaries already have been entered in the competition, and indications are that the total number of features will run to about 30.

Indicative of the size of the official delegation to the fete is fact that Philippines has announced it will send a party of 37 technicians and artists. Japan's group is expected to be of equal size and proportionately similarly large delegations are planned by Formosa, Singapore, Malaya, Indonesia and Thailand. Little Thailand has entered two Eastman color features. Two of Japan's entries are also expected to be tinters. The Federation sponsored two previous festivals, the first in Tokyo in 1954 and last year in Singapore.

Technicolor in 1956: 80 Features

But Kalmus Warns Stockholders of Trend to Fewer Tinters and Fewer Print Copies

While Technicolor in 1956 expects to process a minimum of 80 features, the general industry direction is towards fewer films in color and fewer prints on those pictures, Herbert T. Kalmus, Technicolor prexy, told the annual stockholders meeting in N. Y. Monday (21).

Kalmus also saw an increasing demand for specialized laboratory work with attendant higher prices per foot of print. Immediate effect of this, he said, was to somewhat diminish the Techni print volume now running at about 425,000,000 feet a year compared with the 560,000,000 peak in 1953.

Kalmus disclosed the April net of Technicolor as $174,500, or 9c per share, making it $678,400 or 34c per share for the first four months of 1956. Figuring on the basis of no improvements for the rest of the year, he crystalballed the year's earnings as running to 94.7c per share. However, he pointed out, the lab expects to effect a quarter-of-a-cent per foot saving in manufacturing costs and its work volume is up by six features.

Kalmus disclosed an important improvement via changes in Technicolor printers. "This step may require that Technicolor develop the negative," he said. He added that the use of a squeeze or anamorphic lens at the camera and a corresponding lens at the Techni printer would allow the lab to take an eight-perforation VistaVision negative and come up with a standard 35m CinemaScope print.

Except for "one or two minor points" the agreement for an Italian Technicolor lab has been completed, Kalmus reported. British lab, he said, now contributes eight percent of Techni's overall earnings. Techni hopes to have a $20,000,000 business via its Graphic Arts division within the next five years.

Heidingsfeld, upped from salesman status.

Travis D. Walton was promoted from sales manager to branch manager in Dallas. Eastern district under R. J. Foliard and the southeastern under Dave Prince remain unchanged.

DICK WALSH TO SPEAK AT EDINBURGH MEET

Richard F. Walsh, president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, left over the weekend for London, en route to Edinburgh where he will address the convention of the National Assn. of Theatrical and Kine Employees. He was invited to the meet by Sir Tom O'Brien, MP and general secretary of the British entertainment union.

Walsh has also agreed to meet with NATKE representatives in an effort to help work out solutions to problems concerning the production of American films in England and the exhibition of British films in the United States.

The IA topper is due back in the U. S. on June 2 in time to attend a meeting of the AFL-CIO executive council.

'Evil & Immoral' New COMPO Tag On 10% B. O. Tax

Council of Motion Picture Organizations is getting tough in its campaign to eliminate the 10% Federal levy on theatre ticket sales. The trade group this week went on record with this declaration: "We believe continuation of the Federal admissions tax on motion picture theatres is an excessive use of the Government's taxing authority, and is, therefore, evil and immoral."

Pleading exhib poverty in a full page ad in Editor & Publisher, COMPO further states: "Since continuation of the tax would obviously imperil the existence of a great industry, and its repeal now would neither contribute to inflation nor throw the budget out of balance, our Government would seem to be morally bound to remove this tax at this session of Congress."

COMPO claims it has records showing that half of the theatres paying the tax are operating in the red and the others are near the break-even point. On an overall basis, United States exhibition had an operating loss of $8,000,000 in the six months from last October to March 31.

Yet, COMPO continued, these theatres paid an admissions tax last year of $80,000,000.

O'Donnell Optimistic

Robert J. O'Donnell, chairman of the industry's campaign to kill the admissions tax, stated over the past weekend the anticipated Federal surplus for the fiscal year ended June 30 should be a strong point in the industry's favor. Capitol Hill estimates of the surplus have ranged as high as $4,000,000,000.

Removal of the admissions levy would cost the Government only $48,000,000, said O'Donnell, and this obviously wouldn't reduce the surplus to any appreciable extent or unbalance the budget. Thus there's no reason why the Fed bite on admissions shouldn't cease, he argues.

Dallas, May 22.

Dallas Motion Picture Board of Review has adopted a formal resolution advocating removal of the 10% Federal admissions tax. Mrs. Roderic B. Thomas, president of the group, sent copies to all Texas Congressmen as well as to the presidents of other film units across the country asking them to take similar action.

Dallas resolution expressed "deep concern" with the troublesome economics of exhibitors and recommended relief for them via the tax repeal.

Kazan-Schulberg Paired On Arkansas Feature With Andy Griffith

Elia Kazan's Newtown Productions starts production of "A Face in the Crowd" on location in Piggott, Ark., on Aug. 13. The film is an original screenplay by Budd Schulberg and is based on his short story "Your Arkansas Traveler."

Andy Griffith will leave the Broadway stage hit, "No Time for Sergeants," to appear in the leading role in the film. Currently editing "Baby Doll," which like "Traveler" will be released by Warner Bros., Kazan will join Schulberg in Arkansas in August.

SHELDON REYNOLDS' SLANTS ON TV TALES

Discussing tv-to-pix conversions, Sheldon Reynolds ("Foreign Intrigue") joined the list of those who feel that "stretching" often destroys the teleplay's impact as a motion picture. A tv play, like a short story, can be brilliant as originally presented, but expanding often destroys the intent, he pointed out.

He stressed that the feature-length "Foreign Intrigue" has no connection with the tv series except to make use of a "valuable" video title. Title represents an important selling point and exploitation plus, but at the same time the pub-ad campaign will have to overcome the resistance of the public who may believe they're seeing an expanded version of the tv series.

Missouri, St. Louis Gets Todd-AO Gear for 'Oklahoma'

St. Louis, May 22.

Fanchon & Marco is converting its midtown Missouri, a 3,500-seater into a deluxe house and will launch Todd-A-O production of Rodegers-Hammerstein's "Oklahoma."

House will operate on a policy of reserved seats in competition to the downtown Ambassador, which has Cinerama on similar policy.

According to Edward Arthur other films lined up at Missouri under the new policy include "Around The World In 80 Days," De Mille's "The Ten Commandments," and "South Pacific."

Public Protests 'No Choice' Dating By Area Drive-Ins

Albany, May 21.

Simultaneous showings of the same pictures at a number of Albany area drive-ins is causing annoyance and arousing the ire of the local film public. Managements of the outdoor theatres are receiving complaints about the exhibition of the pictures in all drive-ins "at the same time and for the same number of nights."

The subject of the day-and-date bookings has been frequently discussed by the local operators, but so far no solution has been reached. Main argument advanced by patrons is that if for some reason they miss a picture during the three or four-day playing period, they have lost all opportunity to see the particular film in the future. In addition, patrons point out that if they have seen the picture, they cannot go to any other outdoor house because the same picture is being shown.

Early this spring, local ozoner ops met and reportedly reached an informal agreement for a division into two groups, three playing a top release one week and three showing it second-run and reversing the procedure on the next picture. The agreement did not last.

Some European producers are still spoiling their product by copycatting Hollywood, says circuit owner and foreign film distributor Walter Reade Jr.

Just back from the Cannes fest, where he surveyed the new European pix for his Continental Distributing outfit, Reade said in N. Y. last week that he had warned the local producers against the tendency to pattern films after the Hollywood example.

"They call them 'international' films," said Reade. "Actually, 'international' seems to be a synonym for 'Hollywood'."

Reade, who made deals for several imports, said he was struck by what he saw in Britain. "The British pictures today, while still typical, are tackling gutsier subjects and their production values are higher than ever," he noted. "I am convinced that the films have a greatly improved chance for success in the American market."

Reade also thought that European industries should exercise greater care in the choice of films they are sending to the U. S. "It is a mistake to send in the wheat with the chaff," he observed, adding that he was aware that it was difficult—if not impossible—for a producer to resist the opportunity of getting at least some money from the American market.

DISNEY EQUALS $2.17, WELL UP FROM YR. AGO

Walt Disney Productions chalked up a net profit of $1,418,850, equal to $2.17 per common share, for the six months ended March 31, representing a substantial gain over the same period last year when the earnings amounted to $430,048, or 66c a share. Company's interest in Disneyland is not reflected in the new financial report.

Gross business climbed to $12,859,321 in the new period, compared with $9,876,175 for the corresponding period of 1954.

Financial report was issued yesterday (Tues.) coincident with anticipation in the trade that Disney is planning a new stock issue later this year. While operating on a fiscally sound basis, Disney is said to be anxious to raise additional capital for an expanded production program, both theatrical and television. Bank borrowings of $9,313,000 are adequate for this purpose but the outfit wants to retire these loans.

Contributing to the earnings upbeat was the release of four features domestically over the past year, namely "Davy Crockett," "Lady and the Tramp," "African Lion" and "The Littlest Outlaw."

Unroll Coast Carpet For Indonesian President

Washington, May. 22.

President Sukarno, of Indonesia, now visiting this country, is due in Hollywood with his party on May 30, with a visit to the Metro lot as the first stop and a visit to Disneyland on the agenda for Sukarno's 12-year-old-son.

Night of May 31, Eric Johnston will host Sukarno, his party, film industry toppers, and U. S. officials at a black tie dinner at the Beverly Hilton. Included in the party will be Joseph Borkin, now an advisor for the Indonesian Embassy here; he was formerly a Justice Department trust buster.

President Sukarno is now an avid film fan who claims he knows the U. S. from its pix

Allied Chides 'Sensational' Ad Copy

Also Wants TV Sell Geared to Ticket-Peddling Directly—Berger Opposes Higher Wages

Minneapolis, May 22.

Before departing for a holiday in Europe this week, North Central Allied's Bennie Berger set wheels in motion to use the organization's influence to have sensational film advertising in dailies toned down, to have Congress continue its endeavors in exhibitors' behalf, to induce film companies to cease showing clips from theatre feature films on television and to defeat a proposed Minnesota increase in theatre ushers and cashiers wages to $1 an hour.

In taking action, Berger obeyed the mandates delivered to him at his organization's annual convention here. The convention adopted resolutions covering the above subjects and also re-elected Berger president and retained its other officers and directors.

The convention hit out at motion picture newspaper advertising because of its allegedly "gross over-emphasis of sensationalism and sex" in films. A resolution asked Hollywood to re-examine "the entire basis and long-range purpose of motion picture advertising" and declared "Hollywood advertising departments should work to establish motion picture theatres' position as a place where decent entertainment is available."

Congress is asked "to continue its exploration of ways and means of advancing the public interest by preserving the small theatre through federal regulation of the industry if no other means can be found."

The resolution addressed to Congress commended those in production and distribution "who are working to produce better pictures for sale on reasonable terms." However, it termed detrimental to the entire industry and the entire people "the work of those industry leaders whose shortsighted policies of restricting product and refusing to sell except on terms that will ultimately destroy the small theatres by making it impossible for the latter to replace worn-out and obsolete equipment."

Overall effect of the presentation of theatre feature films' clips on tv programs is injurious to theatre attendance, it was the sense of the convention. Members voted to have Berger make every effort to have all producers and distributors "confine their tv advertising strictly to promotional approaches which will persuade people to attend theatres instead of actually keeping them at home."

Declaring there has been "ruinous falling off of receipts on nights when free tv broadcasts of so-called clips from forthcoming films were on the air," the convention's resolution averred such tv clips actually have given the theatregoing public the impression that they were seeing or had seen the actual picture.

The convention went on record to oppose to the limit the proposed boost in Minnesota theatre's minimum ushers and cashiers' pay to $1 per hour. The boost, it was pointed out, could increase showhouses' operating costs substantially at a time when their loads already are too heavy. Ushers and cashiers now receive from 50c to 65c an hour at most theatres.

result of distributor trade practices.

Berger conceded to VARIETY that "flat rentals, perhaps, in most cases are still in line." But he insisted that the "must" high percentages are raising havoc, especially in the small and subsequent-run situations.

No 'Mistreatment'?

When none of those attending the convention answered Berger's call at the open forum on film rentals to take the floor and tell of film company "mistreatment," Jack Kirsch, Illinois Allied president who was present and sitting next to the NCA president, arose and remarked, "Apparently everybody in this territory is satisfied with his film deals."

Complaints registered by the minority of interviewees had mainly to do with the fact that, because of the high rental terms or percentages, they are unable to earn sufficient on their top pictures to offset the "beating" they're now taking on run-of-the-mill product which is no longer capable of pulling patronage, as formerly.

Some of the interviewees also said tv is hurting badly, bad weather has put a dent in their boxoffice (in this territory the winter has been the severest and longest within memory and spring still hasn't arrived), decreased agricultural income is keeping many former patrons away from the theatres, bad general business conditions in their communities are an adverse factor, etc.

Some complained because pictures aren't released to them in time to derive the benefit of national exploitation and because they have to buy "the cats and dogs" in order to get the boxoffice hits. They said only the outstanding pictures now bring any money into the boxoffice and the high percentage terms for these don't leave them with enough profit. Others don't like guarantees with percentage.

Still others found fault with sensational titles of pictures and their stress on sex. One exhibitor, Joseph Carrier of Hallock, Minn., took the position that, because of percentage, "the film companies have become our partners and we should send them our tax statements and other bills and request they pay their share."

Exhibs' Opinions

Here are samples of some of the VARIETY interviews:

Joseph Carrier, Hallock, Minn., population 2,000: "Business has been pretty good. There are a lot of good pictures, but too many are poorly titled, like 'Blood Alley.' If we can get half a fair shake with the film companies I think the future for our theatres is good."

L. F. Bellefeuill, Aiken, Minn., population 3,000: "We're doing fairly well, but I'm somewhat skeptical of the future."

A. J. Gilman, Beach, N. D., population 1,400: "We have three tv stations within 40 miles to provide us with reception, but we still do good business with good pictures. However, in a town my size I can't afford to pay percentage and because of rental terms I've been netting a better profit on my popcorn and candy than on my films. But the main trouble, I think, is with the type of pictures—too much emphasis on sex—and the sensational nature of the advertising."

Cal Nygaard, Home Theatres with houses in 15 small towns: "Business is spotty. Big pictures do well nearly everywhere. 'B' houses in small towns, however, are a thing of the past. I still think there's a wonderful future for exhibition and I hope to remain in the business."

Lowell Smoot, Little Falls, Minn.: "Our business hasn't been good. There's a bingo 'craze' in our town and it's keeping many away from the theatres. Bad weather and depressed agriculture also have been hurting us. But we'll be all right if the film companies will make more favorable deals."

Fred E. Minor, Chippewa Falls, Wis.: "Business has gone along pretty well, but we can't afford to pay 50% for film. If I weren't optimistic about the future, despite the fact we're saturated with tv, I wouldn't remain in the business and I don't expect to get out of it."

"Chick" Everhart, Walker, Minn.: "Our business is okay, but we're in a tv fringe area. However, I'm not afraid of tv and I'm optimistic about my theatre's future. I've recently remodeled and improved it at a considerable cost. Except for high percentage, I have no complaints against the film companies."

Harvey Thorpe, Crosby, Minn.: "We're on the tv fringe and there are only 1,000 sets in my area. We're getting along pretty well, but I wish the film companies wouldn't ask so much for their top pictures. However, I've been in the business 40 years and there's no use crying. I don't want to get out of the business."

Clem Jaunich, Austin, Minn.: "Business hasn't been good, but, while I think that film companies are asking too high percentages for top pictures and I don't relish them selling even the old pictures to tv, I'm still an optimist as far as exhibition is concerned."

British Tax

in the United States. The general rule is for executives to have their salary banked in New York and for part of that sum to be transferred to Britain to meet day-to-day expenses. Tax at the British rate has until now been payable on the portion transferred here only.

American film toppers in Britain have described this proposed new tax as a confiscatory one, because of the high level of surtax current in Britain. On all taxable income above $5,600 annually, taxation ranks at the rate of 97.5%; that would virtually dispose of any balances left behind in the U.S. It would make it impossible to maintain establishments in America, as so many of them do, and would place them at disadvantage compared with their colleagues who stay behind in the home office.

The proposed tax law would also seriously hurt artists, directors and producers who come to Britain on production deals. In the case of co-productions, particularly, it is a normal practice for the British partner to pay the living expenses of visiting stars and directors and for the American investor to take care of their basic dollar salary in the U. S. That salary, which has not been subject to taxation, would now come under the new confiscatory tax.

Bob Hope, who Hahn mimics much in his delivery. Hahn appeared here three years ago in a trick shot exhibition at the Milburn Golf & Country Club, and this year acted as m.c. and demonstrated his for-laughs shots at the clinic opening the annual K. C. Open Golf Tournament last Wednesday (16), a Mercy Hospital benefitter.

Apparently the comedy routine is making him bigleague. Since he quit playing for purses over six years ago Hahn has never really been hurting for bookings. But now he's in solid, and is the first to admit that the comedy chatter and situations have built his act to its present level of attraction as much as the trick shots.

Combo of trick shots and yocks has zeroed Hahn in on dates for which the pay ranges around $300 per, and he grosses in the $50,000 bracket with his one-man entourage. Besides his kingsize bag and locker room full of props, he uses a lapel mike and half a dozen willing caddies to round out the act.

'Quota' Angle Raised By Exhibitors Unwarranted, Picker Informs Senate

Washington, May 22.

Charge that the American film companies have slowed down production so as to operate economically better within the framework of foreign quota restrictions is completely untrue, Arnold Picker, United Artists v.p. in charge of foreign distribution, told a Senate Small Business subcommittee yesterday (Mon.).

Picker pointed out that the quota countries represent no more than about 20% of the total foreign market, the majority of which is quota free. "Were we to be foolish enough to think of cutting down film production just because of import quotas in a few countries, we would lose a fortune in the other markets and in the United States," he declared.

SICK, BALKY ACTORS RUN UP BUDGETS

Washington, May 22.

Unpredictabilities of picture making were underlined for the Senate Small Business Subcommittee by Y. Frank Freeman of Paramount in an expansion of his prepared remarks. The human factor cannot be budgetted. "Even since I arrived in Washington one of our stars in Hollywood has refused an assignment, so we are minus one feature," he stated.

He alluded to hazards of location as recently experienced in Japan by Metro's "Teahouse of the August Moon." Continued rain and death of Louis Calhern wasted the time and expense of a large company. During three months in Japan only three or four days were ideal for photography.

Paramount had Vivien Leigh on location in Ceylon. She was ill 21 days, had to be replaced finally by Elizabeth Taylor. Meanwhile the crew collected hundreds of thousands of dollars, he sadly recalled.

and that it cost 20th $600,000 just to develop the 'Scope screen.

Charles J. Feldman, Universal's sale chief, blasted exhibitors for forming combinations to split up the product output of the various distribuors. He termed this practice "an outrageous abuse of our simple right to a free market."

He said U had no objection to exhibitors moving into production, but that the film company was against their having preemptive rights for their own theatres.

On the question of the shortage of pictures, Feldman said that numbers alone did not attract audiences and that only quality counted.

He called Allied Abram F. Myers' presentation of the film company financial figures as "snide," since Myers only included the good years and failed to mention, especially in reference to Universal, that the company had suffered severe financial losses between 1947 and 1949 when most of the exhibitors were making money.

Feldman stressed that no license was required to produce motion pictures and that if exhibitors felt that they need more pictures, he intimated that the door was open to them.

petition from free television without people having to see reissues in the theatre and then find them on television six to 12 months later."

The ITOA, as well as other exhib organizations, feels that "Dominant Pictures should learn the hard way that you can't have your cake and eat it." If the distrib wants to do business with exhibs, it is suggested that it keep the pictures off television completely "or forget theatrical distribution and stick to television."

The ITOA further notes that if exhibs refuse to purchase these reissues, "it might make the film companies a little more concerned in continually trying to bite the hand that feeds them."

pictures made by Paramount for release in 1956 is in excess of $3,000,000. Great pictures break boxoffice records; average pictures do not do business and are unprofitable. The public is selective. Paramount, as a result, eliminated all the "B" pictures and this accounts for the fewer pictures the company has made.

The revenue from large cities is of such crucial importance that if they did not attract patrons it would be impossible financially to service smaller accounts or to produce costly, worth-while pictures. The question of print costs makes it impossible to service all theatres in the country at the same time.

Special Handling

There is nothing unlawful about the practice of special handling or pre-releasing pictures. Terms such as pre-release, merchandising engagements, or special handling are used interchangeably as if they mean the same thing by Allied Abram F. Myers. Pre-release is exhibition prior to general release. Picture is withdrawn from distribution for six months before broad, general release. Paramount has withdrawn this practice because it has found that taking a film out of release for an extended period is not conducive to the best results.

Specal handling on merchandising engagements is different. After a picture is shown on a merchandising engagement, it is not withdrawn from release for a long time nor is the picture licensed for first run in the same city after its merchandising engagement. Par's merchandising system is sound from a business standpoint and is not a violation of any decree or law.

Phillips also replied to Myers' charges on Par's handling of "Strategic Air Command," "White Christmas" and "Desperate Hours." Paramount is not charging unreasonable film rentals. It has granted credits running into millions of dollars. We try to sell pictures at a price exhibitors can pay. However, what the exhibitor says he can afford is not always the case: In many cases, exhibs have misrepresented their ability to pay.

If there is integration again, "let us have good old Amreican fair play." Producers and distributors should not be shackled while the former affiliated theatres are left free to produce and exclude the picture of their competitors.

have made it plain that the Code has no punitive strength. Hughes was fined $25,000 for releasing a picture without seal but never paid it, and the MPAA, eager not to lose a member, never pressed him on it.

It's becoming plain to those now engaged in the Code study that self-regulation without "teeth" will never work (a) at a time when the slipping boxoffice demands more unusual themes and results in less exhibitor reluctance to book a questionable item, and (b) with "anarchistic" independents more or less taking over the field.

Code revise committee has met twice and now has appointed a "subcommittee" to carry on the work. Lawyers are heavily represented on this group. There is Paul Quinn of RKO, standing in for RKO prexy Daniel O'Shea; Robert Rubin of Paramount, for Barney Balaban, and Sidney Schreiber, the general counsel of the MPAA. Also on the committee are Nate Spingold and Ray Bell of Columbia, and Ken Clark, the MPAA's p.r. topper.

The discussions have been kept strictly private, but it's known that the "penalty" question has been discussed along with other Code aspects, such as the appeals board, which many feel should be broadened to include exhibitors. Latter haven't exactly broken down the MPAA's door to be included, but would probably serve if asked.

Re: Theatre Members

It's pointed out, however, that even if theatremen were to come on the board, they'd still be in the minority, and their say-so wouldn't necessarily be binding on other exhibs, particularly if a picture comes along like "The Moon Is Blue," which—most theatre operators felt—should have been approved by the Code.

The prime realization, however, is that the Code cannot continue to function effectively if almost anyone is free to ignore it by simply stepping outside the MPAA pale. The only reaction to this can be for the Code Administration to become increasingly more liberal, which in turn is bound to incur the wrath of the more conservative groups, such as the Catholic Legion of Decency, which would like nothing better than to shape the Code in its own image.

Another area of possible revise was indicated clearly by Code administrator Geoffrey Shurlock in a New York speech last week, when he pointed out that the increasing dependence on the foreign market, plus the rise in coproductions, was likely to bring the Code in conflict with overseas interests. Foreign producers have long held that it's unfair for their product to be judged in terms of strict American morality.

As Shurlock very aptly put it: "Whose sensibilities will get the right of way, theirs or ours?"

Yank Film Fest?

swer came last week from Walter Reade Jr., circuit operator and also a distributor via Continental Distributing. "Why shouldn't the Motion Picture Assn. sponsor such an event," he asked. "It seems only logical that the producers, who currently get so much of their revenue from abroad, should be the hosts." Reade felt strongly that an international fest on U. S. soil would be a boon and would focus attention on the imported product and its quality.

Yet, it's pointed out that money isn't the only problem. Whereas Europe almost depends on the American tourist trade, the opposite just isn't true. Very few Europeans "tour" U. S. Also, while Europeans by tradition are interested in the international aspect of motion pictures, the same can hardly be said of American audiences who, to this day, reject most overseas fare.

The foreign press descends in hordes on Cannes and Venice and reports the goings-on in detail. American stars appear and make news in stories and pictures. Question is posed whether, were a fest to be arranged in the U. S., the press would give that kind of cooperation, considering that—short of a very few foreign film personalities, American audiences just aren't acquainted with the overseas stars.

Quite apart from all that, there is the language barrier which, in America, is a lot more pertinent than it would be in Europe.

All of which, say observers, isn't denying that a festival in the U. S. wouldn't help create an interest, at least in the keys. Question is merely whether it's worth all the trouble since the imports aren't stymied so much in N. Y. and Chicago as they are outside the big metropolitan centres. Also, foreign lingualers may not be released for months after a fest.

Reade said that, for the trade show that goes with the Theatre Owners of America convention in New York next September, the registration from abroad would be very high.

grows among the execs who can't even agree exactly how many theatres are operating throughout the country. There appears to be a lack of enthusiasm for outside studies and a growing inclination to have the industry itself undertake the necessary surveys.

Yet, in the East, there is a certain amount of cynicism over Hollywood's response to data. "You can show them anything you want, that's still a long way from getting them to comply," said one exhibitor.

Ad-pub toppers are skedded to meet again this week to mull over various ideas. One of them said he was hopeful of action of one sort or another. "In the past, we'd make suggestions to the presidents. Now, the situation is reversed. The presidents have asked for suggestions, and the implication is that they are wide open for any concrete plans."

but only 75% billing for her double act.

The deal, which involves a minimum 26 week Australian tour, plus options for a further 26 weeks, provides for a guaranteed basic salary against a 10% of the take. This could yield upwards of $3,500 on capacity business.

Martin, who operates a leading theatre chain in Australia, favored Julia for his Olympic layout in view of her multilinguistic abilities. She sings in, and speaks about 10 languages, and that, Martin reckoned, would have additional appeal for international audiences expected during the Olympics. The booking is a direct result of Julia's solo tryout engagement at the Colony restaurant here two months ago. Martin caught her, and immediately opened negotiations.

Pat Henning will get second star billing in the production. Others already signed include Channing Pollock, the Lane Brothers and Bob Bromley.

Re-Titled RKO Circuit

RKO Industries Replaces Old Theatres Corp.—3 New Directors—Now In Textiles, Gas and Oil

Meeting for the first time since stockholders approved the acquisition of the Cleveland Arcade Co., the board of the RKO Theatres Corp. changed the name of the company to RKO Industries Corp. Board also appointed three new directors and elected new officers.

RKO Theatres shareholders last week approved the reorganization agreement providing for the issuance of 1,043,706 shares of common in exchange for the assets of the Cleveland Arcade Co., which has a controlling interest in the Gera Corp.

Circuit and its subsids reported a net of $355,138 for the first quarter of 1956 compared with $535,236 for the same period in 1955.

Gera Corp., representing RKO Theatres' first diversification move, is engaged in textile finishing through the U.S.F.-Aspinook Division; electronic research, the manufacture of synthetic fabrics, etc. It also has oil and gas properties in Kansas and is engaged in real estate operations.

Officers of the new RKO Industries include Albert A. List as chairman of the board and president; William A. Broadfoot, vice-chairman of the board; Sol A. Schwartz, exec v.p. Schwartz also stays on as prexy of RKO Theatres and the circuit's chief exec.

New board members include Broadfoot, General Royal B. Lord and A. H. Parker. Broadfoot and Lord are execs of Gera. Parker is the president of the Old Colony Trust Co. in Boston. Other seven directors are Theodore R. Colborn, David J. Greene, Dudley G. Layman, A. Louis Oresman, Edward C. Raftery, List and Schwartz.

DRIVE-IN HAZARD TO AIRPORT CLAIMED

Chicago, May 22.

A proposed drive-in theatre to be built on privately owned land near Chicago's recently opened O'Hare International Airport is the subject of a running battle here between the theatre's promoters and Cook County zoning authorities.

The county contends the ozoner's screen will be a safety hazard to planes using O'Hare field since it would be in direct line with the flight approach to a proposed runway. Promoters Michael A. Reese and Sam Shiner claim the county has no right to deny them a building permit and threaten suit if the permit is not granted. The city has offered to buy the land on which the drive-in would be built, 37 acres, for $56,000. The promoters say they paid twice that much for the site and that commercial land in the area is selling for $10,000 an acre. The city had originally planned to buy the land as part of the airport's development program but a shortage of funds available for the program has so far interfered with the purchase.

Latest development is that state's attorney John Gutknecht has advised the county zoning board that they need not issue a building permit since the city has made an offer to purchase the land. City corporation counsel John Melaniphy maintains that the land can be condemned unless the promoters accept the city's offer and that then title to the land would go to the city. As of now, however, the outcome is still uncertain.

Pimstein Vs. List Ends; Settlement Undivulged

Henry M. Pimstein, former RKO Pictures v.p. and attorney, last week settled his $226,000 suit against Albert A. List. No details given as to sum. Settlement was reached during conferences before N.Y. Federal Judge Lawrence E. Walsh.

Pimstein's suit charged that he was retained by List to act as an adviser and negotiate for a controlling interest in RKO Theatres. Although the stock was acquired, complaint alleged, Pimstein wasn't compensated for his services.

List, with broad textile interests prior to moving into the film field, is now president and board chairman of RKO Industries, parent body of RKO Theatres.

I must say that the words of this song would, in my judgment, be found somewhat discordant when heard out of a religious context, and even in a religious context would hardly accord with taste in this country."

Cornell told VARIETY: "I am going back to America where I can sing what I like, and the Archbishop can preach what he likes."

"Let's face it," said Cornell at the Empire Theatre here. "The BBC has cut my business on this score by half. The trip has not been a roaring success by any means. I don't expect people to come to hear me if they never manage to hear my records. Thanks to the BBC, they never do. The ban is ridiculous."

Cornell and his pianist, Jerry Carretta, are skedded to plane back to N.Y. from London May 20 after their current British tour.

In a breakdown of the Col increase, the survey showed that pop albums jumped 58% ahead of last year, longhair packages were 68% ahead and pop singles were 13% ahead.

Survey also pointed up the continuing sales downgrade of extended play platters and 78 rpm singles.

promised for Minneapolis and the Guild-ATS has come through with that number. They've been the current "Teahouse of the August Moon," "Anniversary Waltz," "Bus Stop," "Plain and Fancy" and "Bad Seed." All but "Anniversary Waltz" did big business here.

In this regard, Lowell Kaplan, Lyceum manager, supports Keefe, asserting, "We've had no complaints from subscribers and as far as we're able to learn, they're very well satisfied with what they've had."

Keefe also points out that although road cities have generally been paying higher prices for legit, beefs have been few. In Minneapolis, for example, the top prices for most musicals and non-musicals, respectively, are now $4.95 and $4.40, respectively, instead of the former $4.40 and $3.85 or $3.30.

"Like New Yorkers, road town residents apparently are reconciled to the fact that higher operating costs call for steeper admissions, and if you have what they want the admission scale seems to be no factor," asserts Keefe.

"If it isn't what they want, it's the same old story—you can't give it away at any price. General prosperity, of course, may have something to do with this willingness to foot the higher bill for theatre tickets."

come the medium of presidents. In addition to President Eisenhower, who has made four closed-circuit appearances for dedication ceremonies, the medium has featured the corporate heads of the nation's top business firms, including General Motor's Harlow Curtice, General Electric's Ralph Cordiner, Sun Oil's Robert Dunlop, and Standard Oil's Stanley Hope.

Extent to which large-screen closed-circuit has advanced in seven years as a specialized communications medium is pointed up by the fact that TNT alone has staged 100 telecasts over that period, with the majority coming in the last two years. Company expects to do $4,000,000 worth of business during the current fiscal year, staging an average of two or three business closed-circuit telecasts per month.

It is not too early to predict it will be the year's HIGH!

RKO Will Handle Four Disneys Internationally

Deal has been set for RKO to distribute four new Walt Disney full-length features and accompanying short subjects in Latin America, the Far East (excluding Japan), Australia and Switzerland. RKO will also distribute worldwide a series of 18 single reel Disney shorts.

The four features in the deal include "The African Lion," "The Great Locomotive Chase," "Westward Ho, The Wagons," and "Davy Crockett and the River Pirates."

Makelim Plan (Theatre-Financed Pix) Dies; Produced Only One Feature

Hollywood, May 22.

Highly - publicized "Makelim Plan" for distribution of indie product has been folded up by Hal E. Makelim after two years. Lone picture produced in that period is being peddled to majors for possible release. Some 1,200 exhibs who had subscribed to the plan are currently being advised of the cancellation and asked to return their contracts.

During the two years that Makelim worked on the plan, he had contacted hundreds of exhibitors seeking contracts guaranteeing play dates for a dozen pictures he planned to make. The only picture produced thus far, "The Peacemaker," has been completed for several months. Film had a one-week trial run in Wichita, Kan., some time ago.

Letters to exhibs asking cancellation of existing contracts admitted that despite the work on the Plan, there were insufficient contracts to "allow a proper presentation or even come close to giving me back my cost of the picture, to say nothing of prints, advertising, etc."

Italian Scheme Needs Red Okay

No Tint Lab in China, So Censoring Bonzi Yellow River Footage Before Leaving Country a Hurdle

Documentary feature on China, with the Great Wall and the dike system in the Yellow River area as a theme, is a hope of Italian explorer-filmmaker Count Leonardo Bonzi. Chinese government is considering the plan, but hasn't given it the green light yet.

Bonzi disclosed the project in New York last week while on a stopover from Japan back to his native Rome. While in Gotham, he signed final papers with IFE Releasing Corp. which is releasing his "Lost Continent," the 1955 Cannes film fest winner.

Bonzi and Seymour Poe, IFE exec v.p., reported that John Gunther had been signed to write a narration for "Continent" which is in color and CinemaScope and pictorializes Bonzi's expedition into Indonesia. Pic, which is feature-length, will be released by IFE in October. It's the first C'Scope opus to be made by Italians, and also the first to use the C'Scope lens on a hand camera. Bonzi's earlier effort in the nature documentary line was "Green Magic," also handled in the U. S. by IFE.

Bonzi explained that the problem with his Red China project was that the Chinese wanted to see the footage he'd shoot before it leaves the country. Since he'll be lensing in color, and China has no tint labs, this procedure isn't practical. However, he said, he had offered the Reds to submit footage to their embassy in Switzerland.

In his talks with the Chinese, he had told them that the documentary would have to be good both for them and for Western audiences, Bonzi said. He wanted to point out, for instance, that the great Yellow River dike system was being built by manual labor. He also agreed to have official supervision of the shooting, which would take a year and would start next winter.

Bonzi said his "Green Magic" had been sold behind the Iron Curtain, and that "Lost Continent" also would be shown in Russia starting in July. The Soviets paid in dollars for the film.

A ski and tennis champion, test pilot, trans-Atlantic flyer, explorer and film producer, Bonzi said he was making pictorial records of his expeditions, partly in the hope to recoup his cost and partly to bring distant places to people. He has no prior commitments on any of his films, including the China project.

There's a renascence of documentary making in Italy and in Europe generally, Bonzi reported, warning however that there was room only for the unusual in that field. "Lost Continent" has been a strong grosser everywhere it has played, notably Italy, France and Germany. In Italy, where 20th-Fox distributes it, "Continent" has grossed $500,000 alone. The Italo Government pays an 18% subsidy on the b.o. gross. Pic was close to a year in the making and has just opened up in Japan.

Mario De Vecchi Thinks Yank Scouts Snub Lesser Product in Europe

Foreign film importers in shopping for fresh product in Europe frequently are so engrossed in the more prominent pictures that they tend to overlook other films which may have equal merit in the American market. That's the opinion of Mario De Vecchi, exec v.p. of the recently formed API Productions whose initial import, "The White Sheik," just concluded a run at the 55th St. Playhouse, N.Y.

De Vecchi, who goes abroad in September to scout new acquisitions, feels that if the film has sufficient basic commercial values all that's needed to generate some action at the art house wicket is a good publicity campaign coupled with a favorable critical reception.

Aside from the Italian-made "White Sheik," five other Italo imports are on the API release slate. They include "I Vitelloni" (The Wastrel), "Terza Liceo" (Love is Coeducational), "The Woman Who Invented Love," "Luci del Varieta" and "Sunday in August." Company also sold a Picasso featurette in Ferraniacolor to NBC-TV's "Elder Wiseman" series.

A firm believer in personal appearances to whip up interest in a picture, De Vecchi hopes to have writer-director Federico Fellini and director Luciano Emmer to come to the U.S. in conjunction with openings of their films. Fellini directed "Vitelloni" from a story and screenplay by himself and Ennio Flajano. Emmer directed "Love Is Coeducational."

Non-professional cast of "Coeducational" is in marked contrast to the star power of "Woman Who Invented Love." Latter, a Rossano Brazzi production, has Brazzi and Silvana Pampanini in top roles. API, incidentally, was formed last year with Lew Shoskes as president; Herbert Margrill, ad-pub v.p. and De Vecchi.

Sell Canadian Rights To Bank Grabbed Frenchies

Canadian rights to French versions of five feature pictures controlled by the Bank of America have been acquired by Empire-Universal Films, Ltd., with Sovereign Films to handle the 16m versions.

Titles are "Let's Live a Little," "Ramrod," "No Minor Vices," "Force of Evil" and "Caught." All have been sold to tv in the U.S. Most of these pictures are the ones taken over by the bank from the now defunct Enterprise Productions which was headed by Charles Einfeld.

Interstate's Conversions

Dallas, May 22.

Interstate Circuit has concluded a deal with Todd-AO to convert the Tower Theatre here, a downtown house, and the Tower in Houston, a nabe house, to that screen process for "Oklahoma" come June.

"South Pacific" also in the Todd-AO process will follow "Oklahoma" and will in turn be followed by "Around the World in 80 Days."

BELL, BROOKLYN, IN QT ANTITRUST PEACE

Mindell Theatre Corp., operator of the Bell Cinema, Brooklyn, N.Y., has settled its $750,000 treble damage antitrust suit against the eight majors and several affiliated circuits. Action was discontinued shortly before the case was scheduled to go to trial before N.Y. Federal Judge Sylvester J. Ryan.

Mindell charged the distributor defendants with discriminating against the Bell in respect to runs and clearances. Terms of the settlement were undisclosed.

Philly 'Vigilantes' See Pictures As 'Swirling Oceans of Rottenness'

Attacking today's motion pictures as "swirling oceans of . . . rottenness," the Philadelphia Archdiocesan Vigilance (sic) Committee makes it plain that Catholics have no business defending freedom of expression on the screen.

In a booklet designed to rouse Catholic pressure against "indecent" films, the committee states:

"Some Catholics have yet to be convinced about the Legion of Decency. Some are erroneously individualist, saying they can make their own judgment about movies. Tell them a bad movie is sinful and conscience does not allow anyone to try it before he buys it.

"Some are constitutionalists, claiming freedom of expression for the movies. Tell them that they are free to sin but the penalty is hell. Ask them why they are taking a stand against the Church.

"Some are so sure of themselves saying that a bad movie does not affect them. Challenge that statement. Can a he-man view feminine indecencies without a single passing bad thought or emotion?"

Booklet, announcing a training course for active "vigilantes," said "A Catholic who goes to any movie nowadays without first knowing what kind of picture it is, is as crazy as a deep sea diver who goes down without an octopus knife. The Legion of Decency is the octopus knife for the Catholic moviegoer. Without it, more slimy pictures would be around. Movies today are swirling oceans of octopus rottenness. Where the Legion cannot cut off the filthy creatures from reaching its victims, it cuts off innocent victims from reaching out to the creature's sucking arms. Movies today just won't come clean. Even good ones are peppered with octopus poison."

Industry execs who have seen the pamphlet thought the frantic wording implied a growing concern over Catholics not following Legion dictum.

STOOPS TO CENSOR

St. Louis Purity Binge Leads to Raids on Penny Arcades

St. Louis, May 22.

Holier-than-thou is really rampaging locally. The St. Louis Grand Jury has indicted five persons, operators or employes, of penny arcades. The premises were "raided."

Peasants put coppers into machine and peeped at what the police called, in an old police phrase, "scantily clad females."

Chi Attorneys' Antitrust Actions Involve Ozoners In Pennsylvania, Mich.

Chicago, May 22.

Three recent damage suits filed against the major film distributors in Federal Courts in Michigan and Pennsylvania by drive-in corporations in those states all allege conspiracy by the majors to prevent ozoners from playing first-run films day and date with local conventional theatres.

One suit, filed by the Super Outdoor Theatre Inc. of Belle Vernon, Pa., asks for $77,100 treble damages for the period May 1-Nov. 20, 1952. Another court action instituted by the Tusca Drive-in Theatre Company, operators of an outdoor theatre near Rochester, Pa., asks for $75,000 for damages allegedly suffered from May 1, 1952 to Oct. 15, 1952. The third suit, which includes the 114 theatre Butterfield circuit as a defendant, filed in Michigan by the Kalamazoo Drive-in Theatre Co., Inc., asks $75,000 for alleged damages in 1955.

The suits were filed by Chicago attorneys Seymour F. Simon and Sheldon O. Collen.

Remodel 1913 Biograph Studio in Bronx For Theatre (& TV) Films

The old Biograph Studios in the Bronx, inactive since 1936, will be reopened for feature picture and telepix production by a new operating group which has acquired the property.

The new group, operating under the corporate title of Gold Medal Studios Inc., includes Alfred W. Schwalberg, former Paramount domestic sales chief and presently proxy of Artists-Producers Associates; Martin H. Poll, head of Gold Medal Productions and formerly with Theatre Network Television; David Steinberg, president of Imperial Scenic Studios, and Sy Weintraub, executive v.p. of the telepix distribution outfit, Flamingo Films, and proxy of KEYD-TV, Minneapolis. Schwalberg is chairman of the board of the new company, Poll president, and Steinberg and Weintraub vice-presidents.

The studios are presently being modernized. Two buildings include two large sound stages and facilities which include commissary, showers, dressing rooms, air conditioning, cutting rooms, and projection rooms. The deal was set by Poll in negotiations with Ben Gertner, president of Biograph Realty Corp. Tom Ward will be studio manager.

The Biograph Studios were opened in 1913. The first picture filmed there was D. W. Griffith's "Judith the Petunia." Early stars who made films there included Dorothy and Lillian Gish, Mabel Normand, Blanche Sweet, Bill Jefferson, Henry Miller, Mary Pickford, and Mack Sennett. The old Fox Co. and Paramount-Famous-Lasky used the studio before building their own. In 1924 First National Pictures started producing pictures there. In 1934 republic Pictures took it over and renamed it the Republic Studios.

Venice Backs Down After U.S. Beefs; Example Complicates Berlin Festival

Venice Film Festival committee has indicated its willingness to up the number of entries via matinee showings. Festival will still only run 12 days, and the original intention was to limit competition to a dozen night-shown features.

There's also a possibility that Venice may change its mind about the new rules under which its own committee would pick entries.

Beef against the 1956 policy was registered by a number of countries during the recent meeting at Cannes of the exec committee of the International Federation of Film Producers Assns. The U. S. in particular stressed that the Venice rules, as now constituted, are in violation of the Federation's own rules and in particular of rule number seven, which states specifically that entries should be selected by the countries invited to participate.

Federation body instructed its president, Renato Gualino, to get in touch with the Venice authorities and request them to change their regulations.

Motion Picture Export Assn. wants a return to the status quo, i.e. a policy under which it'd nominate two or three Yank pix for the fest, with Venice free to do its own inviting. One company—20th-Fox—has already indicated that it has no intention of submitting its product to the MPEA, but prefers to go it alone. 20th followed that policy at Cannes.

Meanwhile, the Federation's rules created an odd situation in relation to the Berlin festival, with MPEA stating that it didn't have enough time to nominate American entries by the May 15 deadline, and the Germans arguing that they aren't allowed to select from individual American entries. According to the latest advice, the Germans have now agreed to make their own selection from the U. S. films submitted. Next year, however MPEA will nominate.

BACK PAY HEARINGS

Los Angeles, May 22.

New hearings to determine the amount of back pay due members of four Hollywood unions from Color Corp. of America are slated for the near future as a result of an Appellate Court ruling re-submitting dismissal pay claims to arbitration. Understood the total is around $14,500.

Arbitrator Melvin J. Lennard had originally ruled that the firm "violated the collective bargaining agreements" but failed to specify the amount due each member of the Film Technicians Local 683, Motion Picture Studio Technicians Local 789, Studio Projectionists Local 165 and Studio Transportation Drivers Local 399, all of whom were laid off in 1954. Superior Judge John J. Ford sent the matter back to the arbitrator to determine the amounts involved and CCA appealed his action. Appellate court ruled that the Judge's order is "not one . . . from which an appeal may be taken."

Columbus, May 22.

Now that the 40-year ban on D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation" has been cancelled out by the unconstitutionality of Ohio's censorship law the film has opened at new arter here, the Indianola, where manager Charles Sugarman reports best boxoffice of the nine bookings since house opened.

Although there are rumblings already of distaste among Ohio's considerable Negro population at "this reaching back into the past to hit us again with the Dixiecrat prejudices of Thomas Dixon and D. W. Griffith," the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, trade body headquartered in Columbus, has made a deal with the distributor to favor ITO members with booking priority.

But at the same the ITO cautions its members that the film is a "false version of history and gives a distorted picture of race relations in the south." It also points out that a foreword on prints now states, "This picture represents the interpretation of the Civil War and the Reconstruction Period following, as generally conceived by the mind of the Southern whites."

In addition, reps of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People saw the picture. ITO exec secretary Robert A. Wile asserts "While they did not approve it and said it would not do any good, neither did they think it would do any harm."

(Nearly all Negro leaders, and many white scholars of the race tension problem in America, name "Birth of a Nation" as the greatest propaganda put-over from the Ku Klux Klan point of view in American history.—Ed.)

KNOCK AS BOOST

J. Edgar Hoover Unwittingly Provides Title

Hollywood, May 22.

There probably won't be any screen credit involved, but FBI boss J. Edgar Hoover is responsible for the title of an upcoming indie film, "Blueprint for Murder."

Co-producers Art Estrada and Steve Masino sent Hoover a copy of a script titled "Devil's Playground" and dealing with a postal robbery in Las Vegas, inviting his comment. FBI boss took a dim view of the script, contending it might give ideas to persons with criminal tendencies. He tagged it "a blueprint for murder"—and the producers took it from there.

Cinerama Negotiates New Terms

Productions Corp. Seeks Bigger Take—Cinemiracle Rivalry Is Discounted

Cinerama Productions Inc. is currently negotiating with Stanley Warner for revision of the contract between the two companies, stockholders of Cinerama Productions were apprised at the annual meeting last week. Cinerama Productions, which turned over its production and exhibition rights to the theatre chain in return for a percentage, is seeking an arrangement whereby it can receive an additional share of the income at the present time.

Also involved in the discussions, although distinctly a longrange goal, is the possibility of a "merger" between the three firms involved in the Cinerama process—Stanley Warner, Cinerama Productions, and Cinerama, Inc., the patent holder and manufacturing firm. Talks already are underway relating to an exchange of stock between Cinerama Productions and Cinerama Inc., with SW's shares in Cinerama Inc. being the key factor in the proposal. Theodore R. Kupferman, v.p. and general counsel of Cinerama Productions, admitted that "objections might conceivably occur," but that the company would continue to explore various types of stock interchanges with a view toward consolidating the operations of the three separate firms.

The negotiations with SW, in process for almost a year, also involve Cinerama Productions share of the take from the foreign exhibition of the three-strip films. Milo J. Sutliff, prexy of Cinerama Productions, said that agreement had been reached with SW on this point and would involve a 50-50 split of the foreign profits after all costs are recouped.

Except for receiving 8% of the net of the first four Cinerama theatres, Cinerama Productions splits 50-50 with SW on the profits that remain after the production costs are amortized, operating expenses are deducted, and installation costs are recouped. Cinerama Productions' aim is to receive its profit share at an earlier date.

According to treasurer Irving Margolin, the company's financial status is showing a marked improvement. Only a $500,000 debt remains outstanding and this is expected to be cleared up by next year. At the prodding of stockholders, he predicted, as a wild guess, that current earnings of 27c per share would increased to 70c per share by next year. Margolin also disclosed that the installation cost of 11 Cinerama theatres, in addition to the first four units, had been amortized. He also revealed that the negative cost of "Cinerama Holiday," representing $2,000,000, had been recouped, but that there was still $1,000,000 to go to recover the full cost of the picture. "Seven Wonders of the World," he reported, represented a negative cost of $2,800,000.

Discount 'Cinemiracle'

Cinerama Productions officials discounted the effect of National Theatres proposed Cinemiracle process, but acknowledged the possibility of some day licensing Cinerama pictures to Cinemiracle-equipped theatres.

General tone of the stockholders' remarks was friendly although there was questioning relating to dividends and how come shareholders were not realizing any benefits despite the high grosses of the Cinerama films. The expense of the production-exhibition operations plus the liquidation of previous debts were cited as the reason for the situation. The meeting ended on a friendly note, with shareholders raising the management's operation.

Management's slate of directors was elected. It included Sutliff, Kupferman, Margolin, Louis B. Mayer, Ira S. Stevens, Perry N. Selheimer, and John R. Boland. The board reelected all the present officers. In a curious switch, shareholders voted Sutliff an option to buy 5,000 shares although the prexy said he didn't want them. The board had previously approved the stock option.

REPEAT 'LADIES-FREE' AT FOX MIDWESTERS

Kansas City, May 22.

Ladies Day as a boxoffice come-on worked so well the first time, the Fox Midwest Theatres tried it again. Idea was taken from baseball and applied to the opening day of "Never Say Goodbye" in four first run theatres here couple of weeks ago. It boosted attendance about 30% and held its own on the day's total gross.

So the Fox managers put it to work again last week when they opened "Revolt of Mamie Stover" in the four first runs here. Tower, Uptown, Fairway and Granada, with comparable results, according to Leon Robertson, city manager.

While the stunt is working nicely here, it's figured best with a distaff-appeal picture. Deal is to invite a man to bring his rib, both for the price of one on opening day.

"Blithe Spirit"

It seems to us that a well-known playwright is summed up by the headline above. He could be, at least, in his contacts with us. He likes tiny horses frisking on the beige background of his Countess Mara Cravats. One slim singer of popular ballads chooses the bright, brisk designs. And they tell us that a musical fellow named Phil, famed for leading ladies, has 2,000 Countess Mara Cravats. The mark of the man who has made his mark is his Countess Mara Cravat, quite often. $7.50, $8.50, $10.00, $15.00, and more. Bow ties (clips, and to tie) $2.50 to $5.00. The Spring tie for you waits for you at 338 Park Avenue, and PLaza 9-2488.

I take this occasion to express my gratitude for the continuing confidence placed in me by my customers and friends in show business.

SUMMER TV: 'SO WHAT'S NEW?'

That CBS Mfg. Headache

It's reported that the Wall St. interests represented on the CBS board of directors are taking an increasingly dim view of the set manufacturing arm of the corporate Columbia company and have been trying to persuade board chairman William S. Paley to once and for all divest himself of it. It's no secret, of course, that Paley & Co. have dropped millions in both the CBS-Columbia set manufacturing subsid and in the Hytron-acquired tube manufacturing division. Although losses have been pared considerably, since CBS has now declared a hiatus on color set and tube production, it's understood that at one point they ran up to $12,000,000 in one year.

Whether or not CBS will scrap manufacturing to devote itself exclusively in the network and recording business, is a moot point. Corporate prexy Frank Stanton, for one, is far from bullish on color tv's prospects, even as a longrange undertaking. On the other hand, Paley, it's reported, sees an eventual retrieving of all losses, plus a profitable manufacturing operation, based on an eventual mass embracing of tint tv.

Meanwhile, CBS-Columbia has been cutting back on its parts orders and personnel. A large parts order going into the third quarter was cancelled because, according to a company spokesman, it comprised high-priced components and the company wants to stick to low and medium-cost sets to be more competitive. "Duplicated" personnel in various departments have been dropped, and several engineers transferred to CBS Laboratories, also because of duplication, the spokesman said. Proposals and plans for future operation have been submitted to Stanton and Paley, and CBS-Columbia execs are still awaiting decisions on those proposals.

Consolidated CBS grosses and profits continue to climb and climb (with an alltime high registered for the first quarter of this year), but the major revenues stem from the tv network.

'Good Morning's' Bright Manana

Higher Ratings, Mail Payoff for Sponsor on Write-Ins Portend Happy Days

They're beginning to say "Good Morning" a little more cheerfully around CBS-TV these days. Reason? The 7-8 p.m. Will Rogers Jr. experiment is beginning—slowly—to pay off in the form of (1) a rising Nielsen, which after nine weeks has hit the 4.0 mark, (2) a persistent series of renewals by one sponsor resulting from a stronger-than-usual mail pull for write-in sales and (3) murmurs of other activity on the sponsor front.

Nielsen figure, of course, hasn't approached that of the competing Dave Garroway "Today" on NBC, but more to the point is the strange story of Sterns Nurseries (flowers, that is), which several weeks back decided to try network tv with a one-spot buy on both "Today" and "Good Morning." The "Good Morning" announcement by Rogers pulled 4,000 mail-orders at $3 a clip. Result was an additional order for some more spots, followed by still another and another this week for four more. CBS pubaffairs execs point out, moreover, an unprecedented type of fan mail, pointing up Rogers' potential as a video frontman.

On the sponsor front, Hamilton Beach appliances has come in for a string of participations, and on the hook is still another bankroller. With a rising Nielsen and some of that green stuff (not plants) showing itself, the CBS brass aren't snarling so vehemently when somebody says "good morning" to them.

'High Finance' As Latest Coin Entry

With "$64,000 Question" still in the No. 1 Trendex slot and the new "$64,000 Challenge" showing up in No. 4 position, CBS-TV is all set to acquire still another big money quiz-giveaway show. This one is headed for the Saturday night 10:30 slot, moving into the period being vacated by Budweiser and its "Damon Runyon Theatre."

Dennis James heads up the new entry, which is called "High Finance." Basis for the format is a variation on the game of monopoly. It'll show up on the network's summer schedule, starting next month, but is designed for year-round slotting. Mennen will sponsor.

With the $100,000-plateaued "Big Surprise" on the NBC-TV Saturday night sked, it brings to four the number of "giveaway giants" since "$64,000 Question" hit the jackpot.

Larry Marx, Resnick As Gleason Scripters

Larry Marx and Sidney Resnick, who wind up their scripting chores on the Jack Paar show on CBS-TV Friday (25), have been signed to the writing staff of the hourlong Jackie Gleason Saturday nighter for next fall. They don't miss a day's work, since the script sessions on the Gleason segment start on Monday (28).

Sy Fisher of the Frank Cooper agency set the deal.

'Round the World' With Danny Kaye For CBS Kideo

High on the Ed Murrow "See It Now" agenda for next season is a major "introspec" (which may require a two or even three-part installment) which will star Danny Kaye as ambassador for the United Nations Children's Emergency Fund. Kaye is currently on a globe-circling tour on behalf of the UN organization, with "See It Now" cameramen doing an exhaustive blow-by-blow chronology of his kid whirl. Thus far Murrow has 120,000 feet of film, much of which, he says, is "out of this world." It'll be Kaye's first major tv exposure.

A lot of footage remains to be shot. Kaye has still to penetrate such countries as Morocco and the leper colonies of Nigeria. While in Spain he may meet with General Franco. If possible, he may also go to Russia to show the Soviet some of the problems of the world's underfed and diseased children.

In addition to the "See It Now"

Gore Vidal's 'Honor' As 'Playwrights' Swansong

"Playwrights 56" 1956 swansong entry on NBC-TV will be Gore Vidal's "Honor," with a Civil War background. Franchot Tone will probably be in the lead role. The Tuesday night show's exit date is June 19.

"Honor" will be Vidal's second original on tv (though he's done many adaptations). His first was "Visit to a Small Planet."

IT'S A FIELD DAY FOR THE RERUNS

By GEORGE ROSEN

With only three or four holes still to be plugged, CBS-TV has finally resolved its summer tv schedule and at best it's strictly one of those "let's-get-it-over-with-and-get-into-the-new season" programming schedules. If there ever existed a day in tv when summertime was utilized for experimentation of new ideas, formats personalities, it's long since been written off as a casualty.

Perhaps the only thing that distinguishes this summer from previous semesters is that not a single sponsor, either on CBS or NBC, is taking a hiatus (except in isolated cases where sponsors are cancelling). With some of the regular shows laying off for the hot months, clients are installing substitute entries, none of which even remotely suggests a daring approach at something fresh or different. As for those shows staying put during the humid spell, most of them will come under the heading or reruns (where film shows are concerned) or, as in the case of Ed Sullivan's Sunday hour and Arthur Godfrey's Wednesday night showcase, there will be eight-week substitute conferenciers.

Sunday: Sullivan show (with rotating emcees), General Electric Theatre. Alfred Hitchcock Presents, "$64,000 Challenge" and "What's My Line" all stay put, with repeats of "Private Secretary" at 7:30.

Monday: "Godfrey's Talent Scouts" stays but with an eight-week replacement for Godfrey, still to be chosen. Burns & Allen do reruns. In place of "Lucy" there will be a new Charles Farrell film entry with a Racquet Club, Palm Springs, background, with name guests. "December Bride" goes off, with General Foods still scouting around for a replacement show. "Studio One" goes into its summer edition with Robert Herridge moving in as producer.

Tuesday: Phil Silvers Show will do repeats; ditto "Navy Log." "Joe and Mabel" goes in for the permanently-axed Guy Lombardo show, with J & M scheduled to be

Nothing Amateur About ABC-TV's Regard For Ted Mack Hour Stanza

Pharmaceuticals Inc. and ABC-TV have finally resolved the next-fall status of "Original Amateur Hour," with the show staying where it is Sundays at 9 to 10 but shifting to the 7:30-8:30 Sabbath spot on Oct. 7, when "Omnibus" starts its fall season. "Famous Film Festival," currently in the earlier time, will then be shifted to Saturday nights in the same 7:30-9 time period.

Question of where to put the show has been plaguing both ABC and the sponsors along with the Ed Kletter agency since the web acquired "Omnibus" on the basis of a Sunday night slotting. It's reported that the new arrangement was finally worked out on the basis of a survey by Pharmaceuticals and Kletter which showed a steady rating increase for "Amateur" at the expense of NBC's "Alcoa Hour"-"Goodyear Playhouse" hour. Sponsor finally succeeded in convincing ABC that the show would stand a better chance against Ed Sullivan than "Film Festival."

The shift of "Film Festival," for which pictures for next year have not yet been booked, incidentally, leaves up in the air the status of "Ozark Jubilee," which up to now has held down the 7:30-9 post. Also unresolved is that Sunday 8:30 to 9 segment left vacant by the substitution of the hourlong "Amateur" for the 90-minute "Film Festival."

Supreme Court Refuses to Disturb Present Multiple Ownership Rule In Rejecting Storer Expansion Bid

Washington, May 22.

The FCC won an important victory yesterday (Mon.) before the Supreme Court when the tribunal upheld the validity of the agency's multiple ownership rules governing the number of radio and tv stations which can be held by one interest.

In an opinion written by Justice Stanley F. Reed, the Supreme Court reversed a ruling of the U. S. Court of Appeals that Storer Broadcasting Co. was entitled to a hearing by the FCC on an application in 1953 for a sixth tv station. It also remanded the case to the lower court to consider objections by Storer to the Commission consideration of 1% of stock in a station as constituting an interest for rule purposes.

Storer's application was filed before the FCC revised its rules to allow seven tv stations, provided at least two are UHF.

Much of Reed's decision was devoted to a defense of the lower court in taking jurisdiction. On this aspect of the case, Justices John Harlan and Felix Frankfurter registered strong dissents, saying Storer was not "aggrieved" by multiple rules and had no right to review.

As to the Commission's right to apply ceilings on station ownership, the decision declared: "The growing complexity of our economy induced the Congress to place regulation of businesses like communications in specialized agencies with broad powers. Courts are slow to interfere with their conclusions when reconcilable with statutory directions. We think the multiple ownership rules, as adopted, are reconcilable with the Communications Act as a whole. An applicant files his application with knowledge of the Commission's attitude toward concentration of control. . . . We do not think congress intended the Commission to waste time on applications that do not state a valid basis for a hearing. If any applicant is aggrieved by a refusal, the way for review is open."

However, the majority held that Storer had "standing" to go to court because rules serve to restrict his operations, prevent him from expanding the number of his stations, and so affect him that "at any moment the purchase of Storer's voting stock by some member of the public could endanger its existing structure."

Decision is expected to put a crimp in chances of passage of the bill by Sen. John W. Bricker (R-O.) to eliminate numerical restrictions on station ownership and substitute an aggregate ceiling based on population served. Had the court upheld Storer, the Commission would be without criteria for controlling concentration and need for legislation would be urgent.

CANTOR'S CAPSULES

Talks With ABC Radio For 5-Minute 'Show Biz' Vignettes

With an eye to the Saturday-Sunday automotive audience, Eddie Cantor is talking to ABC about 18 five-minute shows weekly, taped for nine shots on Saturday and nine on Sunday, titled "Show Biz, Then and Now." It would be in the comedian's authoritative style of reminiscence interlarded with recordings. Cantor's talks were held with Ray Diaz, the national program director of ABC-Radio. Deal would give ABC 61 weekend capsules, others being 22 newscasts and 21 "It's Time" features.

Comedian has returned to the Coast to do his NBC-TV daytime "Matinee" dramatic show in color, originating live from Hollywood on June 6.

McCann-Erickson has pulled the loose ends together in finalizing its tv programming roster next season. It adds up to a record-breaking $82,000,000 in overall time-and-program billings, with $10,000,000 of that amount going into spot buying.

The '56-'57 McC-E picture was brought into focus when the agency resolved the status of its Nestle and Bulova accounts (it shares the former with Bryan Houston agency) with Nestle buying the Saturday at 9 CBS-TV slot for the new Gale Storm situation comedy series, "Oh, Susannah." and Bulova, with a $10,000,000 budget, co-sponsoring Jackie Gleason and continuing with $4,500,000 worth of "Bulova Watch Time" spots.

Aside from Bulova and Nestle, McCann's tv representation next season will include:

American Chicle's alternate-week sponsorship of "Jim Bowie" on ABC-TV;

Mennen's sponsorship of the new Dennis James Saturday night "High Finance" quiz giveaways on CBS-TV;

Gem Razor's "Game of the Week" baseball sponsorship on CBS-TV;

Coca-Cola's twice-a-week Eddie Fisher show on NBC-TV;

Chrysler's continued stake in CBS-TV's "Climax" and the one-a-month "Shower of Stars";

Westinghouse's "Studio One" on CBS-TV;

Swift's participation in ABC-TV's "Disneyland";

Mennen's alternate-week pickup of the Wednesday night fights on ABC-TV.

Network daytime buys include: Swift's three-way coin flow into Tennessee Ernie, Art Linkletter and Johnny Coons; Coca-Cola and SOS' "Mickey Mouse Club"; SOS' buys into the Garry Moore and Bob Crosby shows, with Swift also bankrolling Moore.

Pacific Borax ("Death Valley Days" in 100 markets), National Biscuit and Esso are the major spot champions in the house.

SKF's 'Studio-on-Wheels'

Philadelphia, May 22.

Smith, Kline & French, pharmaceutical firm, has acquired a $225,000 mobile color television "studio-on-wheels." Manufactured by RCA, it will be used solely to televise surgical and clinical demonstrations.

Time-Life Dickers Murrow's 'Person'

Henry R. Luce, on behalf of his Time-Life mag empire, has made some overtures to CBS-TV with a view toward sponsorship of the Ed Murrow "Person to Person" next season, Program is currently sponsored by Elgin (with Hamm Beer and American Oil sharing it regionally on the alternate weeks) but Elgin bankrolling terminates next month.

Luce overtures, via Young & Rubicam, is part of a general Time-Life campaign to expand consumer interest in the mags. There's been no definite decision as yet.

"P to P" lays off for 10 weeks this summer.

The producers of "Person to Person" are meanwhile negotiating

SARNOFF, STANTON & KINTNER'S LAST STAND TO WARD OFF ANTI-TRUST RAP

Washington, May 22.

When the big brass of CBS, NBC and ABC appear before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee next month (June 11, 12, 14) their testimony may turn out to be the last stand of the networks against Government action on the monopoly front.

While Messrs. Stanton, Sarnoff and Kintner are expected to make a strong case for the contributions of the nets to television, and be backed up by their affiliates, the atmosphere in Washington doesn't seem conducive to letting things continue as they have been. It appears doubtful that concessions here and there to ease the flow of programs will get the nets off the hook.

Aside from the impact of the anti-network testimony before the Committee (with possibly more of it when two House committees resume hearings) and the investigations being conducted by the Department of Justice, the failure of the FCC to solve the allocations problem adds fuel to the monopoly charges made by Sen. John W. Bricker (R-O.) last month.

Bricker's role in the tv picture, it's felt here, isn't to be discounted. While there's little chance, if any, that his bill to regulate the webs can get consideration this session, there's an ominous cloud that would hover over the nets if the Republicans regain control of the Senate at the November elections. In that event, Bricker would become chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee. And the Senator means business.

The question now, however, is whether the Government might act before Congress adjourns (probably at the end of July or early in August). There are indications, from the activities of the FBI men in New York, that Justice may be preparing to clamp an anti-trust suit against the nets. The Department, it's understood, is vigilantly following the testimony before the Senate committee.

To ward off Government, and perhaps private, anti-trust action, it's considered more than a possibility that the nets might be willing to go along on a consent decree to give the affiliates more leeway on programming. Another possibility is that the FCC, at the behest of Justice, might revise its network rules (the purpose of its current study) to cover the situation. Such an action, it's suggested, might be welcomed by the webs which would be risking private suits (as the experience of the motion picture majors proved) if successfully prosecuted by Justice.

What would a consent decree or FCC action provide? The best opinion here is that the recommendations of Dick Moore of KTTV in Los Angeles restricting option time to no more than 75% of an affiliate's prime evening hours would be followed. Prohibition of "must buy" agreements might also be included.

One of the big unknowns in the situation is whether Justice will take action before Assistant Attorney General Stanley Barnes in charge of anti-trust leaves office to become a Federal Judge, for which he has been confirmed.

Mort Watters Nixed On Steve Allen Shift From WLW-T in Cincy

Cincinnati, May 22.

Mort Watters, WCPO-TV general manager, failed in an attempt to gain an NBC-TV switch of Steve Allen's "Tonight" show from WLW-T which carries its kine a week old and an hour later than the originating time.

A poll by the Cincy Post, Scripps-Howard affiliate of WCPO-TV, in a campaign to bring the Allen program live and an hour earlier to local viewers, showed 4,428 votes for and a scant few against the change.

Pegging his appeal on results of the poll, Watters wired NBC's Ray O'Connell: "I believe it my duty to offer facilities of WCPO-TV to carry the show live. Please advise return wire if NBC is interested in WCPO-TV providing this public service."

The network's answer to Watters was "No."

Disney's Aussie Sale

Walt Disney is spreading his wings into international television sales. Disney wrapped up a deal with Australian tv for showing of his three-years supply (72 hours) of the ABC-TV "Disneyland" for telecasting in Sydney and Melbourne starting in the fall. Sales were made to TCN (Television Corp. Ltd.) in Sydney and HSV (Herald-Sun Newspapers) in Melbourne, through their American agent, Charles Michelson.

It's the first foreign tv sale set by the Disney organization and was negotiated by prez Roy Disney.

Bulova Has Its Program Cake And Eats It, Too, But It Cost $10,000,000

Couple years back when Terry Clyne moved the Bulova account from Biow to McCann-Erickson, the watch firm was billing about $5,000,000, all siphoned into those valuable "Bulova Watch Time" on-the-hour spot franchises. As result of its co-sponsorship (with Old Gold) of the hour long Jackie Gleason live show in the fall, Bulova will be spending $10,000,000 a year when it checks in for the September semester.

While Bulova will not relinquish those valuable spot time franchises, nonetheless this will mark a radical departure in the watch company's tv campaign since, for the first time, it will be spending more money on programming ($5,500,000) than on spots. Last year it spent a total of $6,000,000, with $2,000,000 going into "Two For the Money."

The new season will be in the nature of an experiment for Bulova, which will weigh the pay-offs on programming as against spots in determining its future course of action in tv.

SCHNOZ, NBC HUDDLE ON FUTURE TV PLANS

While at the Copacabana, New York, for the present three-week stint, Jimmy Durante and his rep, Abe Lastfogel (William Morris), will be huddling with NBC brass on the comedian's next season's video agenda. He has nixed 39 weekly shows as too strenuous. One plan calls for 10 full-hour stints (on film), plus possibly four spectaculars.

Comedian goes to Chez Paree, Chicago, next for 12 days (an accommodation because of a Nat King Cole scheduling) and the Riverside, Reno, thereafter. He plans to rest most of the summer.

Bill Stern's 'Newsreel' As a Video Package

Bill Stern is packaging a television version of his old "Sports Newsreel of the Air" and has begun peddling the show (sans pilot) to agencies and networks. He already has a four-week option from ABC-TV for a half-hour of time if he can find a sponsor. Stern's got a longterm deal with ABC but thus far has restricted himself to radio.

Teleshow, which would be done on film, is titled "The Will to Win." Partnered with Stern in the package are Bud Zaret and Marty Roth, the former a publicist and the latter a comedy writer, with Alan Rhone pencilled in as director. Colgate, which was the longtime sponsor of the radio version, is interested in the "authenticated" tv'er.

Jack Poppele Quits 'Voice'

Washington, May 22.

J. R. (Jack) Poppele has resigned as assistant director of the U.S. Information Agency and head of the Voice of America, effective July 15. He became director of the USIA radio service on May 10, 1954. Under his supervision, VOA moved from New York to its expanded quarters in Washington, following a Congressional mandate to that effect.

Seeds Resigning Admiral Account

Chicago, May 22.

Russel M. Seeds agency, which several months ago inherited Admiral's television billings as an addenda to the already-held print account, has resigned the entire business. Seeds agency gave Admiral notice last week that it is resigning the account, leaving it to Admiral prez Ross Siragusa to designate the actual severance date at any time during the current calendar year so as not to upset Admiral's current ad campaign.

Seeds, which had handled Admiral for several years on the print side, took over the video account as well last spring, when it was resigned by Erwin, Wasey agency, reportedly in a hassle over commissions. Seeds, while handling the television business, had actually been farming out supervision of the Admiral commercials and reportedly had been working on a 7½% commission basis. No indication yet where the business will go. Admiral is no longer represented on the networks with a show, having dropped Bishop Fulton J. Sheen's "Life Is Worth Living" on ABC-TV after 26 weeks this season.

Weekend Trendex

NBC-TV hit a spectacular low Sunday night (20) in the Trendex-tested tint spec series, with the CBS combination of Jack Benny and Ed Sullivan more than trebling the rating of the Maurice Chevalier layout on NBC. The scorecard was a 27.6 average on CBS for the 90 minutes as opposed to NBC's 8.6. For the first half-hour, Benny outpointed Chevalier, 21.6 to 7.8. In the 8-9 hour, it was a 30.5 average for Sullivan vs. a 9.0 for Chevalier & Co. ABC's "Famous Film Festival" wasn't far behind Chevalier, with a 5.6 on the 90 minutes.

On Saturday, Perry Como topped "The Honeymooners" for the second week running and drove the 8.30 "Stage Show" to a new low. The hour average gave NBC's Como a 20.8, with "Honeymooners"-"Stage Show" averaging out to a 13.2 and ABC's "Ozark Jubilee" ironing out a 5.6 on the 8-9 average. By half-hours, Como topped Jackie Gleason at 8, 17.3 to 17.0, while it was a runaway at 8:30 with Como's 24.3 topping a dreary 9.4 for "Stage Show." Earlier "Beat the Clock" finally outpointed NBC's "Big Surprise," 12.0 to 12.1, after a several-weeks drought. "Ozark" scored a 6.5 on the 7:30-8 hour.

Stanton Doesn't Like Bricker

The battle between Sen. John W. Bricker and the networks shows every sign of developing into a personal feud between the Ohio Republican and CBS prez Frank Stanton. In his Philadelphia speech last week accepting the Parlin Award of the American Marketing Assn. for contributions to marketing, Stanton took some well-defined potshots at Sen. Bricker, referring to him as "a 20th Century King Canute, ready to tell the electronic signals that they must turn back at the edge of town."

Stanton continued, "If he is not moved in his proposals by misinformation, or by ignorance, then we shall have to guess what other motives he may have for his proposed suppression of an essential part of our national communications system." Stanton referred to a "strange spectacle" of "one of the most ardent champions of the withdrawal of government regulations of business" proposing now "to regulate the private radio and television networks—from transmitter to receiver—as public utilities. A most vigorous advocate of private enterprise, free of government supervision, would now, suddenly, strai-jacket advertisers by formulating new ground rules perhaps affecting program services, station coverage, network affiliation policies and rates. In other words, the marketing of goods and services would be forced into agonizing, artificial economic patterns.

Pat Hurley Into Bob & Ray's WINS Slot; Smith Joins Leder at WOR

Real Crazy Spectrum

Hollywood, May 22.

An increase in sunspots can be expected next year, and as a result, tv images can be expected to flicker, dissolve, or suddenly break into Spanish dialog, police broadcasts may be heard half-way around the world or not at all, and FM broadcasts may suddenly tune in on phone conversations. All these phenomena have occurred in past sunspot seizures, according to the National Geographic Society, currently researching the problem.

The Society has determined that sunspots come in 11-year cycles, and that 1957-58 will be a peak year.

ABC-TV Credo: If Ever in Doubt Use A J. Arthur Rank Film

ABC-TV is getting plenty of mileage out of the package of 104 J. Arthur Rank features it purchased last fall with which to start its "Afternoon Film Festival." Web has been using repeats of its afternoon showings for "Film Fare," a 9-10:30 summer replacement on Monday nights, and now it has scheduled the same pix for repeat runs on "The Hour Glass," a Thursday 8-9 summer slotting which starts June 21.

New series fills in during the summer for Bishop Fulton J. Sheen, who switches in the fall to Monday nights, and for "Stop the Music," which has been axed altogether. The 8-9 period is slated to be filled in the fall by Sheldon Reynolds' hourlong filmed "International Theatre," if the web can find any bankrollers for the series. "Hour Glass" kicks off with "The Lady Vanishes."

CBS, DON SHARPE GO 50-50 ON 'MR. ADAM'

CBS-TV has negotiated a coproduction deal with Don Sharpe that has turned his Ida Lupino-Howard Duff starrer, "Mr. Adam & Eve," into a Columbia property. Pilot of the series is in and the network's sales staff are beginning to move the audition around the agencies. It's a 50-50 split, reportedly, between Sharpe and the web on the ownership side.

At the same time, CBS has another pilot reel as a completely house-owned show on which it's high. It's a situation comedy starring Gail Gordon and Bob Sweeney, both out of the erstwhile "Our Miss Brooks" cast, titled "The Brothers." Pilot is also fresh out of the Coast vidfilmeries.

De Cordova Exits B&A

Hollywood, May 22.

Fred De Cordova is bowing out as producer-director of the Burns & Allen show, after three years with the vidpix series, on loanout from CBS-TV. Exiting is due to other plans the web has for De Cordova.

Producer-director leaves June 12 on a six-weeks trek to Europe and returns Aug. 1 to CBS for his next assignment.

WINS program director Bob Smith, soon after Bob & Ray ankled the station last week, quit to follow his former boss, Bob Leder, to rival WOR radio. After Smith's departure—he began as program chief of WOR last Monday (21)—WINS manager Jock Fernhead replaced him with Leo Goldman.

Leder, who moved out of the Elroy McCaw-owned indie several weeks ago for the WOR chieftancy, said Smith was hired to jazz the WOR afternoon-evening sked with music and news. Meanwhile, Fernhead and Goldman, both from McCaw's KYA in Frisco, brought deejay Pat Hurley (another KYA'er) to replace Bob & Ray in the six-day-a-week 6 to 9:30 ayem slot, beginning next Monday (28).

Team of Bob Elliot and Ray Goulding, whose WINS contract after two years still had several months to run, broke with the station to devote additional time to making commercials. Brace recently got hot via radio-and-tv pluggolas for Piel's brewery as the Messrs. Harry and Bert.

Other big gun on the WINS sked, rock 'n' roller Alan Freed, is sticking to the indie, according to Fernhead. His contract has well over a year to run on a 6:30 to 9 p.m. daily anchorage. Besides Hurley, WINS has brought in another new name. Wendy Barrie is going to do a 10:30 to 11 ayem taped stanza, thus cutting a half-hour out of Lew Fisher's hour-long session. Rest of WINS sked is stet, with Peter Roberts (who recently lost a full-blown newscast) working throughout the day in capsule news reports.

It was said originally that McCaw had moved Fernhead to N. Y. from Frisco to oversee WINS until it was sold, but over the weekend the station manager said that the McCaw-WINS affiliation was permanent. Fernhead, who noted that he has moved into steady Manhattan quarters from his Coast home, said that an offer of over $2,700,000 was turned down for the station recently. (Westinghouse previously ended negotiations for the station with a bid reportedly near $2,400,000.)

AFTRA Yanks Gobs Off Dinah TV'er, Rejecting For-Free Performance

Hollywood, May 22.

AFTRA stepped in to demand the San Diego Naval Training Base chorus—skedded to sing on Dinah Shore's Chevvy show on NBC last Thursday (17)—be paid, with the result that gobs were cancelled out.

AFTRA exec secretary Claude McCue notified the Shore show producers the union's board turned down a request for a waiver so that the chorus could appear cuffo, to plug Army and Navy recruiting.

An AFTRA spokesman explained, "we notified them we have no objection to the chorus appearing—if its members are paid—and we would not ask that they join AFTRA. However, we do not look with favor on free entertainment on a commercial show. Miss Shore's show sells Chevrolets. The more entertainment they have, the better the show, and we feel it only fair that they pay the chorus under these circumstances."

HAPPY DAYS FOR CBS RADIO

Ampex to RCA-MMM: 'No'

Now that Ampex is riding wide and handsome with $5,000,000 worth of industry acceptance as the first and thus far only magnetic tape ready tor use, Wall St. sources with a financial stake in the operation report that both RCA and Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing tried to buy a minority interest in Ampex but were turned down.

RCA, of course, is working on its own color tape process, but it isn't ready yet. It remained for the rival CBS, which put in the initial orders for Ampex, to "sneak" it into Chi some weeks back and steal the show away from the NARTB. Like CBS, which gets first crack at the machines (10 in all totalling $540,000), NBC has an order in for three units along with a number of stations throughout the country.

Ironic aspect of the Minnesota Mining bid for a minority stock ownership in the company is that some time back Ampex officials had appealed to MM for use of its material which would have given Minnesota more than a rooting interest in the future of Ampex. But Ampex was turned down.

Since CBS has been on top of the Ampex development, there have been scattered reports suggesting that board chairman Bill Paley may have an ownership stake in the company. However, sources at CBS say 't'aint so.

CBS-TV's 'Inside the News'

Bob Trout, Michael Levin Come Up With a New Type of Strip Format

In attempt to overcome the criticism of "static" news delivery on television, CBS News is cutting a kinnie next week of a new type of daily tv quarter-hour news presentation brought into the web by commentator Robert Trout and consultant Michael Levin. New show, audition on which will be cut Saturday (26), is an "inside the news" approach in which Trout and a group of associates are shown screening and discussing news items and film footage in a newsroom-copy desk setting.

Trout will function as head of the copy desk, with Ned Calmer handling the international news and E. W. Kenworthy, of the New York Times News of the Week in Review staff, covering Washington and political news. Jim McKay will handle sports, Lisa Charell will function as a reporter and Dave Dewey as a copy boy. Idea of the format is two-fold; it eliminates the static picture quality of the standard news show via the fluid action of the newsroom; it also enables greater use of commentary and analysis in the newsmen's evaluations of the stories as they "come through" the copy desk and Trout & Co. kick them around in an informal manner.

Kinnie will be somewhat offbeat in that it will run 35 minutes, even though the show is a quarter-hour. Audition will embrace a complete presentation of the problems of newscasting under present formulae, plus a sample showing of the new format and additional angles on the informal coverage. Levin, now a consultant to agencies and advertisers after a longtime stint as radio-tv veep at Erwin, Wasey, will direct the show.

Pat Buttram As Autry Successor

Wrigley gum, which called it quits with Gene Autry last week after 16 years with the cowboy on CBS Radio, is salvaging at least part of the show in the person of Pat Buttram, comic on the series. Wrigley has signed Buttram to an exclusive deal, with the comic to star in a replacement show for the Autry segment. Show, tentatively titled "The Pat Buttram Show," is being whipped into shape on the Coast by CBS, Wrigley and the Ruthrauff & Ryan agency and should be ready to step into Autry's Sunday at 6 slot in about three weeks.

Meanwhile, CBS has installed another new Coast - originating series into the Sunday time. "O'Hara," an adventure series about a foreign correspondent which stars Jack Moyles, is being scripted by Les Crutchfield and produced and directed by William N. Robson.

Norman Frank Producing Summer Entry for Como

Norman Frank, one of the alternating producers on NBC-TV's "Wide Wide World," has been set for a change of pace over the summer. He'll produce the replacement show for Perry Como, which will comprise a musical-variety hour headed up by three different singers. Julius LaRosa fronts the show for four weeks, Patti Page for four and Tony Bennett for five, each backed by supporting acts.

New series starts June 16, with Grey Lockwood continuing as director for the first six shows. Carl Hoff will conduct, and a writing staff is still to be chosen.

ABC-TV Finalizes Its Spec Pattern; Client Discounts

ABC-TV has finally gotten squared away on its schedule of spectaculars for next season and is offering the shows under a sales pattern that will give current ABC clients an added break on discounts. Schedule calls for all but three of the eight shows to be budgeted at $100,000 each, with the two Metopera specials going at $130,000 apiece and "By Jupiter" set for a $150,000 ride. Time is figured at about $63,000 for the five hour specials and $82,000 for the above-named 90-minute displays.

Web will slot the one-shots at different times and different nights of the week, starting off Nov. 14, a Wednesday, with "Ballet Ballads" at 8:30-9:30. Metopera presentations will go Sundays at 7:30-9, one Dec. 9, the other April 21. "The General's Other Son," another of six Theatre Guild offerings, goes Tuesday, Jan 8, at 7:30-8:30, while "The Young and the Beautiful" is set for Feb 7 (Thursday at 8-9, and "Take a Giant Step" goes Friday, March 8, at 8-9. "By Jupiter," probably with Ray Bolger, goes in Sunday, April 14, a week before the

Jergen's Verbal Okay On Steve Allen Show

Jergen's Lotion, which is currently in the Sunday night "NBC Comedy Hour," looks to be a candidate for the Steve Allen entry which goes into the time opposite Ed Sullivan June 24. Jergen's has given NBC verbal notice that it will stay on with the Allen segment with a one-third sponsorship of the show.

COLGATE SIPHONS TV COIN FOR AM

When a major television sponsor trims his daytime tv sails to the tune of several million dollars, as happened when Colgate announced last week that it was dropping its three NBC-TV afternoon entries, in order to siphon a major chunk of the coin into daytime network radio—that's about as upbeat as you can get in a downgraded radio era.

The beneficiary is CBS Radio. And just when the network's daytime soap opera formula seemed destined to encounter its darkest moment, what with Procter & Gamble deciding to scram out of the weepers on July 1, along comes Colgate with a fat $1,500,000 contract (and with likelihood that it'll go to $2,000,000) to grab up 10 of the seven-and-a-half-minute daytime soaper units per week.

As a topper P&G has reversed itself on dumping daytime radio entirely and has now notified CBS that it's buying two five-minute news strips Monday-thru-Friday to retain its daytime audience franchise. But even more to the point is the possibility of P&G reembracing the soaper pattern once it has put its tv program house in order. (Overboard nighttime tv budget cued the P&G daytime radio cutback.)

If there's a triumphant tempo to the enthusiasm abounding among the CBS Radio high brass it stems less from the fact that Colgate is buying $1,500,000 worth of soap operas than from the reasons underlying this reaffirmation of daytime network radio. For with some newly-documented Nielsen data, Colgate chimed in with a "me, too" acceptance of the CBS-Nielsen conviction that if you want to properly supplement nighttime tv during the daytime and extend the reach of your total advertising, you gotta buy radio because tv is concentrated in such a smaller number of homes. This is the essence of the new "Forward March" campaign.

In the wake of the daytime AM desertions, CBS Radio prexy Arthur Hull Hayes gambled on retaining the same program patterns, even though it meant playing sustaining time. The payoff has come in the Nielsen findings. CBS daytime ratings are up 8% over last year. And it's a payoff that has since brought back into the CBS daytime fold such spenders as Swift, Standard Brands, Bristol-Myers, Norwich, General Foods (with a new summer campaign on the way) plus Levers' falling in love all over again with "Aunt Jenny."

CBS figures this may be that "corner" they've been talking about rounding.

White-Collarites Feel CBS Is Loaded With $$ And Should Hike Wages

Hollywood, May 22.

CBS, which is doing "five times as well" as the motion picture industry financially, should pay its office employes more than prevailing rates, which generally run 20 to 40% below studio scales. So stated Max Krug, biz agent of Office Employes International Union Local 174, which has a labor contract with the net here.

Krug sent a wire to CBS hq in N. Y. last week, pointing to net's recently - reported first - quarter earnings, and to recent bulletin of the U. S. Labor Dept. statistics bureau. The bulletin shows that CBS is paying most of its office workers considerably below the local average here and, in view of Columbia's earnings, negotiations should be reopened immediately on wages, Krug declared.

Reply last week referred the matter to H. R. Guillotte, net's v.p. in charge of radio operations here. However, Krug stated that he has yet to hear from Guillotte.

Office workers' current pact runs until next April.

NBC-TV's Mixed Up Fall Picture Is Finally Brought Into Focus (Subject to 24-Hours Change)

PLYMOUTH'S DETOUR

Auto Company's Change of Heart Leaves NBC Holding Spec Bag

NBC board chairman Pat Weaver left Detroit last week with an order from Plymouth bringing the auto company into the network's spec family. It was a tall order, too, whereby Plymouth would join with RCA in co-sponsorship of the Monday night "Producers' Showcase" one-a-month series, as well as co-sponsoring (with RCA-Whirlpool) Friday night spec attractions that will show up for the first time in the fall.

But within 24 hours of his arrival back in New York, Weaver got the word from the factotums in charge of the automaker's finances—there will be no Plymouth identity with the two-spec spread. The same old story: cutbacks because of reduced sales.

NBC's still looking for a sponsor.

Still Some Iffy Segs On NBC-TV Daytime Roster

While setting its nighttime 1956-57 house in order (see separate story), NBC-TV is in the throes of kicking around the daytime prospectus. The weekend lineup is in fair shape at this stage of the game, but the same cannot be said of the weekdays.

The projected sked is okay up to 10 o'clock, with the brace of "Today" and "Ding Dong School" stanzas. But 10:30 is being looked over—that's the Ernie Kovacs spot. "Home" show sticks at 11, but the noontime entry for Tennessee Ernie Ford (who goes to 2:30 and will also have a night program) would be Ralph Edwards' "It Could Be You"—unless NBC decides to slot it at 12:30 in the axed "Feather Your Nest" groove. In either case, here's a half-hour open.

The Ernie Ford 2:30 segue will be this season's fixture, "Matinee Theatre" at 3, but may start instead at 3:15—in which case "A Date With Life" would tee off at 4:15, or 15 minutes later than currently. In such an eventuality, what with "Modern Romances" also cut out from under (by Colgate), "Queen for a Day" would pick up the marbles at 4:15 and ride to the 5 o'clock mark. At the latter hour (vacated by Pinky Lee), the network would spot "I Married Joan" reruns and consider replays of two other castoffs, "Dear Phoebe" and "Its a Great Life," after the "Joan" reruns are played off.

Cunningham & Walsh Gives Nod to Mahoney

Edward H. Mahoney has moved into Cunningham & Walsh as v.p. in charge of radio-tv on June 1. Appointment of Mahoney, presently v.p. in charge of tv commercial production at Benton & Bowles, ends a weeks-long search for a successor to John Sheehan, who quit the post suddenly a couple of months back.

Mahoney has been at Benton & Bowles for the past seven years, doubling over from his commercial production chores to the additional post of exec producer in charge of all Procter & Gamble shows handled by the agency.

NBC might well label it "Sweet Thursday" since that's the only night of the television week with no "iffy" status as far as Sarnoff & Co.'s 1956-57 agenda is concerned, though a sponsor is yet to rear its pretty noggin for the 7:45 "News Caravan." Sunday is virtually firmed up in both entries and underwriters; there's a reverse on the Thursday lineup, with a bankroller (General Foods) on tap for 7 o'clock Sunday but no format worked out in the kickout of "It's a Great Life."

With the picture changing almost every 24 hours, here's how the fall schedule stood as of last week:

Sunday—General Foods has the 7 o'clock time, Reynolds Metals goes with "Circus Boy," Steve Allen (starting next month) will take his stand vs. Ed Sullivan, the Goodyear-Alcoa dramatics and Loretta Young stanzas (Procter & Gamble) stay put, and "National Bowling Champions" will probably ditto under General Cigar and P&G.

Monday—It's Gordon MacRae for Lever, the news quarter, a coupling of "Sir Lancelot" (for Whitehall Pharmacal and Lever) and Max Liebman's Buddy Hackett-starring series, "Stanley" (for Pall Mall and Helene Curtis), taking up the hour vacated by Sid Caesar in his switch to Saturday; "Medic" looks to be dropped at 9, with neither P&G nor General Electric firmed; "Robert Montgomery Presents," with Schick renewed but Johnson's waxworks only a possibility to resume.

Bolger's 16 Workouts

Tuesday—7:30 is not yet resolved, with Dinah Shore ankling that spot in favor of hanging on to the Thursday segment. Snooky Lanson of "Hit Parade" will summer it for three weeks on both days (six shows) and remain thereafter in the Thursday slot until Miss Shore's return. "News Caravan" gets Remington Rand aboard starting July 3. At historic 8 to 9, Ray Bolger will do 16 workouts in "Washington Square" and the balance goes to the expanded Chevrolet takeover with Dinah Shore pencilled in for eight to 10 outings and Bob Hope for six to eight, with NBC eyeing Martin and Lewis for four shows, though the comedy team is not inked.

Studebaker Axing 'Reader's Digest'

Studebaker-Packard Corp. has called it quits on its only network television entry, the "TV Reader's Digest" series, reflecting once more the general automotive cutback in the tv sweepstakes. For S-P, it's the end of a year and a half with "Digest," it having begun the show in January of 1955 on ABC-TV and stuck with it till now. Show itself has already been axed, but the automaker hasn't indicated what it will do with its Monday at 8 time slot on ABC—possibly an oversight in the agency shift from Ruthrauff & Ryan to Benton & Bowles. It has until July, however, to make up its mind on the time slot.

Should it relinquish the time, as is considered likely, ABC will be free to move Danny Thomas' "Make Room for Daddy" into the slot. Web has long felt that the Thomas show, already ousted from its Tuesday at 9 slot by General Electric, would do far better rating-wise in an earlier slot and considers the Monday at 8 post a natural for the show. While there are no sponsors signed to replace Dodge and Pall Mall on the Thomas segment, ABC reports substantial interest from a number of prospective buyers.

AFTRA Sets Up 'Coalition' Slate In Opposition to 'Middle-of-Roaders'

A slate of "coalition" candidates has entered the June referendum to seat 12 N. Y. thesps on the national board of American Federation of Television & Radio Artists. Group, which opposes a like number of "middle-of-the-roaders," is coming out on an official platform broaching "no outside interference" with the union's functions. Members of the "coalition" slate say that the statement will be directed against AWARE Inc. and any other group that attemps interference, though AWARE's name is not appearing in the official release.

Three AFTRAns on the "coalition" ticket were on the "middle-of-the-road" slate victories in last December's N. Y. board elections. Dick Stark, Cliff Norton and Luis Van Rooten ran as "middle-of-roaders" in downing N. Y. board's largely pro-AWARE incumbents. However, there was a flareup at a recent membership meeting in which Stark took exception to alleged caucuses being held by other members of the winning faction, and thereafter withdrew his support. Norton sided with him at the open meeting about what have since been described as "infractions in the use of Robert's Rules."

The three men are joined on the "coalition" slate by Nelson Case, probable leader, and a past AFTRA prexy, Virginia Payne. Also on the slate are: Jackson Beck, Alan Bunce, Clayton (Bud) Collyer, Al Hodge, Conrad Nagel, Beatrice Kraft and Ray Heatherton, among whom are some of those who sided with the deposed N. Y. board.

A "coalitionite" described the group's platform as containing the most "definitive" and "unique" anti-AWARE slate to date. "Middle-of-road" had an anti-AWARE statement integrated in its own platform last year, and will likely repeat for the national board sweepstakes. He said the "coalition" had as many people "right of center" as "left of center." Though other candidates mentioned the "anti-AWARE" measure, one of the "coalition" denied any knowledge of it.

"Middle-of-road" candidates to fill the 12 spots that the N. Y. membership elects to the national board for the July conclave are: Faye Emerson, William Prince, John Henry Faulk, Arthur Seelen, Craig Timberlake, Dennis Patrick, Betty Garde, Stan Burns, Cy Harrice, Helena Seroy, Ronny Graham and one other.

St. Paul, May 22.

Radio station WCOW here changed its call letters to WISK. Owners claim to have picked the letters for no other reason than it's a word, so people can refer to it easily, and to have thought of it long before a detergent by that name came on the market.

Dropping the COW from their name, they have also dropped the cowboy and country platters. Four out of five tunes played now are standards by orchestras such as Glenn Miller, Lawrence Welk, Guy Lombardo, etc. The fifth will be a current hit.

WISK will keep in step with the money giveaway trend of Twin Cities radio stations, which has become gag material here.

Example—"This is the only place where listeners get paid more than the station executives." WISK disk jockeys will stand on street corners handing out money —from $1 to $20 bills—to see what size crowds they can gather.

The Tedesco family of St. Paul, WISK's owners, transferred the WCOW letters to their station in Sparta, Wis., appropriate for that state's dairyland.

The Tedescos, by the way, seem to go in for stations which sound like soaps. In addition to WISK, they have KDUZ at Hutchinson, Minn.

Kansas City — Public awards have been given to two staff members at KCMO and KCMO-TV recently. Bill Yearout was cited by B'nai B'rith of Kansas City as "Man of the Year," and Harold Ensley received a citation awarded by the Missouri State Conservation Commission.

SOME FANCY SWIFT COIN FOR LINKLETTER

Fortunes of CBS-TV's daytime programs continue to fluctuate on the sponsor end, with one bankroller ducking Garry Moore this week but another picking up a 52-weeks-firm segment of the Art Linkletter "House Party," and on a simulcast basis at that. Axing its Tuesday quarter-hour on Moore is Kellogg Co., but moving in on "House Party" both on the radio and tv ends is Swift & Co. for a quarter-hour Wednesdays.

For Swift, the buy marks a return to CBS Radio after 19 years. It had Ed Murrow's newscast on the Pacific web in 1954 and 1955, but its last full-network sponsorship on CBS was in 1937 with the "Sunbrite Junior Nurse Corps," having preceded that one with Olsen & Johnson and the "Happy-Go-Lucky Hour." It's been around on CBS-TV with somewhat more frequency, however.

Craven Gets Nod As FCC Member

Washington, May 22.

As expected, T. A. M. (Tam) Craven, Washington consulting engineer, was nominated last week by President Eisenhower to be a member of the FCC to succeed Comr. Edward Webster, whose term expires June 30.

The White House made public a letter from Webster submitting his resignation. Webster did not actively seek reappointment but there were indications the Democratically-controlled Senate would have opposed confirmation of anyone but a Democrat. Webster is an Independent in politics. Craven is a Democrat.

Craven's appointment, if confirmed, will change the composition of the Commission to four Republicans and three Democrats. He is the fifth member to be appointed by President Eisenhower. The others were Chairman George C. McConnaughey, John C. Doerfer and Robert E. Lee, all Republicans, and Richard Mack, Democrat.

Craven, 63, is regarded as a conservative in regulatory philosophy. As a member of the FCC from 1937 to 1944 he was a strong dissenter to the adoption of the Chain Broadcasting Rules in 1941.

Webster, 67, also an engineer, has had nearly 50 years in government service and is eligible for retirement with a substantial stipend. In view of his vast experience, however, it is expected that his services will be sought by various firms which use radio.

MARTIN & LEWIS SET FOR WABD TELETHON

Jerry Lewis, who was released over the weekend from L. A.'s Mount Sinai hosptial after a heart checkup, and partner Dean Martin will co-emcee the muscular dystrophy telethon on WABD June 29-30. Just before the show the team will fly east to fill the commitment, made before Lewis became ill last week.

Stanza, originally planned as a 48-hour affair, will run from 10 p.m. Friday (29) through approximately 10 p.m. Saturday via the DuMont o&o. Telethon coin will go to building the Muscle Research Center in Manhattan.

CROSS & SHEAR TO KOVACS

Perry Cross and Barry Shear have been assigned by NBC-TV as producer and director of the Ernie Kovacs morning cross-the-boarder. Duo will also bring in Kovacs' summer pinchhit show for "Caesar's Hour" starting July 2.

For Cross, 29, it's his first major production chore. He started with NBC as a guide 10 years ago.

Prestone's Election Buy

Prestone Anti-Freeze division of National Carbon Corp. has bought the local election coverage on NBC-TV flagship station WRCA-TV, N. Y.

Coverage comprises two five-minute local cutins hourly between 9 p.m. and 1 a.m. on Nov. 6, with the station carrying the post 1 a.m. cutins sustaining if the state and city results aren't in by then.

Marquand Picks Gilroy For His 'Wyllis Wade' Adaptation for Video

Teleplaywrights out of the Blanche Gaines writers' rep office won't be having much of a vacation during the summer, due in large measure to a number of assignments on new shows for the 1956-57 sweepstakes, plus some cinema chores. One of the most unusual setups and a plum to boot revolves around Frank Gilroy, one of the crackerjacks in the Gaines stable. Gilroy is pacted to adapt "Sincerely, Wyllis Wade," last season's bestseller novel by J. P. Marquand, for the upcoming CBS-TV "Playhouse 90" skein primed as a major dramatic entry in the hour and a half groove Thursday nights back to back with the "Climax" hour.

Choice of Gilroy was made by Marquand himself as result of latter's kine viewing of Gilroy's adaptation of the novelist's "Beginning Now" which kicked off the "Matinee Theatre" tinted dramatic daytimer on NBC-TV last autumn. At one time Gore Vidal, tv playwright and scenarist under contract to Metro, was reported readying a script of "Wyllis," and whether this cuts Vidal out on a screen version is moot.

Gilroy, whose "Last Notch" on "U. S. Steel Hour" (then ABC-TV) was grabbed by Metro (Russell Rouse-Clarence Green) and is now shooting under title of "The Fastest Gun Alive," is also finishing the screenplay of a 60-minute pilot tentatively tagged "The Jazz Man" for forthcoming Louis De Rochemont-NBC "What Is a Man?" series.

Also out of Mrs. Gaines' tv-to-Hollywood treadmill, Jerome Ross is about to leave for the Coast to start work on screenplaying "Doll Face" for Universal—from his tv opus brought in by Herbert Brodkin on NBC's "Alcoa Hour" earlier this season.

Ross, incidentally, along with stablemate George Lowther, is also one of the writers engaged for scripts on Ziv's "West Point" vidpix series headed for Friday night at 8 on CBS-TV next season. Installments are being shot at West Point.

James Elward, discovered by Maeve Southgate, in charge of new writers at the Gaines office, has been notified that his "Paper Foxhole," GI comedy given on "Kraft TV Theatre" in April, is one of the nominees of the current quarter for the sponsor's $50,000 prize jackpot for tv playwrights.

'CONSPIRACY OF SILENCE'

Stations In Blackout to Mark Radio Week Observance

Minneapolis, May 22.

Group of northern Minnesota audio stations blanketed their area in complete audio silence for an entire hour, from 7:30 to 8:30 a.m. Monday on National Radio Week.

It was a unique method to make the area's residents aware of the occasion and what it would mean in their daily lives to be deprived of radio services and programs and how much these latter mean in the people's lives.

Participating in the "conspiracy of silence" were all three stations at Duluth, Minn., and its sister city, Superior, Wis., and the one at nearby Clouquet, Minn.

Results were that many people thought their radio sets were broken. Others had their car radios checked on their way to work. Some citizens overslept and were late to work because their clock radios didn't awaken them. And there was a lot of publicity and word-of-mouth talk created for National Radio Week.

A Jet-Propelled Dedication

Trenton, N. J., May 22.

A thermit bomb reaction—a salute by eight jets—and a big gun salute from the National Guard will signal the formal opening of the new WTTM building, Thursday (24) at noon. At the conclusion of the official dedication ceremony, the ribbon stretched in front of the building will be cut by a stream of molten iron touched off by a specially designed thermit bomb reaction. This device was designed for the ceremony by nuclear scientist Prof. Herbert M. Alyea of Princeton U.

As the fiery stream of molten iron slices through the ribbon, eight F-86-D jet aircraft from McGuire air base will swoop over the scene. The New Jersey National Guard will have a tank and a large gun outside the building all day. As the ribbon is cut the National Guard will fire a salute. The 65-piece Trenton Central High School Band will play before and after the official dedication. A color guard from McGuire base will also be in attendance.

Officials at the dedication ceremony will include Herbert E. Evans, v.p. of Peoples Broadcasting Co. (owners of WTTM); James West, member of the board of Nationwide Insurance and chairman of the board of Peoples Broadcasting Co.; Murray D. Lincoln, president of Nationwide Insurance Co., and president of CARE, Inc.; FCC Commissioner Rosel Hyde; Fred E. Walker, general manager of WTTM; Harold Fellows, pres., NARTB, and others.

Vieracker Upped in Chi

Chicago, May 22.

Chi ABC veep Sterling (Red) Quinlan is upping Mathew Vieracker, his longtime associate and currently the web's central division treasurer, to the general manager post at WBKB. Manny Fingerhut, now Vieracker's assistant, will move up as central division comptroller.

Vieracker joined WBKB in '48 after serving a hitch with the Balaban & Katz theatre chain which at that time owned the pioneer vidstation.

Kintner Foresees Nothing But Good

Chicago, May 22.

Robert Kintner, reflecting the bullishness in the ABC camp, forecast the television network will have all its prime nighttime hours sold out next fall and warned the radio competition that the ABC AM arm is shooting for the No. 1 rating and revenue spot within the next two years. He spoke before the Broadcasting Advertising Club.

Kintner made reference to the current "monopoly" charges being leveled at the networks by indie stations and program producers. He said there'll always be a place on ABC-TV for outside shows, whether they're produced by packagers, talent or ad agencies. However, he cautioned that the suppliers of non-network owned programs have an obligation to come up with shows that'll carry their share of the rating load. He pointed out that no tele network is eager to carry an outside package that "depressed" the ratings of the fore and aft shows.

Prexy also got in a pitch for an all-industry "non-partisan" motivation research project to furnish the broadcast media with some meaningful data as to the effectiveness of specific programs and commercials.

WWJ's 46% HIKE IN RADIO BILLINGS

Detroit, May 22.

WWJ billings for the first four months of 1956 were 46% ahead of the same period last year, it was announced by Robert J. McIntosh, sales manager of the Detroit News station.

"The increase in billings has been on a steady increase since the fall of 1954," McIntosh stated. "Every month billings have increased over the same month of the preceding year.

"Radio is healthier today than at any time in its entire history. This whole new rush to radio is no miracle. Broadcasters are better qualified to do a real selling job for the advertiser and the advertiser knows this. He is getting real value at a low cost per thousand."

KFOX's 536G Sale

Los Angeles, May 22.

Sale of radio station KFOX in Long Beach for $536,000 has been consummated, with the Hogan Broadcasting Corp. taking possession from Dr. John B. and W. T. McDonald after FCC approval.

McConnaughey Tips Action Due On Allocations

Washington, May 22.

A rather guarded commitment that the FCC will take some action on the allocation problem in the immediate future was made by Commission Chairman George C. McConnauhey last week.

In a letter to Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.) of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, McConnaughey expressed confidence the agency "will be able to take the next step in our proceeding within the next few weeks." The Commission, he added, "will not be able to make final allocation changes at this stage in the proceeding, but we will be in a position to issue a proposal for specific allocation changes, as well as suggestions contemplating longer-range solutions to the tv problem."

McConnaughey's letter was prompted by a request from Magnuson for an interpretation of the FCC Chairman's suggestion at the NARTB convention in April of a "crash research" program to provide "a sound technical basis for making a long-term decision on the merits of UHF." Magnuson said that the Committee has been receiving "tremendous" correspondence urging it to instruct the Commission to take "some affirmative action" not later than June 1. "It would seem to me," he said, "that the Commission could announce its preliminary conclusions before that date and then institute whatever may be necessary to implement these policies."

McConnaughey explained that in urging a crash program he did not

'Today' Steals Leonard's Riesel Exclusive After Page 1 'Variety' Tipoff

An alert NBC-TV exec who reads his tradepapers promptly and carefully spoiled an "exclusive" tv interview for CBS-TV last week by getting the daily "Today" cameras into St. Clare's Hospital and blinded labor columnist Victor Riesel two days before Bill Leonard's weekly "Eye on New York" interview scheduled with Riesel.

Leonard had been negotiating with Al Levy, Riesel's associate, and Riesel himself, for an exclusive interview on Sunday (20), this having been promised if the medics and hospital okayed it. VARIETY ran an exclusive front pager on it last Wednesday (16). NBC exploitation chief Al Rylander, spotted it, and being a longtime friend of Riesel's, called him and said, "How about us?" Riesel okayed a "Today" pickup for Friday (18), with Frank Blair doing the interview, and then notified Leonard that his pickup would be okay with the medics too.

WCBS-TV, which produces "Eye" for a feed to some 30-odd CBS-TV stations, was sore about what it considered a "gentleman's agreement for an exclusive. Leonard himself said he was "sorry," but "not sore—I've got too much to do to waste time being sore. Anyway, I did the show, even without the exclusivity, because I felt I could do a better job of it."

TV WEBS DON 'SUNDAY BEST'

He Just Wants a Network

Hollywood, May 22.

Oscar Levant has quit the "Words and Music" show on KNXT here "because I've become silently a controversial figure." Claiming "I've made more quotable remarks than anybody on TV" Levant refused to listen to producers Bart Ross and Frank Danzig who asked him to reconsider.

Levant, disappointed because show didn't go network, left the door open for his return if it grabs a web sponsor. "My comments are very funny, but there's nothing in it for me except self-humiliation. I don't want to be dangled in front of Madison Avenue. I can point to my work with pride and a fervent degree of shame," he said.

Levant has quit in the past and producers pressured him up to just before showtime to return, but he refused and wasn't on Saturday night.

'Rating Crazy' Networks Hurting Cause of Good Music, Sez Merrill

Television has hurt, rather than helped, the cause of good music in America, in the opinion of Metopera tenor Robert Merrill. Easily the most prolific television guester in the classical music ranks, Merrill nonetheless believes that television has lived up neither to its obligations nor its potential in giving the American public a proper share of good music.

"In the peak days of radio," Merrill observes, "nearly 50% of the music on the networks was of the classical or semi-classical variety. Now it's only about 15%, about 85% Tin Pan Alley stuff used to background a variety act." There's some excellent music on tv—the NBC Opera, "Voice of Firestone" —but not nearly enough of it, Merrill avers.

Tenor takes the outspoken position that the networks are "rating crazy" and the only reason they don't program more classical music is "that they're afraid the competing network won't do the same thing and that it will come up with a higher rating than the music show." But the webs are ducking their basic responsibility to the public in this regard, he states.

Classical music is admittedly difficult to program in the visual medium, Merrill acknowledges, "but the networks don't even want to program it. First there's got to be the desire; if they really want to do it, they can find a way. But they are afraid; it's fear of what the other guy is going to do, fear that the rating will be too low."

Merrill can't quite see the reasons for this fear. He recalls the time on the Coast when a film producer, talking about a proposed biopic of Enrico Caruso, asked "where's the audience?" Three years later, "The Great Caruso" was a sock grosser, and in the

SAG, AFTRA Talk, Nothing Happens

Hollywood, May 22.

Two days of conferences between the Screen Actors Guild and the American Federation of Tv and Radio Artists broke up last week, with the talks expected to resume in N. Y. sometime next month. Joint statement issued by both unions confined itself to saying that "mutual problems, including . . . electronic tape," were discussed. However, neither side would comment on whether the topic of a possible one-card tv performers union, which N. Y. AFTRA is plugging, came up during the discussions.

Sitting in for SAG were prexy Walter Pidgeon, 2nd v.p. Dana Andrews, treasurer George Chandler, national exec secretary John L. Dales Jr., tv administrator Kenneth Thomson, and William Berger and Herman Gray.

Repping AFTRA were prexy Frank Nelson, national exec secretary Don Conaway, Ken Carpenter, Conrad Nagel, Henry Jaffe, David Ziskind and Hollywood exec secretary Claude McCue. Following meet, Conaway and McCue left for S. F. AFTRA membership meeting.

More 'Queen' Coin

Philadelphia, May 22.

Deputy U. S. marshals served subpoenas on 10 radio stations in this city, as the Federal Government launched a grand jury investigation of advertising schedules. The subpoenas, issued at the orders of the anti-trust division of the Department of Justice, directed the stations to produce records before the grand jury on June 4.

The U. S. Attorney General's office here said the investigation involves "price maintenance showing no deviation from set scheduled rates." The spokesman said the probe was "not to be confused with price fixing"; but declined to amplify the remark. All inquiries here were referred to the Department of Justice in Washington.

The stations were ordered to produce all documents which relate to: (1) Efforts to fix established, maintain or adhere to scheduled advertising rates. (2) Change or alter schedules at a fixed or given period of time. (3) Adopt a standard policy regarding agency recognition. (4) Adopt a standard contract for broadcasting political programs or advertisements. (5) Adopt and use standard forms of advertising contracts or agreements. (6) Fix or adopt standard salaries for talent or employee. (7) Formulate and use standard policies or procedure for radio campaigns of major department stores, chain stores and other local advertisers. (8) Adopt and use uniform standards for broadcasts. (9) File rate information, copies of avertising or broadcasting contracts with any person, association or other central location or office.

Stations subpoenaed include WIP, WIBG, WRCV, WJMJ, WPEN, WCAU, WFLN, WHAT, WTEL and WFIL.

Collingwood's TV'er, Pic

CBS commentator Charles Collingwood is coming up with a two-ply chore embracing tv and a theatrical film. Collingwood will be the pivotman for Columbia's initial daytime tv news session starting next Monday (28) in the cross-board 1 to 1:10 slot. It's a co-op stanza to be followed by the Frank Cooper-packaged "Stand Up & Be Counted" to the 1:30 mark.

Collingwood is also doing the preface and intros for the Sam Goldwyn Jr. pic, "The Shark Fighters."

NBC, CBS DISH UP A SOUFFLE

NBC and CBS will don their "Sunday best" next fall in a spectacular array of public service programming that will bring the best and most expensive projects each web has yet uncovered into full-scale collision. If there's a "damn the cost" aura about the schemes, it stems from the fact that more than ever institutional advertisers have become intrigued with the goodwill assets of introspectaculars and from the "best foot forward approach" masterminded by the network brass for the benefit of monopoly-conscious Washington.

Indicative of the manner in which the networks are prepared to outdo each other is the fact that their most vaunted properties —CBS' "See It Now" and NBC's "Wide Wide World" and "Project 20" telementaries—will probably come into fullscale rivalry on Sunday afternoons. The Ed Murrow-Fred Friendly introspecs move into the Sunday 5-6 period (sometimes to 6:30) on a first-Sunday-of-every-month basis. "Wide Wide World" remains in its 4-5:30 berth on alternate Sundays while the telementaries (11 of them, compared with 10 "See It Now" outings) will likely go into the 4:30-5:30 slot once a month.

Nor is the Sunday souffle limited to the afternoon, though that looks like the most intriguing aspect. NBC will shoot the dramatic jackpot against "Omnibus" on ABC-TV in the 9-10:30 slot with Hallmark's "Hall of Fame" pcn-

11 Telementaries On NBC Sun. Sked

NBC's full hour telementaries, long in the works, will be ready for unfurling next season as a Sunday entry rotating with the 90-minute "Wide Wide World" and other house packages.

The "reality" film shows, hopping aboard such subjects as racial segregation, education, nuclear and other sciences, and tackling the economic and political setups of several "big power" countries, will come out of the respective blueprint labs of NBC producers. Among them are "WWW" chief Barry Wood, who has left for Europe on a kinnie jaunt, "Byline" and "Background" producer Ted Mills, public affairs exec producer Ben Park, USSR "expert" Bob Graff, and others. Altogether, 11 projects are headed for display, in a probable 4:30-5:30 slotting. Film has been or is being shot in various parts of the world, notably in Russia, France, South America and the U. S.

NBC 'Monitor' Packages Bob & Ray Capsules; 8G for 13-Week Run

NBC Radio is extending its capsule-selling operation to include a new weekend "Bob & Ray" package offering of 10 five-minute shows on "Monitor" for a package price of $8,000 commissionable over a minimum 13-week span. Package features six of the comedians' segments on Saturdays and four on Sundays, each following the local news breaks.

Web is pushing the "personal sell" of the team via the success of their audio contrbution to the Piel Beer "Bert & Harry" video commercials, and is selling the five-minute shows on the basis of a 75 seconds of commercial time per segment. Web figures that on the basis of current Nielsens (1.4 average audience), they can deliver a total of over 12,000,000 home impressions a week at a cost-per-thousand of 67c.

CBS Winds Up With $11,000,000 In Gleason 60-Min. Billings And Some of TV's Most Happy Fellas

Vegas Buys TV Time

Hollywood, May 22.

Las Vegas hotels are beginning to use local tv to promote the desert city's spas in this rich market. Last Sunday, KTLA (TV), here, carried the annual "Helldorado" parade, with the Sahara picking up the tab.

Event is the second to be telecast hereabouts, with the Desert Inn's annual golf tourney getting coverage three weeks back, also on KTLA. At that event, though, Apple Valley Inn, Calif. resort enroute to Vegas, bankrolled.

The cross-client currents, intrigue and manipulating that backgrounds the finalization of the on-again-off-again plans whereby Jackie Gleason returns to his full hour live format in the fall adds up to one of the neatest tv tricks of the year. The end result is that CBS-TV, after weeks of headaches and indecisions, winds up with $11,000,000 in two-sponsor tv billings for the Saturday 8 to 9 stretch, with the network, Gleason and all the clients involved, including the adjacency periods, a bunch of most happy fellas.

Buick, no matter what happened, was dead set against continued sponsorship and held CBS to its verbal agreement to release the auto company from its still-existing one-year firm contract on "Honeymooners." That meant CBS scrounging around for a whole new set of sponsors for Gleason's return to the full hour fold.

The major bottleneck was Nestle, which had a hold on the 8:30 to 9 period (following "Honeymooners"), but refused to join in bankrolling the new Gleason live showcase. It had already bought a new Gale Storm filmed situation comedy, which still needed CBS' approval. Nestle agreed to preempt 8:30 to 9 to allow for the full hour Gleason show if it could have the adjacent 9 to 9:30 period.

That's where Old Gold, with a firm hold on 9 to 9:30, along with co-sponsor Bulova, came into the picture. And that's where McCann-Erickson, representing Bulova and half of the Nestle billings, and Lennen & Newell, on behalf of Old Gold, came into the picture. And that's where the action started.

Sparked by McCann-Erickson's Terry Clyne and Lennen & Newell's Nick Keesley, a happy ending was written into the Gleason saga when Old Gold, turning over 9 to 9:30 to Nestle for the Gale Storm show (and CBS' approval of the show) willingly hiked its budget by $3,000,000 to accept co-sponsorship of the Gleason show. Clyne induced Bulova to fatten its budget to the same degree and join with OG in picking up the Gleason tab. The two clients will be paying $5,500,000 each in time and talent for the new hour display. Nestle is happy, Bulova is happy, Old Gold is happy, Gleason and CBS are happy, and the network has finally firmed up one of the major stalemates in crystallizing the new season's plans.

Carson & Cotten In Back-to-Back NBC Fri. Slots

Jack Carson is the star and P. Lorillard and Toni the sponsors of the 8:30 Friday night slot earmarked by Lorillard for next season's entry on NBC-TV. "Life of Riley," long backed by Gulf Oil, exits that slot to go up ahead at 8 o'clock, but with Gulf sponsorship uncertain in the switcheroo. Carson comedy series is tagged "Johnny Came Lately." Marie Wilson was in the pilot, but since she's now a CBS contractee, she won't appear in the regular run.

Carson stanza will be in the middle of the network's Friday reshuffle of which the one-a-month centerpiece will be 8:30 to 10 specs rotating Max Liebman, Tony Miner and Fred Coe as the production chieftains. Already being listed as cosponsors of the 90-minuters (10 in all) are house clients, RCA and Whirlpool, latter owned by RCA. A second underwriter would be prowled by the web.

Segue to Carson will be Campbell Soups' shift from its current "Star Stage" to a Joseph Cotten-hosted series labeled "On Trial." This was "sneaked" last Friday (18) in Campbell's 9:30 slot. The 9 o'clock period now rides with "Big Story" which appears to be headed for a half-hour later on the '56-'57 agenda, but with no commitment yet from American Tobacco and Simoniz on continuing with the newspaper-slanted series.

'VALIANT LADY' AGAIN SRO AS SB BUYS IN

Standard Brands has moved into the Monday segment of "Valiant Lady," the CBS-TV soap, on a firm 52-weeker, thus restoring the SRO status that existed before Scott Paper ankled the same segment of the show. Lincup now has Standard Brands, Wesson, General Mills and Toni on the Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample produced package.

To balm the Scott departure even more, the new order came out of J. Walter Thompson, same agency that cancelled the show on behalf of Scott.

ABC RADIO UPS HARRIS

Leslie A. Harris has been upped to eastern sales manager of ABC Radio. He succeeds Stewart Barthelmess, who last week was shifted to general manager of the New York flagship, WABC, replacing Mike Renault, who resigned.

Harris has been an account exec with ABC Radio since 1952, having joined the web a year earlier as a presentation writer.

Jack Paar Dickers Radio Strip on ABC

Jack Paar, who's talking television to NBC, is close to a deal with ABC Radio for a morning strip that would start in July. As a companion piece to Paar, ABC is dickering a return to radio of the longrunning "Grand Central Station," which has been off the air since Campbell Soups pulled out of network radio.

"Grand Central" would go as a quarter-hour strip instead of the once-weekly half-hour as in the past. Deal is still being worked out, but plan is to give the five quarter-hours weekly a story line to carry each yarn through the week. ABC would script and direct the package. As to Paar, no contract's been signed yet, but it's said to be as good as set.

Two shows would go into the 11-11:30 a.m. slot sometime in July. This would involve a moveback of the "Disneyland" show to 11:35 and probable axing of the two current 11:30-12 occupants, Basil Rathbone and Constance Bennett. "Grand Central" would go in at 11, Paar at 11:15, followed by five minutes of news and then the "Disneyland" audience-participationer.

Nathanson's Broadside Vs. K&E In 'Battle of the Permanents'

Don Paul Nathanson, head of North Advertising, Chicago-based agency for Toni, fired back last week at William B. Lewis, his opposite number at Kenyon & Eckhardt, handling Hudnut's New Quick, in a "battle of the home permanents."

Lewis had written a letter to Nathanson objecting to on-air and print ad material used by Tip Toni, with particular reference to Arthur Godfrey's "for the birds" remarks anent NQ (AG being a Toni man on his CBS-TV "Friends" show). K&E lettered Nathanson, sending copies to R. N. W. Harris and J. P. Spang, the factotums of Toni and parent company Gillette, and on top of that pulled a press conference last week (16) for toilet and drug goods scribes to continue the barrage against Hudnut's rival.

Nathanson said he received Lewis' letter Tuesday (5) and "it seemed to be a sincere attempt to present your agency's views of our current Tip Toni campaign." "But," he declared, "before I could possibly answer, I found that the trade journals had received copies of your letter the very same time I obtained mine. I was further shocked to learn that your letter was immediately used as a basis for a promotional press conference. Since you evidenced real concern for the ethics of our profession, I cannot bring myself to believe that you knew in advance about these activities or that you would have or will continue to permit yourself to be so exploited. Since you and your client have taken the matter to the trade in such an unprecedented way, you left us no alternative but to do the same in self-defense."

Further Analysis

Nathanson then went into the respective ad campaigns, refuting the K&E prez as to the merits of the rival homewavers and declaring that the Tip Toni copy in question predated that of New Quick. He commented on "your concern about our attacks upon a competitor and the implication that your present advertising theme was original," asserting that New Quick's "You'll feel like crying" copy of a few years ago was "an out and out attack upon self-neutralizing permanents and definitely was a setback to the home permanent industry"; and that with respect to the "stealing" of material, "it is always difficult to prove the origin of an advertising idea."

Nathanson said there was "no problem" on that point since Toni has been covering the matter of using "left-over lotion" in its printed directions "since 1944." "The need for a special fresh lotion for partial permanents to avoid the use of left-overs was the basic reason for the launching of Tip Toni last June," Nathanson said. "This preceded your current campaign by nine months."

"I regret that your personal letter to me," Nathanson stated, "became the springboard to a promo-

Miami's 1st Regular Network Teleshow To Succeed 'Super Circus'

Leon Newman Agency has been assigned the booking of the as yet untitled show replacing "Super Circus" on ABC-TV on Sunday afternoons at 5 p.m. New program will emanate from Miami and is set for 13 weeks. Show, like its predecessor, will be produced by Martin Stone Associates. Ed Kean will be co-producer.

It will be the first regular teleshow emanating from Miami. Plans now being blueprinted call for the first shows to come from such spots as the Miami Seaquarium located on Key Biscayne, which has an amphitheatre and a tank where seals and porpoises can be seen, as well as grass areas where the variety acts can work. Also being considered are the Monkey Jungle, Tropical Hobbyland, and other sites of tourist interest.

Emcee may be Jack Gregson, who had been announcing the Wednesday night fights. A femme singer who will be a permanent on the show, is yet to be signed. Emanation point will be WITV, Miami.

Quaker Now Sowing Its Pasadena Oats on CBS

Quaker Oats, which last year sponsored the Tournament of Roses telecast via ABC-TV, has switched its New Year's Day billings to CBS-TV. Cereal outfit has signed with Columbia for approximately two hours of remote pickup from the 68th annual parade of Pasadena. So far, the order is for black-and-white, but a decision on whether to go tint with the special may come later.

CBS, with the Quaker business, thus becomes the first network with an order for the parade this year, though it didn't even carry the event last season. NBC-TV, which had Minute Maid as a tint sponsor last New Year's, hasn't signed anyone yet, and ABC, which had Quaker last time, is blank thus far too. CBS order placed through the Lynn Baker agency.

Omaha's 'Top 10' Torch for Radio

WOW topper William O. Wiseman has begun a national swing to convince time buyers, agencies and advertisers at special invite lunches that Omaha is the 51st market in the country in all things but radio. He's spending $20,000 on the posh eatery tour to tell them that Omaha is the 9th market in buying power because of the extensive outlands reached by radio.

Wiseman said that the tour, which began formally Monday (21) in the first of five Stork Club luncheons for some 400 people all told, is to take the onus off Omaha as a national radio buy. In the past, Madison Ave. and other advertising districts have treated the market as a stepchild. Wiseman held a similar series of luncheons in 1952.

Before the Stork Club, he spent three days hitting 10 prospective customers on the client level. On Monday (28) he goes to the Boston Statler, on the 29th to the Barclay in Philly. The rest of his sked is: Detroit, June 5 and 6; Cleveland, 7; Cincy, 8 (for P&G); Chi, 11 and 12; Milwaukee, 13; St. Louis, 14-16; Minneapolis, 18-20; K.C., 21 and 22. In July he hits Denver, Seattle, Frisco, Dallas, K.C. and Tulsa. He expects he'll have delivered his pitch to 1,800 people when he's through.

WIN-T SALE IN IND. BRINGS $800,000

Waterloo, Ind., May 22.

Television station WIN-T, Waterloo, about 15 miles from Fort Wayne, Ind., has been sold for $800,000 to the Universal Broadcasting Co., Indianapolis, subject to FCC approval. If the sale goes through, both R. Morris Pierce, president of Tri-State Television, Inc., which owns and operates WIN-T, and Ben Baylor, vice president and general manager, will continue with the Channel 15 station. Latter has just completed a power boost with the installation of a directional antenna radiating nearly a million watts to the south over the Fort Wayne area.

If the sale is approved WANE, Fort Wayne radio station, will drop its construction permit for Channel 69, Fort Wayne. WANE is one of several properties of Universal Broadcasting Co. In addition, Universal owns WISH radio and tv in Indianapolis, and WHBU radio in Anderson.

Jim Westover to KQV

Pittsburgh, May 22.

Jim Westover, veteran KDKA announcer and longtime personality there, has resigned from Westinghouse radio station to go with KQV as its morning deejay. Westover replaces Jack Logan, leaving to go with Voice of America in Washington as a producer.

GE Breaks Ground For $2,000,000 TV-AM Center

Schenectady, May 22.

Ground breaking ceremonies for the $2,000,000 radio and television broadcasting center which General Electric will build on Balltown Road were held Thursday (17), with pickups by WGY and WRGB-TV.

The sister stations will occupy the new facility, expected to be completed in July, 1957.

Credit Squeeze No Deterrent as Brit. Com'l TV Grows

London, May 22.

Commercial tv in Britain is on the march, and its viewing audience in London and the Midlands is expanding at the rate of 92,500 homes a month. In these two areas alone there are already more than 1,080,000 home receivers capable of tuning in to the alternative channel, and this figure does not take into account either new or adapted sets, which swung into use in the Manchester area when Granada Network opened their station a few weeks ago.

The latest statistics, which are the result of a field research by Television Audience Measurement, show that the tv market is expanding, despite the credit squeeze policy of the Government and its consequential purchase restrictions. In the London area the first result of the credit squeeze was to cut the weekly advance in new receivers from 13,610 to 12,330, but the fall in the sale of new multi-channel receivers has more than been offset by the increased rate of conversion of the old type single channel sets.

In the Midlands, where commercial tv has been running for less than three months, the number of set conversions and replacements has more than doubled in the last few weeks.

The TAM breakdown of their statistics estimates that there are 720,000 homes in the London area able to receive the commercial programs, and 360 in the Midlands.

And from the BBC's own audience researchers comes corroboratory evidence of the increasing popularity of the commercial programs. The BBC admits that where the public has a choice, 59% prefer the opposition shows.

IDE Juve Delinquency Disks Cuffoed to Jocks Hits 500-Market Mark

Institute for Democratic Education, comprising top broadcasters, educators and newsmen, has passed the 500-station mark in the use of its series of spots and open-enders fighting juvenile delinquency. Library of 23 spots by Ed Sullivan, Martha Raye, Mitch Miller, Steve Allen, Count Basie, Jose Ferrer, Rosemary Clooney, Patti Page, Guy Lombardo, Ralph Flanagan, Vaughn Monroe, Cab Calloway, Bill Hayes, Harry Belafonte, Frankie Laine and Julius LaRosa was sent out to stations last month. Spots, used on disk jockey shows, are pitched at teenagers and stress the rights of others, law and order, brotherhood and good citizenship.

Additionally, four of the stars, Laine, LaRosa, Belafonte and Miss Page, did five-minute open-end interviews for deejays on the same subjects. All talent worked gratis, with the unions involved giving their blessings. Institute over the past 10 years has turned out a dozen 12-week dramatic series with such names as Helen Hayes, Walter Hampden, Raymond Massey, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Fredric March, Bill Stern. Melvyn Douglas, Edward R. Murrow, Faye Emerson, Tyrone Power, ets., all working gratis. Latest such series is Sherman Dryer's "Decision," first heard on ABC Radio and now on 410 stations via transcription.

Houston—Bob Quinn, formerly of KLIF, Dallas, where he was a disk jockey, has joined KLBS here. He replaces Reed Farrell, who has moved to Chicago.

Scrap Emmys, Set Up a National TV Festival Week, Academy Told

Hollywood, May 22.

Charging "current Emmy awards are a disservice to television," Dr. Stuart Hyde, assistant professor of telecommunications at USC, has suggested the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences dump its entire awards structure and replace it with a national tv festival week. Dr. Hyde said he planned to send a copy of his plan to the Academy.

Present Emmy awards "give no indication of the scope of tv," and categories as now set up are merely trying to prop up a flimsy foundation, he asserted, adding "TV tries to pattern itself after an increasingly dissimilar medium—the movies."

"The Academy should confine its awards to significant achievements in arts and sciences, regardless of categories. Categories are senseless in tv. It's fairly simple to categorize movies, but you can't do it in tv. You attempt it and wind up with say five good shows in one category, and five mediocre ones in another.

"I suggest that during this national tv festival week, which should be held early in the year, each show should repeat what it considers its best show of the past year, for both the public and trade to see. I admit the plan has some disadvantages, such as in judging news shows and series with regular casts and components, but I feel the advantages far outweight the disadvantages.

"Under the plan I envision there would be awards only for the best show; best director; best actor, best actress; best script; and best designer.

"Those who select Emmy winners today probably don't see one out of 10 shows. And as for the dramatic shows, here are 1,400 a year—and who sees that many? I suggest the Academy set up standing committees to watch the various shows," said the professor.

Dr. Hyde stated his plan wasn't motivated by the criticisms heaped on the Academy awards structure by various industry leaders in the past few months, but instead was prompted by his own objections to the current setup.

Toy Outfit To Repeat On Thanksgiving Parade

Ideal Toy Co. will bankroll the annual New York Thanksgiving Day Parade via NBC-TV for the second straight year. Web's coverage will be from 11 a.m. to noon on Nov. 22, with Ideal taking on the entire sponsorship and arranging for a 40-second break for local tie-ins by department stores. Ideal is also shopping around for a regular network series in the fall. It was represented last year with a 13-week run on the CBS-TV "Winky Dink & You" segment.

Toy outfit, while prepping network plans for the fall, is also well represented on a local and regional basis, with sponsorship of 34 programs in 28 markets.

Triangle Has Own Code of Standards

Philadelphia, May 22.

A new set of standards for good advertising practice has been drawn up by Triangle station's program, sales and continuity acceptance departments, in consultation with the Better Business Bureau of Philadelphia. Stations covered are WFIL AM-FM-TV, Phila.; WNBF AM-TV, Binghamton, N. Y., WHGB AM, Harrisburg, and WFGB AM-TV, Altoona.

The new code takes in all phases of the commercial message from the copy desk to the point of sale. Included are basic advertising copy rules that urge sponsors to guard against excessive claims, to stress good taste and rule out vagueness or misleading statements concerning prices or services. Special inducements or gifts must not be distorted.

Paramount in the new rules is the setting up of a complaint department, separates from the sales or programming at each Triangle station. Here the case histories of viewers' beefs will be filed by the station with the Better Business Bureau.

The person delivering the commercial must be approved by Triangle in advance and no objectionable "pitchmen" will be tolerated. All statements made over the air must be fulfilled "without guile or reservation" at the point of sale.

NBC NAMES TRIGG TO CHI PROGRAM SLOT

Chicago, May 22.

NBC put the quietus to reports it was considering closing its Chi programming office with the appointment of Harry Trigg as Windy City network program manager, filling the vacancy left when Alan Beaumont checked out last month to take over directorial duties on the web's "Home."

As further evidence that Chicago has a stake in the NBC future, Kirk Logie has been signed on as midwest program supervisor, the post previously held by Trigg. Logie joins the network after a tour of duty as the radio-tv supervisor of the Armour Research Foundation. Trigg, Logi, Tim Troy, the web's Chi programming business manager, and the "Zoo Parade" contingent headed by producer-director Don Meier round out the NBC programming complement. (Chet Hagen's network news operation is a separate unit.)

Dallas, May 22.

Alexander C. Keese, for four years manager of WFAA, has been named director of radio and tv properties of The Dallas Morning News, which includes WFAA and WFAA-TV here. Karl Lambertz, assistant manager, was upped to manager of WFAA.

Both Keese and Lamberts have theatre backgrounds.

Dudley To Unveil New Three-Dimensional TV System, Pix Equipment

A three-dimensional television system which is entirely compatible in terms of a clear two-dimensional signal for those viewers not wearing special glasses will shortly be pitched at networks and sponsors by Leslie P. Dudley, British stereoptician who claims to have perfected such a system with little additional equipment cost at the production source. Dudley is in the U. S. to organize a new company which will exploit the new system and license it to networks, stations, producers and sponsors.

In addition, Dudley will go to the Coast in about a month to show studios his latest auto-stereoscopic camera and projection equipment, with which he claims he can produce natural three-dimensional results in the standard theatre without the use of glasses by patrons. This, he claims, is based on new developments of his first auto-stereoptic system demonstrated by him in England in 1935 and subsequently adopted by Sergie Ivanov in Moscow. Because England is primarily a nation of exhibitors and not producers, he feels Hollywood is the only place where the new sans-glasses 3-D can be introduced.

In the motion picture venture and in other stereoptic ventures including display advertising, printing and all the graphic arts, Dudley is repped by American editor-publisher Bernard Geis. In the video venture, however, the company in the process of formation will handle all the details. Geis, incidentally, hopes to apply the stereoptics to his "Magic Talking Books" series for children. Among the g.a. developments is a "vertiscope" which not only gives pictures a 3-D effect but makes them appear to stand up vertically.

The television device involves

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Person to Person

Beatrice Lillie is an old and whammo story in the Broadway and London and tv-radio shenanigans, so James E. Fitzsimmons, bright as Old Sol and nearly as old (a snappy 81) probably rated the major focus on "Person to Person" last week (18). The venerable "Sunny Jim," doyen of horse trainers, was a timely booking credited to the canny combo of Ed Murrow, Jesse Zousmer and John Aaron on the dopesheet. For last Friday was the eve of the Fitzsimmons-saddled Nashua's gallop at Garden State racetrack in New Jersey, favoring "P to P" by grabbing the race to become alltime top money winner on the turf with $1,100,365 bagged.

Someone was either too modest about or not privy to another oncoming event, however—Friday's Pimlico-at-Baltimore card named for hotshot trainers, in this case for "Sunny Jim." This included the $11,000-plus Mr. Fitz Handicap. The man to whom horses have talked and whom he has backtalked for 70 years couldn't make either horsepark because of the CBS-TV exposure, but at Pimlico his son John upsied with the trophy and received a mess of gifts earmarked for his father as reciprocal curtsy. Characteristically, the No. 1 gift was a color tv set from some 100 sports scribes, according to N.Y. Times turf expert James Roach. It shows that newspapermen have a heart.

Leave us get back to "Sunny Jim" while taking up the quarter-hour Beahive. It was no "evening at home" for the British comedienne and one-woman iconoclassicist. True, she was pictured in her longtime Manhattan domicile, but the pure personal touch typical of these person-to-persons went out the window as Lady Peel preferred to be "on." That's good enough, as shedding her stage mien is perhaps not to her liking. She said she might be coming through with another "evening with" show and thought "Beasop's Fables" might be an apt title. (It could just as well be in partnership with Steve Allen and tagged "Bea Bop Fables.")

As to that Lady Peel title (via the late Sir Robert), she used it for billing once in Cleveland, with her regular moniker parenthesized. In one scene the script called for her to get up and make with a bow, at which point the whole bloody audience arose and dittoed. That was the last of Lady Peel on the marquees. It was a meaty segment, full of those Lillie touches that must be appreciated before being seen.

Trainer Fitzsimmons was "at home" in Sheepshead Bay out in Brooklyn, surrounded by four generations of his family in an unusual "family album" ensemble that included gleeclub innings fore and aft. Murrow popped a lot of questions at his subject and the latter responded quickly and articulately, the sincerity and happiness just oozing as he sat there, getting up just once to join the menage. The geegee talk was interesting, coming as it did from the horse's mouth. Mr. Fitz is happy about "this is his life," what with the basics of a 5 a.m. rising to get the fresh air all day, good food and good clothing. But for all hoss players, this vignette stood out: when Murrow asked him if he could "dope out" the races, Mr. Fitz considered the question serenely and then shot back that if he could do so, he wouldn't be getting up at 5 in the morn but sleep into the afternoon. It's hoped that a lot of the two-buck crowd were looking and listening. Trau.

On Trial

"Star Stage" sneak-previewed the vidfilm stanza replacing it next fall. It was the second time this season a segment in the upcoming "On Trial" slipped into the 26 live-13 film anthology alternatingly sponsored by Campbell and Pond's.

"On Trial" is produced by Collier Young and Joseph Cotten through Revue, a subsid of MCA, which is doing "Star Stage" too. Last Friday's (18) half-hour, "The Man in the Black Robe," appeared on the Pond's week. (Pond's ankles next semester, leaving the soup firm to seek another alter-ego on the courtroom dramas). The new series has the satisfaction, for what it's actually worth, of having a permanent host-narrator in Cotten, while the only other significant difference between it and what it takes the place of is that "On Trial" will be entirely on film. Qualitatively, they're made of the same slickly calibrated minor dramatics.

The apathy of the public and the prosecution to the hoodlum brutality of the roaring '20s was the theme of "Black Robe." A philanthropic thug, a part that guest star Paul Douglas had little to do in, murdered a bookie in broad daylight. At his trial, the courtroom pewsters laughed at his jokes, failing to note the severity of the matter, and the D.A. only went through the motions of harassing the killer. If it weren't for the judge, "a relic from the traffic courts," Douglas would have gotten off scot free.

The judge disintegrated the cocky villain to the point where a killer was brought on to threaten taking the life of the gavel-wielder in his own courtroom. Making the necessary precautions for his own safety, the judge irritated the killer into action which shocked the populace out of its indifference. John McIntyre was excellent as the judge.

Young is credited with writing the script. He transported narrator Cotten out of the present and to the scene of the crime before it happened and other like things, and though they were clever, in a mildly shocking kind of way, they also seemed out of place. Attempts to convey through the narrator a satirical tone about weakened justice came too soon in the script and were more puzzling than helpful with the atmosphere of the story. The dialog was smooth and so were the production values, but the horror of weakened justice Young was striving to bring out never got through. Art.

Modern Romances

Maybe because the quarter-hour strip, "Modern Romances," is losing its Colgate grip sometime soon, its staff thought it could get away with an experiment, or, more realistically, something that might sound like an experiment. Daring? Not one bit. This cross-the-boarder last week sank ignominiously in a pit of soap bubbles.

Even a modern dress version of "Macbeth," the goriest pre-Freudian height Shakespeare could reach, is incongruous in a framework with a title as promising to the hausfrau as "Modern Romances." "Modern dress" or not, incongruous or not, the stanza did everything in its power, it seems, to immortalize "Portia Faces Life," (no Shakespearian pun intended). There was a recent feature film which through its title, "Joe Macbeth," made it clear to some that this was a story remotely—not absolutely—based on the original. However, it's akin to fraud to give the unwary homescreener even the momentary impression that this is the real thing. What does it take for a writer to convert a violent king into a sneaky governor or repaint his wife (the essence of imperial malevolence) into a blubbery college alumna who doesn't know which end is up and who suckles nickle cliches?

"Modern Romances" didn't have to improve the story, but since they tried, they might as well have made a stab at the title too. Art.

20th-Fox Hour

The old saying goes that cheaters never prosper. In this case, by cheating on the story-telling, the old saying's validity is upheld.

Leonard Freeman's "Overnight Haul" teleplay, from a G. W. Upton story, piles too many troubles on Richard Conte's head which, with a little common sense, could easily have been avoided. Thus, instead of sympathizing with Conte's predicament, the viewer feels impatience.

Story deals with the way Conte, a rough-and-tumble trucker, comes to love his sensitive, introverted stepson, played by Richard Eyer. Conte reluctantly agrees to drop the boy off at his summer camp during one of his runs. On a deserted road, late at night, the kid gets trapped under the truck's axle when a jack slips while Conte is changing a tire.

The remaining footage dwells on Conte's troubles in getting help, and no wonder. At a closed service station, instead of arousing the house across the road, he breaks in. The garageman, played by Forrest Lewis, clobbers him on the head and lodges him in jail. Rather than plead to have someone sent up the road to find and free the boy, Conte instead demands that the sheriff, James Griffith, free him.

Unsuccessful, he stages a jailbreak with the help of a fellow prisoner, Clarence Muse, gets shot by the same mechanic, but manages to make off with a pickup

STEVENSON-KEFAUVER DEBATE
With Quincy Howe, moderator
60 Mins., Mon. (21), 10 p.m.
ABC (AM & TV), from Miami

'Twas largely a case of Tweedledum and Tweedledee as the two chief aspirants to the Democratic nomination, Adlai Stevenson and Estes Kefauver, echoed each other through an hour of what was billed as a debate. If the entire Democratic party were in as wide an area of agreement as its two chief contenders, most of its troubles would be over.

This may very well be to their credit—certainly their gentlemanly and courteous bearing was—but it doesn't make much of a debate, televised or otherwise. In discussing foreign policy, atomic peacetime uses, military preparedness, the farm problem, small business and desegregation, the two hardly had a contrary thing to say to each other. In fact, they seemed to pick up the other on cue, so to speak, to add their note of approval to a statement by the other. The only time things got on a plane of individualism was when Sen. Kefauver almost tearfully accused Stevenson of having wronged him in attacking his Senate attendance record. Stevenson almost apologized.

Some of the fault unquestionably lies in the approach set down by the ABC news boys and moderator Quincy Howe. For the value of such a debate lies in spelling out the differences between two candidates, not their areas of agreement. And Howe, conducting the discussion on a topic-by-topic basis, failed to pin down their differences on the basis of past statements or known attitudes. Perhaps we've reached an era of sophistication in politics where the soft-spoken word of agreement has superceded the heated argument. Perhaps this is even all to the good—but the fun's all gone, and is it politics?

WTVJ in Miami supplied the facilities, which were excellent, though the setting was as dreary as the discussion itself. Chan.

DESEGREGATION — BALTIMORE REPORT
With Ted Jaffee, others
Producer: Herbert B. Cahan
Director: Kennard Calfee
Writer: Gray Johnson Poole
30 Mins., Thurs., 10 p.m.
WAAM-TV, Baltimore

WAAM-TV's recent public service half-hour devoted to a review of the 1954 events resulting from the Supreme Court ruling ending racial segregation in the schools made for a peculiarly bloodless documentary. Looking at a red hot issue from a distance of two years, this "report" was workmanlike video but lacking in emotional punch.

Live segments were mixed with film portions to trace Baltimore's reaction to desegregation. Carefully prepared and precisely delivered contributions by a school commissioner and Baltimore's Superintendent of Public Instruction had little or no vitality and a filmed statement by late commissioner of Baltimore police added up to some listless tv.

A modicum of animation was provided by the principal and two faculty members from a high school where pro segregation demonstrations had occured. Apparently, it is among the students and faculty members that the actual issue of desegregation is best understood and it is this level that went virtually unexplored in this treatment.

Another defect that marred this well meaning effort was a tendency to whitewash and flagwave. Desegregation involves more basic emotions that the moral preachments dished out here.

Director Kennard Calfee handled the materials at hand with a varied and fluid approach. Ted Jaffee made a satisfactory narrator. Burm.

PLAY YARD
With Mary Ellen Schott, Sky Lucey
Producer-director: Al Sternberg
30 Mins., Tues. (1), 6 p.m.
WTVN-TV, Columbus

"Play Yard," which has proved popular as a weekday morning show, has now been extended to a 30-minute, once-a-week evening program.

Starring Mary Ellen, a vivacious, blonde friend of children, "Play Yard" is a collection of cartoons, comment of interest to the popsickle set and special "visits." The initial visit was to a soda parlor and with soda jerk Sky Lucey.

Lucey is heard more often than he is seen on "Play Yard." He supplies an incomparable voice for a shaggy, lovable camel's head known as Casper the Camel.

The program, although aimed at very young children, probably is interesting to many adults, too, because of its fascinating stars. Conn.

WOMEN WANT TO KNOW
With Faye Emerson, moderator; Toni Gilman, Virgilia Peterson, Josephine Halpin, panelists; Dr. Ralph G. Eckert, guest
Producer: George Spota
Director: Alan Pottasch
30 Mins.; Tues., 10:30 p.m.
COTY
WABC-TV, New York

(Franklin Bruck)

"Women Want to Know," a Ted Granik package that's a logical extension of his "Youth Wants to Know," bowed as a local entry (with obvious network ambitions) on WABC-TV, N.Y. Granik couldn't have selected a better topic than "Sex Education and Attitudes" for the opening show; it started off with a high degree of interest and maintained it with level-headedness and a good degree of humor. What do you follow sex with?—maybe they could use the same topic for 13 shows; nobody ever ran out of words or opinions on that topic.

It's not likely that future shows will come up to the rapid-fire pace of the first, but if they approach it to any degree, then "Women Want to Know" certainly has a place in television. Preem had Dr. Ralph G. Eckert, prof of family relations at the U. of Connecticut, as the guest expert, surrounded by a panel comprising Toni Gilman, Virgilia Peterson and Josephine Halpin and a "gallery" of eager women that somehow looked like plants. Dr. Eckert is an advocate of the "healthy" approach to sex education, this being defined by him as the facing of the reality that boys and girls are different and that sex is a normal, happy thing. The panelists couldn't very well disagree with him on that, but they did take potshots in varying manners, all handled with poise, charm and good sense by the prof. Girls weren't bad either, except perhaps in the sense that they were virtually panting with sincerity.

Faye Emerson was the moderator, and she did quite well by her chores except for a couple of attempts at flippancy that didn't quite come off. The general outspokenness of the program is testimony to the growing sophistication of American audiences. As above noted, the topic was handled with sensitivity and sensibility, and as always, was fascinating. General production values on the show were excellent. Right now, Coty is sponsoring it on a local basis; it might do worse than to put it on a network. Chan.

ROSEMARY CLOONEY
With Jose Ferrer, guest; Hi-Lo's, Nelson Riddle orch.
Writers: Tom Waldman, Tom Adair
30 Mins., Tues., 9 p.m.
FOREMOST DAIRIES
KTTV, Hollywood

"From This Moment On" leads off Rosemary Clooney on her new syndicated telefilmed musical that makes channel 11 even better looking from 9 to 9:30 of a Tuesday eve and, it might be addendumed, there'll be a goodly number of watchers habit-formed to the rollicking rhythms of her virtuosity, the backstopping of Nelson Riddle's crew and the matched voices of the Hi-Lo's. In one fell swoop that's bundle of entertainment. Her repertoire is so smartly customed that there's something for everybody from the frisky boppers to the sedate matron.

On the takeoff there may have been critical view taken of Jose Ferrer's guesting ("my Joe") or the lack of broader production scope. There may have been a "Lisbon Antigua" by Riddle's sidemen instead of a few bantering exchanges with the batoneer. But these are minor liabilities; the main event was Miss Clooney's singing and that's what the sponsor bought. As for production, confined to some inventive designs by Seymour Klate, this has been used as a device to "cover" a faltering voice. This Miss Clooney doesn't need and Klate, one of the town's top tv designers, chose not to imitate "Hit Parade."

Miss Clooney and Riddle are a winning combo for any pure musical even though such formats have been short-lived on video. That it has and holds is tribute to their artistry. Whether it's a soothing ballad or a bouncy bop she embraces it with personable complacency and vocalure that falls easy on the ears and lights up the orbs. Diction, she said, "pays off," and for her it's an added plus. Ferrer's 88'ing and toothy singing were more sentimental than professional. The harmonies of the Hi-Lo's were happily blended in two numbers. The credits were lost on a dim backdrop but the sponsoring milk companies had a good pouring from Ed Reimers. Helm.

MAURICE CHEVALIER SHOW
(Sunday Spectacular)
With Stanley Holloway, Polly Bergen, Michel Legrand, Chita Rivera, Charles Sanford Orch, Clay Warnick Chorus, Art Linkletter, others
Producer-director: Max Liebman
Writers: William Friedberg, Neil Simon
90 Mins.; Sun., 7:30 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
NBC-TV, from New York

Maurice Chevalier's third try before the U. S. vidcameras proved that he is one of the superior entertainers of this day. The veteran Frenchman, when on his own, demonstrated anew that not only does he retain the skill that was his when "Louise" was on the hit parade, but has possibly added to his stature. Chevalier proved that he can charm audiences in any medium and the NBC-TV presentation of Max Liebman's spec on Sunday (20) was at its best when the indestructible Gaul was on camera.

The spec overall had a static quality that indicates Liebman is relying more heavily on acts than on production, and the show's moments hinged on how the talent was doing. Thus, after Chevalier, came such turns as Roger Price who punctuated his emceeing with his droodles. They're in newspaper syndication throughout the country, and the silly cartoons come off as well on the vidscreens.

Chevalier introed composer-conductor Michel Legrand for his first stint in the U. S. Already known via his Columbia waxings, Legrand is a youthful 23, who impresses as an intense and imaginative musician. However, he's yet to learn the economy of movement and music. Much of what he is attempting is obscured by overwriting and overconducting. He alternated between the baton and the ivories.

Polly Bergen, who came on for a trio of tunes, is a highly capable singer but has a few buts that detracted from the overall quality of her stint. In her "Red Hot Mama" as done in the '20s she was overcute, and in a pair of Helen Morgan reminiscences, she was overdramatic. However, the vocal quality was highly pleasing.

Chita Rivera, current in "Mr. Wonderful," provided a sexy note with her song and dance excursions. However, it remained for the Continental performer to give the spec its strongest note. Chevalier in some of his staples such as "Barcelona," "A Boy and a Girl," and a medley of French tunes that found their way to the U. S. hit parade, was a winning combination for the Lip.

Surprise of the show was Stanley Holloway from "My Fair Lady." Holloway gave a pair of monologs, "Albert and the Lion" and "Yorkshire Pudding" which were both charming and entertaining. The duo combined in song and dance on "A Little Bit of Luck" from "Lady" and that was a wrapup.

Production came off well since it was dovetailed with the main talent and acted as a showcase for the principals and didn't impede the general pacing of the show.

More serious, perhaps, was host Art Linkletter's intro of Roger Price as the "star" of the show, and the obvious loading up of the studio audience with a lot of screaching bobbysoxers who yelled at everything introduced. Jose.

DAVE MOORE SHOW
With Mary Davies, Bill Carson, instrumental trio
Producer: C. D. Miller
Director: Harry Jones
Writer: Moore
40 Mins.: Mon. thru Fri., 11:20 p.m.
Participating
WCCO-TV, Minneapolis

Enlisting highly personable and talented people's services, neatly put together and showing considerable imagination, this late evening locally produced show has tough Steve Allen "Tonight" opposition. However, on the basis of the sample caught, it looks capable of luring and pleasing a large audience.

For those who enjoy a relaxing session of firstrate song and music, much of it offbeat, and those who appreciate smooth handling by a good-looking, finished narrator (Dave Moore), show stacks up as a tasty dish. Moore and the proceedings were reminiscent of Dave Garroway and the latter's distinctively delightful shows of yesteryear.

Using a rural character's speech, Moore took his audience to little, mythical Sycamore end for their entertainment and what was seen and heard swallowed well.

In Mary Davies, show has a top-notch, attractive song stylist, a real big leaguer, whose standout supper club numbers like "Some-

Lease on Frisco KEAR Longhair Indie Stirs Up an Angry Storm

San Francisco, May 22.

The on-again, off-again lease of Frisco's longhair radio station, KEAR, has stirred an angry storm about the head of the debt-plagued indie's owner, Stephen A. Cisler.

Only three weeks ago Cisler confirmed rumors that he had leased the 10,000-watt station to Bartell Broadcasters, owners of radio stations in Milwaukee, Atlanta, Phoenix and San Diego. The Bartells, he said, were switching to a pops-and-personality format.

Cisler at that time said "agreement had been reached, subject to FCC confirmation," on these terms:

(1) A five-year lease at $60,000 a year;

(2) The Bartells to have an option to buy the "Good Music Station" for $125,000 at the end of five years;

(3) Cisler to be retained as a "consultant" at $12,000 a year.

But the agreement, so firm then according to Cisler, never went to the FCC. The Bartells looked into the deal more closely and called it off. On the other hand, Cisler claims the deal was cancelled "by mutual agreement."

Announcement of the lease, however, brought anguished outcries from two local groups.

One group was headed by Frisco philanthropist Frank V. DeBellis and lawyer Joseph Alioto. They said they had offered to pay off all of KEAR's debts and invest $50,000 in Bay Radio, Inc., KEAR's parent corporation, in return for 50% control and Cisler's promise to step out of management.

The other group was headed by lawyer Milton Stern Jr., who represents a number of stockholders and is calling a stockholders' meeting with the avowed purpose of taking operating control.

Since the Bartells called off their deal, Cisler has been playing for time desperately in an effort to find a buyer for the station.

So far, only one would-be buyer, outside the local DeBellis-Alioto group, has been identified. This is Calvin Smith, who runs E. L. Cord's successful longhair outlet, KFAC, in Los Angeles.

Smith, according to Cisler, made an offer to him similar to the now-dead Bartell deal. Smith, however, denied he made any such offer and, in fact, called Cisler's terms "completely unacceptable" after inspecting KEAR's present quarters and suburban transmitter last week.

"The KEAR broadcasting equipment is worthless," said Smith after his inspection, "and housed in a hillbilly shack. We'd be buying a frequency only. However, KFAC will consider the situation and come up with an offer in the near future."

"But," added Smith as a parting shot, "A half million dollars is a ridiculous figure."

In the back of Smith's mind were two considerations:

1) Salvage of KEAR as a classical outlet in an area with plenty of highbrow interests;

2) The possibility of strengthening KFAC's commercial position with a northern anchor in what could become a statewide network of serious-music radio stations.

Cisler, meantime, claims to have received offers for KEAR from four "Eastern groups," two of whom represent "good music."

Geraldine Zorbaugh ABC's 1st Femme V.P.

ABC's Geraldine B. Zorbaugh becomes the first femme v.p. at a network with her appointment last week as v.p. and special assistant to network prexy Bob Kintner. With Miss Zorbaugh moving out of her post as general counsel and ABC secretary after five years, business affairs v.p. Jim Stabile has been placed in charge of a consolidated business affairs-legal department.

Stabile, named a v.p. last fall, becomes v.p. and general counsel for the network, and also has been named assistant secretary of the parent American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres. While Stabile succeeds Miss Zorbaugh on the legal side, Omar F. Elder, who retains his post as assistant general counsel, becomes secretary of ABC. Mrs. Muriel H. Reis of the web's legal department becomes assistant secretary.

WNBQ as Testing Ground For NBC-TV Kid Shows

Chicago, May 22.

NBC-TV's WNBQ is to be the testing ground for new kids' show formats under a project set up last week by the o&o's veep Jules Herbeauvaux and Dr. Frances Horwich, NBC's supervisor of children's programs. Educator, whose "Ding Dong School" broke in originally on the Chi station, will first do a comprehensive analysis of WNBQ's local moppet offerings to see how they measure up to her yardsticks.

Second phase of the Windy City laboratory will be the development of new show ideas for the tricycle set out of program director George Heinemann's shop with network exposure the eventual aim.

Pittsburgh, May 14.

The death a month ago of Irwin D. Wolf, civic leader, department store tycoon and partowner of KQV, may possibly change the decision as to who will be permitted to operate Channel 4 at nearby Irwin, Pa. This in turn could complicate the tangled VHF picture locally and extend the period in the local market whereby KDKA-TV continues to have the lush field to itself.

On April 18, just a few hours before Wolf died, Elizabeth C. Smith, the FCC hearing examiner, had recommended the granting of the license for Channel 4 to Television City, Inc., the former Allegheny Broadcasting Corp., operators of radio station KQV. Wolf and Earl F. Reed were the officers of Television City.

Miss Smith's recommendation was based in a large measure on Wolf's record of long service to the community. As a result of his death almost simultaneously with the original okay, the other applicants, chief of which is Hearst-owned WCAE, jointly asked for an indefinite extension of time for filing exceptions from the initial decision of the hearing examiner and FCC Commissioner Robert T. Bartley, acting as motions commissioner, granted it. He also recommended to the full FCC that the case should be remanded to the examiner for further consideration because, he said, Wolf's death may have changed the qualifications of Television City to operate the channel.

NCAA Regional Tilts Finalized for NBC-TV

The NBC-TV sports department has put the final wraps on its schedule of five eastern regional NCAA football games for the fall, these to complement the eight national telecasts previously set. Five-game schedule comprises Colgate-Cornell Sept. 29, Penn State-Holy Cross Oct. 13, Syracuse-Army Oct. 20, Navy-Notre Dame Nov. 3 and Yale-Princeton Nov. 17.

Web's national schedule kicks off a week earlier, with the Kentucky-Georgia Tech tilt at Lexington, and winds Dec. 8 with Miami-Pittsburgh. All are Saturday games except the Thanksgiving Day contests between Penn-Cornell and Oregon State-Oregon.

St. L. Cuffos Radio Sets

St. Louis, May 22.

To hypo National Radio week execs. of KXOK dished out a radio during every hour the station was on the air May 13-19. The invitation, via air, to make a stab for one of the sets brought more than 60,000 letters, postcards, etc., from listeners in the seven midwest states covered by the station. The missives were placed in the hopper of a mobile ready mix cement vehicle and thoroughly stirred.

At each hour the hopper discharged a letter and the person whose name was affixed won the cuffo radio.

Chi Station Switch For 'Sachs Amateur Hour'

Chicago, May 22.

Morris B. Sachs, department store entrepreneur and amateur politician (he's the city treasurer), is moving his venerable "Sachs Amateur Hour" simulcast from WBKB and WLS to WGN-TV and WGN. Show has been a Sunday radio and then tv institution for over 22 years, with a lengthy association with the ABC stations.

There seems to be some confusion as to just when the hour-long two-ply program will make the switch. Program's contract on WBKB expires June 17 but the new WGN-TV noon to 1 p.m. berth won't be open until July 8.

FCC Tells Wiley: 'We Can't Compel Networks To Preempt Com'l Time'

Washington, May 15.

The FCC has no authority to compel tv networks to surrender some of their prime commercial time for non-commercial public service programs, it has been explained to Senator Alexander Wiley (R., Wisc.).

In the Feb. 1 issue of VARIETY, Sen. Karl Mundt (R., S. D.) said the networks were ignoring their duty to the public and that he was going to get action from either the FCC or Congress.

Subsequently, Wiley wrote to the Commission that he and many other members of Congress felt as Mundt did. He also asked what the FCC proposed to do about it. The reply has just come from George C. McConnaughey, the Commission chairman. In a letter to Wiley, McConnaughey made these points:

1. Under the law, the FCC has no power to censor radio or tv programs.

2. A serious question would arise if such time were preempted for public service programming, because some of those who spoke might be candidates for election or reelection. Thus the station would be involved over whether it must grant equal time to all other candidates.

3. The FCC network study committee is currently surveying the entire network situation, including the effect of webs on programming. Following this, some rule changes or new legislation might be recommended.

"While the Commission recognizes that the public interest is served by affording the viewing public the opportunity to hear differing points of view," added McConnaughey, "neither the Commission, nor any individual broadcaster can, in advance, hammer out, down to the last detail, a blueprint which will give answers to all the problems which arise in the day-to-day development and maintenance of an adequate broadcast service.

"And the type of program service which will best serve the divers needs of the many service areas of the country cannot readily be reduced to a rule of a statute. The Commission, therefore, in examining the service rendered by a licensee, for the most part has limited its examination to an overall consideration of the licensee's operations to determine whether continued operation will be in the public interest . . . But the Commission does not interfere with the management of a station in the exercise of the licensee's discretion with regard to program content. The Commission does not direct that particular type of programs shall be broadcast during particular hours of the day."

Filmcraft Repacted By NBC For Groucho Quizzer

Hollywood, May 22.

Filmcraft Productions, which has been filming the Groucho Marx quizzer, "You Bet Your Life," since its inception, has been signed by NBC-TV to film the show again next season—the series' seventh on tv. Web had considered shooting the series itself next semester, but then decided to hand another 39-weeks deal over to Filmcraft prexy Isidore Lindenbaum.

Lindenbaum plans to begin production earlier than usual, on July 2, but will skip August, resuming lensing again in September. Filming will again be in NBC's Studio A.

In a Young New Medium of Entertainment a Young New Producer-Director Has Already Created a Special Chapter — Along the Bumpy TV Way He Helped Many Find Their Goal — And That's How the Coe Alumni Assn. Was Born

By DAVID SHAW

Dear Pappy:

I have been in this television game so long myself, that when this fella calls me on the phone just now and says, would I like to write something for Fred Coe, my automatic rejoinder is: "For how much?"

Right away this fella on the phone is screaming I got the whole thing wrong. This isn't for any tv program, and it certainly doesn't involve anything so crass as financial remuneration.

Not realizing he already lost me, the fella goes on to say that what I write will be printed in the paper which is running a tribute to you on your 10th anniversary in the Kinescope Jungle—a kind of a 21-inch salute.

Now Pappy, you know me well enough to realize I didn't hang up on the fella merely because of the short price he was offering—no matter what you might hear to the contrary. Even this fella's argument that Robert Alan, and Horton, and Paddy, and Tad, and J. P., and all the rest of the stablemates were already racking their brains out thinking up nice things to say about you for publication for no material gain—even that argument couldn't change my mind.

I just figure why should I let them go and print up the way I feel about you in any newspaper which, by the way, is a profit-making organization. No, I figure that if after seven years of our working together, you don't know yet how I feel, seeing it in print is not going to convince you—even though I donated it for free.

No Soapy Salutes, Pappy

So instead I decided maybe I ought to write you this personal letter, private-like, to let you know why I turned down the chance to write some well-deserved but soapy salute to you in the public press.

First of all, let me remind you that money—or even the lack of it—was no object.

The second thing is, everybody on Madison Avenue already knows how much you contributed to the medium of television these last 10 years, but it's only a few of us insiders, if you'll pardon the expression—fellow workers,—who know how much more you're going to contribute in the next 10. And because a lot of wise guys might accuse me of trying to butter you up, I wouldn't like to say that for publication—financial considerations notwithstanding.

Nor would I feel right raving publicly about the one man who was a bigger help to me than anybody in the writing of seven years of scripts—even if they were paying me a lot.

Which, as you know, they aren't.

The whole tv world knows by now that you are the best thing to happen to writers since the invention of the Cathode Ray tube, so why should I repeat to them what they already know? Gratis to boot.

Not what I'm especially concerned about money, or anything like that, but you always tried to pay us writers the fairest price in television when you could. That's why this fella's request on the phone just now gave me such a jolt. And believe me, Pappy, I was willing to work for less than scale.

Anyway, I sincerely hope that this letter explains why you don't see any glowing tribute from me in the paper. To sum it all up: it isn't the principle of the thing, it's the money.

Incidentally, after you finish reading the 10th Anniversary issue I would appreciate it if you'd send it to me because I'm curious to see what the other guys wrote about you. I'd certainly buy a copy of the paper myself except—well—if the paper won't buy my stuff, why should I buy theirs?

Your friend,

David Shaw

P.S.—Please excuse having to pay the mailman the three cents postage due on this letter.

"You came tonight to listen to a play—instead into a convent you made way."

This is a line from "The Cradle Song." It was cut in the recent television presentation, but somehow it's the line I remember best from the play. Almost 20 years ago I heard it said a few hundred times in a southern accent by a skinny young man from Nashville. He was a fellow apprentice in a New England summer theatre and it was in hearing one another's "sides" for a student production that I became so familiar with the line.

Fred Coe and I had the two male parts in this production of "Cradle Song" and we also appeared together that same summer in what I'm sure must have been the unlikely production of "Design for Living" ever known. I have no remembrance of my performance in the latter, but I distinctly remember Fred, in the character of "Otto," trying to mould his soft southern drawl into a brittle open "a" cadence like Noel Coward. The results were unforgettable. We shared one other effort, too. We organized and led a hunger strike of the apprentices who refused to eat for one whole day because we were convinced that the food for the apprentices had been doctored with saltpeter. These were Fred's and my first joint ventures. He had come up from college in Tennessee and I had come over from college in New York State.

The next time Coe and I were again on the stage of a theatre together was some 17 years after our essaying Noel Coward in the sticks. We were on the stage of a Broadway theatre; he as co-producer, and I as director of "Trip to Bountiful" by Horton Foote. We were together again, and we were bringing out of television what I think was the first of many projects which were to come to the theatre and the cinema from television. Back in our hunger strike days of that apprenticeship we had often said that as we went on in the theatre we would like to work together again, but of all the ways our imaginations spoke of how this might happen, they never hinted that an electronic invention would be the means that would lead to our standing together on the stage of the Henry Miller Theatre in September, 1953.

Better Than a 3-Ring Circus

Six years ago, Horton Foote and I were running a small theatre in Washington, D. C. and I used often to come to New York to cast actors or to try to find new scripts. Fred had already been in television for five years and it was during my trips to New York that he would say, "Come on over and see what a television show is like." I would go and sit and watch and having no responsibility toward the medium and having no idea about how anything was done, it was to me more fascinating than a three-ring circus. Fred then began to say, "Come on in and get your feet wet in television." After several months I decided to get my feet wet and many a time in my early television attempts I got in not up to my ankles but up to a point somewhat higher on my anatomy, and Fred had to pull me out. And pull me out he did—as he has done for so many before and after me.

Fred was working in television long before most of us and he was involved when much of the basic experimenting was done. His fundamental knowledge of the medium he has shared with a great number of us. It became the core of a craft for many directors, writers, and even many of the technical staff at NBC.

Despite his enormous knowledge of television and his constantly coming forward to us with good solutions, he have never become the all-seeing or all-knowing arbiter. I think this is because he has been too busy growing himself as the medium as an art and craft has been growing. Perhaps it's because of his need for constant growth of his own capacities that there has emanated from him an atmosphere of freedom of investigation and creativity for the people around him which constitutes one of his most salient contributions to television.

These last 10 years have been fortunate ones for Fred and this seems as it should be, a kind of just reward for his continuing contributions to television. I feel a little rueful to be saying a tribute to someone I thought was such a punk apprentice actor in "Design for Living," but a tribute is just what I do mean to pay.

By PADDY CHAYEFSKY

I don't suppose it will be too long before someone sits down to do a scholarly history of television. The movies were not much older when the first historian went to work on them. In about 10 years or so, 50-year-old men will meet in bars and talk about "the early days" of television, and small legends and little fantasies will grow up about the pioneer personalities of our industry. I don't think there is too much doubt but that Fred Coe will be the Paul Bunyan of television. He is something of a legend now; certainly no two writers I know can get together without talking about Fred, the furious little office he had on the fourth floor of the NBC building, and his cat-and-dog fights with the advertising agencies.

Whatever the legends are that grow up around Fred, this much is true now. There is nobody in the business who did more to give television its self-respect. If there is any renaissance of dramatic writing in our country, it will be directly traced to Fred's single-handed sponsorship of new playwrights in television. His arbitrary decisiveness, his acute story mind (the sharpest of any man I have known in show business), his passion for achievements make him the closest thing to an ideal producer. He is only 40 years or so old now and heaven alone knows in what other fields he will become a myth.

All I can say is my life would have been a great deal poorer if there had been no Fred Coe.

I think that is true of a lot of us.

By TAD MOSEL

For a writer, to write 500 words about Fred Coe is like doing an adaptation of his favorite book. He has so much respect and admiration for the original material, and there is so much that he would like to include, that the end result is likely to seem superficial and a little hurried. All he can do is to hit a few high points as he sees them, imply as much as he can, and express his regret at what he has had to omit.

My first meeting with Fred Coe came in the summer of 1953. I had written a television play which dealt openly with marital infidelity, and although several other producers had expressed interest in it, they—or their sponsors—were terrified of the "shocking" subject matter. Fred read the script, announced firmly that he would do it, and did it. Looking back, I feel sure he must have had to fight many censorship battles over that play, but I never knew about them. He has always felt that such battles are his concern, not the writer's. All he allowed me to know was that he thought the play was worthy of production, and with a man of his judgment, that is all a writer ever needs to know.

He is rightly known as a creative producer. He knows his writers and their capabilities, and he has a way of standing back, looking at them, and seeing their past, present, and future all at once, whereas the writer himself usually can see only the moment. There are times when a writer is convinced that he has written the last word he will ever be able to write, but Fred is always able to see one play more, and then another growing out of that. It is what he calls "continuity." When those wearying "dry" periods come, it is always stimulating to have a talk with him. He seldom makes open suggestions. I don't think I have ever heard him say "Why don't you write a play about—$" or "Here's a character that might interest you—" He just talks informally of many things—your work in general, books he has read, recent news events, perhaps you exchange reminiscences—and I don't know how it happens, but before you realize it, you have had an idea. He has an intuitive sense of this moment and calmly leads you in the direction you have chosen. Usually before you leave his office, the ideas are coming so thick and fast that you can hardly wait to get home and put them down on paper. And if they don't work out, if you become stymied again or come up with an inferior piece of work, he can always accept your failure with far more equanimity than you can, because he sees it as part of the growing process. To him, a writer is never as good as his last play, he's as good as his best one—which may not even be written yet.

It must be evident by now that I see him as a "writer's producer." Directors, actors, and audiences will disagree with me and claim him for themselves. I don't know how he manages to be important to us all at the same time. Perhaps it is because he believes, more than anything else, in giving everyone a chance to explore his potentialties.

Fred Coe has many futures—his own and those he has helped others to find.

By ROBERT ALAN AURTHUR

Of Fred's 10 years in television I have known him for five, worked closely with him for almost four and consider him not only as the best producer I have ever worked with in the medium but also, I hope, as my friend. Out of the years of the "Playhouse," "Peepers," "Bonino" and "First Person" there should be nine zillion anecdotes, funny and sad, that in the telling might even be something of a history of those five years; because, after all, one television show is just as chaotic as any other television show, one hysterical moment representative of all the hysterical moments, and all the funny and sad things that ever happened in this lunatic business must have happened to us.

But when the time came to sit at the typewriter, something was out of whack. It was as though everything I wanted to say sounded like a lament, a requiem to "the good old days." What a terrible business when "the good old days" only happened last week. And, come to think of it, what was so good about them? The money was really pretty lousy, the sponsors alternately miserable, the time never enough, the tempers always short, many of the shows utter failures and the general pressures sufficient to drive some of us bellowing to the analyst's couch.

Not So Much Fun Anymore

In spite of all that, it was fun; and somehow it just isn't as much fun anymore.

One of the reasons it was fun, probably the main reason, was because of Fred Coe. He was Big Daddy, Southern accent and all, and we were the family, and while we were growing up we had ourselves a ball. Fred was always a man to take a chance. He loved writers, and writers only love to be loved. He didn't mind living dangerously, and the best lesson you learn from Fred Coe is that the world is made up only of friends and enemies, and he teaches you to distinguish. Friends are those people who create, on whatever level, and enemies are those inhuman beings, on whatever level, dedicated to the destruction of the creative. By the pitch of Fred's shrieks of anguish you were never in any doubt as to who was doing what to whom. But Fred never compromised; he only lost battles—and there's a difference.

Anyway, we were a family in a certain time and place, and then the time and place passed by, and we were no longer a family. But what's to feel sad? What's to write laments and requiems? Everybody's doing real great, and even VARIETY recognizes that Fred Coe's 10 years in television is something to celebrate. Just surviving 10 years in our happy little medium is alone enough to make Fred Coe a People's Hero, if you'll pardon the dangerous, but seemingly apt for television, title.—

Survival, however, is far from Fred's single attribute. He left his definite mark in television and will continue to do so, because that's the only way he can operate. When he makes movies they will be good movies, and let no one be surprised when, in 10 years from now, we look back on his film accomplishments it will also be said that they were different movies, because he will be striving for something better and different.

Exactly five years ago this past month my first tele-

Fred Coe, at 12, Cut Some Campus Capers as Writer, Actor, Prod.-Dir.

Fred Coe is one of television's prized products whose impact on the medium has helped to give it stature and substance.

In his 10 years in tv, he has been closely identified with what are perhaps two of its greatest triumphs. He produced "Marty," the drama which has become a tv classic, and was chief of the television staff that gave the nation Mary Martin in "Peter Pan," viewed by the largest single network audience in tv history.

In 1953, his work won no fewer than three major awards—the Sylvania Award for "Marty," which he produced on the NBC-TV dramatic series, "Television Playhouse," and which subsequently became a motion picture success; the George Foster Peabody Television Award as "the most consistent producer of fine television drama," and the annual Look Magazine TV award for his all-around prdouction activities. Look again bestowed this honor on him in 1954. Last year, too, he won the VARIETY Showmanship Award.

Paddy Chayefsky, author of "Marty," has developed stature apace, winning honors in abundance until today he is in the first ranks of the medium's writers.

Coe was born in Alligator, Miss., Dec. 23, 1914. He attended school in Buckhorn, Ky., where his mother had gone as a Presbyterian mission nurse in what was considered rough mountain country. The family moved to Nashville and Coe attended Peabody College there from 1933 through 1937.

Coe was only 12 when he wrote his first class play. He was campus writer, actor, director and producer by the time he was 18. During 1937-8, he directed the Nashville Community Theatre on a dramatic fellowship. At the same time, he acted before the microphones of WSM in Nashville. He studied at the Yale Drama School in 1938-1940. After completing his formal dramatic studies, Coe directed the Civic Theatre in Columbia, S.C., for four years. In June, 1944, he tried his luck in New York. Almost a year later, when he seemed to be getting nowhere he prepared to return South to comparative security in little theatre work. The day following his decision NBC summoned him as the result of a previous interview.

Joining the network in April, 1945, as production assistant, Coe advanced rapidly. By January, 1946, he was writing, directing and producing network tv shows. He directed and subsequently produced Theatre Guild, ANTA and Kraft shows and became the producer, as well as occasional director and writer of the famed "Television Playhouse" from its inception on Oct. 3, 1948. With the advent of "Producers' Showcase" in the Fall of 1954, Coe was assigned to the hour-and-a-half, once-a-month, Spectacular programs. He remained with the "Showcase" program until the inception of "Playwrights 56" on Oct. 4, 1955.

Always with an eye to the experimental, Coe pioneered in adapting "Lights Out" and "The Clock," two famous radio series, for television, and Jimmy Savo's "Pantomime Theatre," a half-hour show without dialog. Among his outstanding television productions that have won audience acclaim are "Cyrano," "Mary Surratt," for Philco and "Our Town" for the Theatre Guild. His half-hour dramatic show, "First Person Singular," produced in June, 1946, in which he used his camera as the murderer, and the viewers identified themselves with the camera, is considered by many to be one of the finest television shows to date, and was the first time the camera was used as a "person" by either television or motion picture camera.

It was during his tenure as producer of "Television Playhouse" that the writers who are now the leaders in the medium were brought to the fore; among them Paddy Chayefsky, Horton Foote, Robert Alan Aurthur, Tad Mosel, David Shaw and Summer Locke Elliott.

He is married to the former Joyce Beeler.

A Man Of High Standards

Television's greatest day-to-day contributions have come from the live drama shows. And in this category Fred Coe is a giant. He is so acknowledged within the trade and the marathon period of his audience acceptance best bespeaks his popular recognition.

Spectaculars, variety shows, panel shows, documentaries, the occasional "big film premiere," the great ladies from the stage making their bows in the medium, the major sports events, and even the intra-mural competitions are all part of this new art form called television. But none has been as consistent as the live hour-length dramas. These have been the founts of creativity and the most advanced phase of the art of television entertainment.

And foremost in this has been Coe. Philco Playhouse, under his guidance, was the No. 1 dramatic show for years. It was a walkaway in terms of tv-to-Hollywood and tv-to-Broadway deals. It spawned more writers and directors and spotlighted more histrionic talents than any other similar package.

Coe set a standard of "integrity"—an overworked term—that was unmatched. His was an integrity from the standpoint of courage and showmanship adventure into the offbeat and the highbrow. This is what has given the tv drama its vitality, especially under the Coe imprint.

Nobody bats 1.000 and Coe has had his off-seasons too, notably this past year on "Playwrights '56," but his contribution is indelible.

In a day and age where the mass communications tend towards the stereotyped and the hackneyed, Coe's work has been standout. Show biz knows it. Show biz recognizes it. Show biz in this special section of VARIETY salutes him. It's a first in this sort of trade journalism for a personality in the relatively "new" art form called television. It is fitting that Fred Coe is the one to be saluted.

The Enemy

By J. P. MILLER

Sparks and The Grip and Audio were having a drink in Hurley's when The Newcomer joined them and the talk turned to Fred Coe.

"Is it true," Audio asked The Newcomer, "that this script of yours was just sent in, no agent sent it, you just sent it in and he bought it? Like that?"

"Well," said The Newcomer, "I wouldn't say he bought it—like that"

"Like that he bought it," said Audio to The Grip. "Hey, Otto, gimme beer."

"I got a cousin," said The Grip, "he's got an agent, electric typewriter, the whole bit. He musta sent out 50 scrips. Nothin'." He returned to Sparks. "How often you think that'll happen, on the average? A guy sends in a scrip and it gets bought—like that?"

"Don't ask me," said Sparks, "I'm off duty." He pushed his drink out of the way and laid his head on the bar.

"I know Coe since he was this high," said Audio. "He's got it here." He took a sip of his new beer.

"How about the time he bet this director he could watch dress rehearsal and remember every shot," said The Grip. "He did it, too."

"Not only he's got it here, but when you need hollerin' he can holler you," said Audio.

"You tellin' me," said The Grip.

"You know what Coe is?" asked Sparks. But he didn't take his head off the bar.

"He's a driver," said Audio, "He drives you. He wants it right, not wrong. He hates bloopers like rat poison."

"You know what Coe is?" asked Sparks. He raised his head to make a point.

"He's tough, but he's sensitive," said Audio.

"You tellin' me," said The Grip.

Sparks rested his head on the bar again, and closed his eyes.

'He Can Holler You'

Audio raised his glass to his mouth, stuck out his upper lip, and tried to take a bite of foam.

The Grip nodded solemnly. "When you need hollerin' he can holler you," he said.

"He knows scripts," The Newcomer ventured. "He opened mine up and showed me what made it tick."

"Best story mind in the country," said Audio.

"How you know?" asked The Grip. There was a challenge in his voice.

Audio glanced at The Grip's drink and then at him. "How do I know? I know."

The Grip shrugged. "Hey, Otto," he said.

"I did a thing for one of those 30-minute crime-against-man programs once," The Newcomer said. "Friends of mine helped me with it. They rewrote it so I didn't recognize it. Didn't know who was going to be in it, or when it was going to be on. But this is just like the theatre. I do my own rewrites, help with the casting, sit in a rehearsals—it's great."

"Just like the theatre," said Audio. "Exactly."

"How do you know?" asked The Grip. "You never worked in the theatre."

"How do I know? I know!" Audio was annoyed.

Sparks raised his head. "You know what Coe is?" He asked. "I'll tell you what he is. I figured him out. He's the implacable enemy—"

"The what enemy? asked Audio.

"The implacable enemy—"

"Implacable!"

That means," said Sparks, trying to be patient, "that he can't be—that you can't—plac him."

"Plac 'im!"

"Oh, never mind," said Sparks. "I'm off duty." He put his head back down on the bar.

"Gee, I'm due in 8G, said The Grip.

"I gotta shove, too," said Audio. He and The Grip went out.

The Newcomer ordered another drink.

Sparks raised his head. "Hey, Otto," he said, "you know what he is? He's the implacable enemy of mediocrity."

"Who?"

"Never mind," said Sparks. "I'm off duty, anyhow."

By HORTON FOOTE

Beginning in the spring of 1952 and continuing until February of this year, Fred Coe has produced 11 hour plays and two half-hour plays of mine. When one considers the total number of plays he has produced for the medium, my own contribution to that total is, of course, minute. But it has been an association that has greatly influenced me as a writer and one for which I will always be grateful.

So much has been written about him these past years, of his contributions to the medium and his devotion to the writer, that it is difficult to say anything new. I would like to make this one observation. A producer in television is called upon in a year to do plays in many varying styles and locales. One week, realism, the next, fantasy or melodrama; one week set in the American Far West, the next in Asia or Europe. Coe has the faculty to seem equally at home in Tad Mosel's midwest or Paddy Chayefsky's Bronx, in Thornton Wilder's New England and New Jersey or Tennessee Williams' Mississippi. As a producer, when working on a play, he is always interested in supporting the author's style and point of view, in working to bring out what is best in that style and point of view, not in imposing one of his own. I think this is why authors trust him and like to work with him; they feel he is interested in understanding first what they are trying to do, and then in helping them to attain that, not in redoing their work to fit some preconceived notions of his own.

Ten years is a long time in the life of television. Fred Coe has achieved a very great deal for himself and others in his first 10 years of working there, but I believe that for a man of his energy and of his creative restlessness his achievements are just beginning.

Fred Coe And Music

By HARRY SOSNIK

There are many talented men in television who are successful but there are very few men in the producing field whose talents are well rounded enough to enable them to make a thorough and completely intelligent analysis of all of the elements comprising a dramatic show and have the ability to evaluate music as well as the other more commonly known elements such as camera, lights, etc. Also what is tremendously important, to have the ability to use these various units to bring out the best in the story, and since this article is about music, how to use music to its fullest advantage.

A man who understands all of these elements and above all appreciates the importance of live music handled properly is Fred Coe. In this understanding which Coe has, he inadvertently is one of the oustanding contributors to the cause of live music, since he shows the correct usage of what is the most neglected element in the television world and also uses another somewhat rare sense; that of good taste in music.

If more producers used his analysis of the contributing values of music and realized that television has grown beyond the infant stage and is today a powerful and adult medium in which the end result is as strong as its weakest link, I'm sure that there would at least be an attempt made at a greater understanding of the importance of music and a realization of the bad habits and mediocrity that now prevail.

From the first time I met Fred Coe in 1949 while we were doing the original "Philco Playhouse" in the early pioneering days, I realized that even then here was a man who was striving for something that no one else thought could be done and furthermore was not interested in attempting. When I think back at the various shows we attempted at that time with no budget and primitive equipment and knowledge and how Coe studied every detail of every department and absorbed their values it is no mystery to me as to why he is so thoroughly equipped to be the capable producer that he is.

Through the years whenever Coe was able to set aside money for music our association was renewed and I have as a result been able to watch his development. And when our association was renewed again on "Producers' Showcase" and "Playwrights" I realized that all of his hard work and study had "paid off." Here today is a completely and thoroughly capable producer in every department.

It gives me a great deal of personal satisfaction today to intelligently discuss and solve problems musically as an important part of a show and proves that music is not an expendable art as some people seem to feel. I'm sure this is only because of lack of knowledge.

cilled in for at least three drama specs in the same time period. Tentatively skedded for this 9-10:30 outing is Maurice Evans in "Dial M for Murder" and "Man and Superman." Hallmark is also set for three color specs in the 7.30-9 period next fall, these being of the vapiety genre. ABC's afternoon plans call for dramatic-adventure-kiddie programming, but "Omnibus" will represent it in the pubservice vein in the evening.

Still Needs Masterminding

Apart from the "See It Now" vs. "WWW"-plus-telementaries, the Sunday jockeying leaves room for a lot of masterminding. For one thing, CBS must fill the 5-6 hour three weeks out of four, and one prospective candidate for a half-hour is "Air Power," Columbia's long-in-the-works answer to "Victory at Sea." The Air Force documentary series has been in work now for more than two years and is said to be just about ready for exposure. The other half-hour, probably 5:30-6, would in all likelihood go to one of the three shows currently occupying 4:30-6 on CBS —Eric Sevareid, "Adventure" and "Face the Nation." Should it be "Face the Nation," this would pose an interesting competitive picture, since NBC is seriously considering a program switch that would bring "Meet the Press" into the 5:30-6 period and "Captain Gallant" into "Press'" current 6-6:30 slot as a lead-in to "Roy Rogers." "Press" and "Nation" are cut out of the same panel cloth.

The CBS lineup is by no means definite, however. Public affairs chief Irving Gitlin has a half-dozen new series projects in the house, any of which might go into that 5-6 time. Moreover, he's working on a dozen "specials," a la the twice-shown "Out of Darkness" mental health documentary. These are already in the research stage, with some even scripted, and Gitlin adds that at least 10 large corporations are ready to plow sponsor coin into them, if and when scheduling can be worked out. One problem: there is the early afternoon pro football lineup on the web, which starts Sept. 30 and runs through every Sunday to Dec. 23, with each game set to start at 2 p.m.

As to that newfound commercial potential in the introspec field, there's General Motors as a virtual certainty to ride with "WWW" next season. Success of Norelco with the Hitler telementary opens a wide range of potential sponsors for the such NBC offerings. On the CBS side, there's likely to be some black-ink marks on "See It Now," in view of the Shulton bankrolling of the two-part Africa report just completed and the fact that CBS has earmarked a steady "See It" Sunday diet after a season of random preempting. Gitlin states that Wyeth Labs, which sponsored the repeat on "Out of Darkness," has put in an option for any more medical-type documentaries done by the pubaffairs department, and that some nine other companies are standing in line for a looksee at other projects.

Telementaries, with the "reality" approach, will cover the topics of segregation, education, science, and will do political-social-economic-historical studies of key countries (see separate story). "See It" already has automation and guided missiles on the drawing board as topics (Friendly hopes that the controversial edge won't be worn off the missiles subject by the time he gets to it in terms of its present-day frontpage position). "WWW" gets the international flavor next fall via exec producer Barry Wood's and NBC pubaffairs v.p. Davidson Taylor's current huddles with Eurovision execs on kinescoped-in-Europe subjects for the fall.

Fred Coe marked his 10th year in television last night (Tues.) by taking over the directing on the NBC-TV "Playwrights 56" of which he's producer. Play was "Keyhole," by Sumner Locke Elliott.

Coe hasn't staged a teleplay in several years, since exiting Philco "TV Playhouse" which he pioneered as its producer.

A Show Biz Coe-alition

After 10 years of toiling in the NBC-TV vineyards as one of its foremost producers (and in the process incepting a whole new school of creative playwrighting-directional talent destined to leave its mark on all of show business) Fred Coe is now ready to spread his own wings in doubling into other facets of entertainment, notably the stage and the screen.

Coe is in the process of preparing production on a new drama by Tad Mosel (himself a "graduate" of the Coe school of dramaturgy) which is tentatively titled "The Five-Dollar Bill." This is Mosel's first full-length original play, being conceived for the theatre rather than for tv.

Hollywood beckons Coe to ride herd on the production reins for a screen version of Gore Vidal's tv play, "The Death of Billy the Kid," which is on the Warners' upcoming roster. Paul Newman, no stranger to Coe tv production, is slated for the title role.

The properties "out of the Coe tv shop" that have done (or are scheduled to do) Broadway and Hollywood duty as stage and pix fare add up to an impressive list. All initially projected on Coe's ex-Philco-Goodyear Sunday night series, they include:

"Little Boy Lost"—which was made into a film for Bing Crosby.

"Queen Bee"—which became a film vehicle for Joan Crawford and Betsy Palmer.

"Marty"—the Paddy Chayefsky tv drama that, as a Hecht-Lancaster film production, ran off with most of this year's Oscar awards.

"The Bachelor Party"—another Chayfesky drama scheduled for film production this summer.

"Trip to Bountiful"—the Horton Foote tv drama which was done as a Broadway play by the Theatre Guild (and which was coproduced by Coe.)

"Double Jeopardy"—David Shaw's ex-Philco drama scheduled for film production by Columbia.

"A Very Special Baby"—also done originally on the Philco-Goodyear series, scheduled for Broadway stage presentation starring Ezio Pinza.

NBC-TV DICKERS SG ON 'MYSTERY WRITERS'

No sooner did NBC-TV wrap up "Circus Boy" for Reynolds Metal next season than the web began talks with Screen Gems on another of its half-hour film packages, "Mystery Writers Theatre," it's reported. Web is said to want to tie the property up, without any sponsor implicit in the deal.

"Mystery Writers," of which SG has a couple in the can, stars George Sanders as host.

truck and a jack. The pickup runs out of gas, but Conte drags himself to his truck and frees the kid just as the law arrives in pursuit. (Incidentally, although young Eyer has been pinned under the truck for hours, he's unscathed when he emerges.)

Conte manages to make the main theme—his growing affection for the boy—convincing despite the plot gaps. Young Eyer is somewhat wooden in his characterization and Lizabeth Scott, despite her star billing, is wasted in what amounts to a bit as Conte's wife. In support, Muse, too long missing from the screen, registers solidly, as does Griffith.

Jules Bricken's direction does little to alleviate the plot weaknesses, but manages to punch the central idea across. Kove.

See It Now

Ed Murrow's second and final half of his "Report From Africa" was another instructive and arresting stanza on CBS-TV last Thursday night (17). While it may have lacked the impact of the report's "Part One," it was nonetheless an excellent example of video journalism which is able to give vivid coverage to news-making issues and personalities.

"Part Two" was devoted to the northern tier of African countries and colonies which are currently boiling over in their fight for nationhood. Much of the show was consumed by interviews with the leading political figures of such countries as Ethiopia, Libia, Egypt, Sudan, etc. The shots of Emperor Hailie Selassie of Ethiopia and Col. Nasser, of Egypt among others, were interesting, but on the formal side.

Perhaps this show was weakened by its effort to cover too much territory. It was best when it focussed on the single most important issue on the African continent—native vs. European—in the show's coverage of the Algerian problem. Here interviews with the French military and civilian chiefs were contrasted with a statement from an Algerian nationalist, now in the U.S.

Although there were numerous mob scenes, another lack in the show was its general failure to define the issues in terms of the African individual. There were some shots of the Point Four program in actual operation, but these also had a formal character. But no one-hour show can be rapped for failing to light the Dark Continent up completely. Murrow and his crew did succeed in putting an objective spotlight on a vital political arena. Herm.

The Valiant (London)

Taking advantage of Eartha Kitt's presence in London, BBC-TV made major changes in "The Valiant," a 30-minute play by Holsworthy Hall and Robert Middlemass to enable her to play the the dramatic lead. The effort was well worth while and the production was one of the most engrossing seen in Britain for a long time.

As the condemned murderess who declined to reveal her identity, Miss Kitt was emotionally restricted by the subject matter itself, as well as the restrained direction by Anthony Pelissier. Nevertheless, she created the maximum dramatic tension and revealed considerable professionalism as an actress.

The drama, infinitely more absorbing than the usual run of halfhour plays, could have done with a better supporting cast. But it was the star's name value which created viewing interest and which made the production a dramatic success. Myro.

General Electric Theatre

NBC-TV's "Hit Parade" thrush Gisele MacKenzie switched over to CBS-TV's "General Electric Theatre" Sunday (20) for a straight dramatic fling. NBC has the better part of MacKenzie.

She tried hard, however, to make a thankless role palatable. The script, though, was too much of a barrier and all she could do was look dewey-eyed in a low key dramatic setting.

The half-hour play, titled "The Hat With The Roses," centered on a girl's college algebra teacher and a hassle with a rich, spoiled stude whom she flunked. In an act of girlish vengeance, the juve sends the teacher an odd looking hat decked with roses with a forged note from the local pharmacist. The gag boomerangs, however, and the hat stirs up a romance between the teacher and the pharmacist. The brat sees the error of her ways and everybody's in good spirits before the final commercial.

Supporting cast did its best with the trite dialog and plotting. Ronald Reagan was the affable host. Gros.

Paul Winchell Show

Paul Winchell headed up a lively revue substituting for Arthur Godfrey's regular Wednesday night show last week (16). Although it fell down in the humor department, stanza had enough bounce and energy to make it an attractive 60-minute outing.

The show was fresh in concept and moved along with an easy springtime lilt. Only drawback was the overemphasis on Winchell and his dummy Jerry Mahoney. Both wore thin as the hour moved along.

Show came back into proper focus when the accent was on song and dance with guesters Bobby Van and Jaye P. Morgan and an attractive line of boy and girl terpsters. Van came off well singing and tapping to "Too Darn Hot" and "Adelaide" while Miss Morgan got a "Hit Parade"-styled showcasing of her current disk release, "Play For Keeps." She got a similar treatment for "Too Close For Comfort," which has been put into the groove by others. In addition to Winchell's solo stints, there was a sketch insertion, a takeoff on "Medic" tagged "Surgery," in which he was assisted by the guest duo. The sketch was D.O.A.

The special words and music supplied by Ervin Drake and Jimmy Shirl brought a musicomedy flavor and gave the line a chance to do some neat stepping (choreographed by John Butler). Gros.

On The Carousel

WCBS-TV's "On the Carousel" preemed a new "Tubby the Tuba" episode last Saturday (19) morning. The "Tubby" series is designed for the kiddies and the latest entry, "Tubby the Tuba Goes to Town," registered as good moppet material. Written by "Carousel" host Paul Tripp and George Kleinsinger, the new offering had the tuba joining a jazz band after a long career with a symphony orch. The piece ran seven minutes and was given a smooth narration by Tripp.

Other aspects of the hour-long juve show included a looksee at some animals from Story Book Farm, Parsippany, N. J., an interview with Alice Gray of the Museum of Natural History, N. Y., musical offerings by an accordion band from PS 105, Bronx, N. Y., and a presentation of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" by students of PS 19, N. Y. Jess.

Telephone Time

The half-hour vidfilm anthology didn't have a place in the CBS-TV Sunday afternoon structure until six weeks ago, and while the format may never really titillate the noodles of the Sabbath's culture-hungry, the caper it's cutting, is of presentable quality. Last week (20), Donald Sanford adapted one of the stories narrator Nesbitt originally did for his film short series, "Passing Parade," into a palatable blending of sentimentality and melodrama.

Osa Massen and Steven Geray toplined "Time Bomb," about a search for a diabetic's life-sustaining insulin which, Nesbitt said, was based on incidents in the lives of a married Czech couple in Japoccupied Shanghai during World War II. The real-life tag pre-ordained the wife's salvation, thus grabbing away the drama's essential impact for the viewer. Even so, most of characters were credible, and Sanford's plot was well-oiled. Unable to get insulin through regular channels when the Japs took over, Victor Saxl, a role Geray gave humility and determination, went on the prowl for black-market stuff. When the illegally-delivered drug killed another diabetic, Saxl, a textile engineer by profesh, teamed up with a European doctor and a Chinese biochemist to manufacture their own. Time was the big dramatic element, for when the project was started the wife had a 29-day supply left. Manufacturing the stuff wasn't too hard, but, for the inexperienced trio, the slightest slip couldn't have killed Mrs. Saxl. As Miss Massen played her, the diabetic wife was on the childish side, though the lines didn't force her to that road. Art.

Tartan Hot on Weather

Tartan (suntan lotion) division of McKesson & Robbins has returned to weathercast sponsorship on WABC-TV, the ABC flagship in N. Y. Drug outfit has picked up the Thursday segment of Janet Tyler's 6:55 p.m. "Weather Girl" strip.

Same sponsor, via the Ellington agency, used to bankroll Scotty Scott when she was the weather girl on the station.

$2,000,000 Culture Grant on Tap For British Com'l TV

London, May 22.

Within the next two or three weeks the Government is to decide whether it will okay a request from the Independent Television Authority for a $2,000,000 grant to finance cultural and serious programs on Britain's growing commercial tv network. The coin could be drawn from license fees paid by viewers for BBC-TV programs.

The Television Act, which controls the operation of the commercial web, allows for such a grant to the ITA in order to insure balanced programming on the opposition outlets. Experience in the past few months has shown that the commercial programmers have usually succeeded in attracting their biggest audiences with big name vaude houses, quiz programs and strong drama subjects. Discussion programs, classical music, etc., have failed to draw a big viewing public and as advertising rates are keyed to audiences, there has been a noticeable slackening off in cultural entertainment.

The ITA believe that there is a potential audience for more serious programs and in due course the public could be attracted to them. In the meantime, the program contractors appear a little shy in doing this expensive pioneering job.

KPIX Pubservice Push

San Francisco, May 22.

KPIX, Westinghouse-CBS outlet in Frisco, is pushing local programming hard, spent $3,000 last week publicizing a three-part public service series on rapid transit which started Thursday (17) night.

Major portion of this money was spent for radio spots on four stations—KSFO and KYA, Frisco, and KLX and KROW, Oakland. All spots were placed between 4 and 6 p.m. to catch commuter traffic which, presumably, would be interested in "Decision or Dilemma," the tv show.

TV Comes to Guatemala With Bundle Of Ziv Telefilms Dubbed in Spanish

Guatemala City, C. A., May 22.

Commercial television came to Central America last week with the commencement of operations by TGBOL-TV on channel 3 in Guatemala City on a five-hour daily schedule. The format will be expanded as programs and sponsors become available.

Opening ceremonies took on an international character as performers from three hemisphere countries participated. Following a salute from President Castillo Armas and dedication by the Archbishop of Guatemala, the station put on Crusty Drybread (Senor Panseco) and his Miami orchestra; Nick Carrado and his trained chimp (Mr. Cocomo), who perform on Miami's WTVJ; Jose Martinez, Miami singer; Pete Evans and Marionettes from Miami; Tony Moro, "Panamas; Nat King Cole," who is appearing nightly at the local Club Pigalle; The Mariaches, a local voice trio, and Adreas Archila, conductor of the Guatemala Symphony.

For its regular fare, the station will carry all Ziv shows, including "Cisco Kid" (Ceesco Keed), "Mr. District Attorney" (Senor Fiscal), and "I Led Three Lives" (Tres Vides). These shows are dubbed in Spanish at a Ziv studio in Mexico City.

Both U. S. and Guatemalan money are behind the new enterprise. Principal stockholders are Mario Bolanos, Guatemala theatre operator; Rafael Herrera, Guatemala coffee grower; J. H. Wilson, Jr., a director of Pan American Airways who lives in Guatemala; Emil Dubiel, an American citizen now living here; and A. Frank Katzentine, owner of radio station WKAT in Miami whose application for channel 10 has received an FCC examiner's initial decision.

Katzentine has been spending the last week in Guatemala preparing for the station's inaugural and arranging its program format. Lou Evandon, Jacksonville consulting engineer, and Art Smith, chief engineer of WKAT, have been training Guatemalans—and running a school in the process—for the technical chores.

Operating with only a 124-foot antenna and 15,000-watts power, the station is said to send out a signal as good as any in the U. S. Sets installed at Bananera, a United Fruit Co. installation near Puerto Barrios, nearly 125 miles away, were able to get good reception. In other locations 50 miles away, clear pictures were received without antennas. Guatemala City's elevation, nearly 5,000 feet, partly explains it. But Evandon thinks the fact that the city is in a bowl surrounded by extremely high mountains, some up to 13,000 feet, may be a contributing factor. At any rate, he feels confident the station will cover half the country, which is almost the size of Ohio.

Sets in use are estimated at 5,000 to 6,000 and Katzentine expects that 30,000 will be in circulation within a year. An RCA dealer is reported to have sold his entire allotment of 34 sets in one day. Other popular sets are Sylvania, Philco, G-E, Telefunken and Phillips. British, French and German makes are also displayed. Prices begin at $185 for 17-inch receivers, with terms as low as $13.75 down.

Meanwhile, the government tv station, TGW-TV, under the direction of Jose Toron Barrios, plans to go on a 10-hour daily schedule beginning July 3 when a new high power transmitter is installed. It is reported also that a second commercial station is being planned.

Camel's Nix on Caesar

Last week, R. J. Reynolds (Camel Cigs) was reported looking favorably on sponsoring Sid Caesar's NBC-TV hour show next season in his switch to Saturday night. This week, the weed house decided to pass up the Caesar stanza for a third of the pie.

No word yet on whether Quaker Oats has firmed up its one-third share. Down for one-sixth segments are Knomark Mfg. and Bab-O.

thing Cool" and "Very Warm for May," expertly sold, depart from the usual local vocal pattern.

Male warbler Bill Carson also rates kudos for his vocalizing and the fact that his numbers, too, veered away from the ordinary, and were well chosen. Snappy swing by a nifty instrumental trio provided welcome diversity.

Photography and lighting, as well as direction and writing, bespoke imagination, taste and talent. Rees.

N.Y. DRAMA CRITICS CIRCLE AWARDS
With Walter F. Kerr, Robert L. Josephs, Alan Jay Lerner, Frances Goodrich, Albert Hackett
10 Mins., Sun. (20), 8:45 p.m.
WABD, N.Y.

WABD was a little behind the times last Sunday (20) in devoting approximately 10 minutes to this year's N.Y. Drama Critics Circle Awards. The reviewers made and announced their selections five weeks ago. The tele presentation of the crix commendations was made by Walter F. Kerr, Herald Tribune aislesitter and Circle president.

Kerr was poised and exhibited a pleasant speaking voice in presenting awards to Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett, adaptors of "Diary of Anne Frank" (best play), Alan Jay Lerner, book adaptor and lyricist for "My Fair Lady" (best musical) and Robert L. Josephs, producer of "Tiger at the Gates" (best foreign play). The awards were received graciously, with each of the recipients passing along credit to others. Jess.

Carroll Carroll to NBC

Carroll Carroll, longtime radio writer for Bing Crosby and tv scripter for his brother, Bob, joined NBC's creative television staff.

He'll develop writers and talent for the net's variety shows and specs.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

Incorporated almost as a postscript in the current report of NBC's CART (Continuity Acceptance Radio-TV) is the news that the Stockton Helffrich-headed department will receive an award tomorrow (Thurs.).

Cart will be cited by the Child Welfare League, an affiliate of Committee on Education by Television of the National Social Welfare Assembly. It's the first such award to be given a specific department like continuity acceptance.

Screen Gems, which produces "Adventures of Rin Tin Tin," is capitalizing on the magazine scramble for tv profiles. It gets three-ply treatment in the slicks this month on the half-hour vidfilm.

Redbook, This Week and Pictorial Review are carrying stories this month about the canine. Combined circulation—over 20,000,000.

Mag-tv writer Walter Bernstein is beginning the latest in training schools for video professionals. He's starting a series of informal clinics on video writing.

Working with classes of 10, made up of tv producers, story editors and the like, he's inviting various tv execs and editors to appear as lecturers at the setup in his Manhattan home. Formerly a New Yorker scribe, Bernstein has credits on "Studio One," "Philco Playhouse" and other shows.

Production of radio and television sets for the first quarter of 1956 ran behind the comparable period of last year.

Figures compiled by the Radio-Electronics-Television Manufacturers Assn. show an output of 1,844,632 tv sets and 3,532,243 radio receivers during the first three months of this year. For the first quarter of 1955, production was 2,188,252 tv units and 3,640,144 radio sets.

March 1956 production amounted to 680,003 video sets and 1,360,113 radios; of the television units, 82,805 included UHF tuners; 833 receivers also had built-in FM radio receivers.

Eddie Davis' new 25-center, "Gag Writer's Private Joke Book" A. A. Wyn, via Ace) is a naughtier title than the contents which, of course, do contain material above the Elsie Dinsmore age. Davis is the ex-cabdriver whom Eddie Cantor took off his caboose and converted into a material-supplyer, which Davis has been doing since for other funsters like Gleason, Durante, Berle, Wynn, et al.

Remington Rand Buys NBC-TV 'News Caravan'

Remington Rand has become the first to fall in line on NBC-TV's "News Caravan." It comes aboard July 3 for a firm 52-week ride in the Tuesday segment. Plymouth had already axed Wednesday and Friday. Camels, which has also put in for shelving the show it pioneered back in 1947, will probably stick it out until year's end.

With the R. J. Reynolds house repped Monday, Tuesday and Thursday, that makes four slots open for bids.

VARIETY - ARB City-By-City Syndicated and National Spot Film Chart

VARIETY'S weekly chart of city-by-city ratings of syndicated and national spot film covers 40 to 60 cities reported by American Research Bureau on a monthly basis. Cities will be rotated each week, with the 10 top-rated film shows listed in each case, and their competition shown opposite. All ratings are furnished by ARB, based on the latest reports.

This VARIETY chart represents a gathering of all pertinent information about film in each market, which can be used by distributors, agencies, stations and clients as an aid in determining the effectiveness of a filmed show in the specific market. Attention should be paid to time—day and time factors, since sets-in-use and audience composition vary according to time slot, i.e., a Saturday afternoon children's show, with a low rating, may have a large share and an audience composed largely of children, with corresponding results for the sponsor aiming at the children's market. Abbreviations and symbols are as follows: (Adv), adventure; (Ch), children's; (Co), comedy; (Dr), drama; (Doc), documentary; (Mus), musical; (Myst), mystery; (Q), quiz; (Sp), sports; (W), western; (Wom), women's. Numbered symbols next to station call letters represent the station's channel; all channels above 13 are UHF. Those ad agencies listed as distributors rep the national sponsor for whom the film is aired.

LANDAU & UNGER'S BIG PLANS

Aussie Budget For U.S. Telepix Runs Out As TPA Sells Four More Series

Sale by Television Programs of America of four more of its shows to the commercial tv interests in Australia should just about close the book on American telepix sales to Down Under for another two years. Because of dollar export restrictions on the Aussies, all the new stations have just about spent all they are allowed under a two-year quota and are already heavily stocked on programming for that period.

Virtually impossible to get an exact figure on what the four Aussie companies—these including the Government - owned Australian Broadcasting Commission, but authoritative sources indicate that it's somewhere between $1,250,000 and $1,500,000 in the purchase of over 40 program series for periods ranging from two to three years. Difficulties in figuring an exact amount stem from (1) no real price system, since there are virtually no sets on which to base circulation figures, with prices varying from $175 to $400 per subject in each market, (2) difference in the contracts for series, which vary from two to three years and from two runs per pic to five or six and (3) differences in the number of films involved in each series, from 26 to 117 half-hours.

Some telefilm outfits here believe they took an unnecessary beating on terms in their deals and are vowing it won't happen again two years hence. Reason for it was overeagerness for some extra foreign coin on the part of some companies that broke down the price structure before it was even established. Distribs admit there's no basis on which to fix a price; some stated they based their prices on what they anticipate set circulation will be in two years; others, more candid, admitted that they asked what they felt they could get and that the Aussies countered with they thought was the least they could get the pix for.

In looking at the future, syndicators feel they can realistically

UA-OF's 'Intrigue' Cross-Plug Pattern

Growing trend of television-theatre cross-plugging got a pair of new advocates this week in United Artists and Official Films for the new "Foreign Intrigue" feature. Official, which has the reruns of the "Intrigue" television show in 87 cities under different titles, has tied in with UA on the upcoming feature version starring Robert Mitchum.

Under the cross-plug campaign, Official is making available to all stations carrying the programs a telop plugging the picture, while UA is furnishing theatres with three slides, each bearing the re-run titles of "Intrigue" (titles are "Overseas Adventure" (James Daly), "Cross Current" (Gerald Mohr) and "Dateline Europe" (Jerome Thor), with both tv and theatre slides giving top billing to producer Sheldon Reynolds. Campaign would involve tie-ins with local sponsors, window and lobby displays, etc. Al Tamarin of UA and John Newman of Official set the deal.

Cross-plugs of a different type are envisaged by Ziv Television and Marty Melcher's indie Arwin Productions, turning out the Barry Sullivan-Doris Day starrer, "Julie," for Metro release. Sullivan stars in Ziv's "Man Called X," and Melcher will try to work out a Ziv-Metro tie in which both will bear the costs for a cross-country personal appearance tour by Sullivan on which he'd plug both the picture and series in interviews and radio-tv appearances. Tour of a similar type was underwritten by Paramount and NBC Television Films a couple of years ago for Charles McGraw, to plug "The Bridges at Toko-Ri" for Par and "The Falcon" series for NBC.

Autry Pix to BBC

Hollywood, May 22.

BBC has bought 52 vidfilms from Gene Autry's Flying A Productions.

Included in the deal are 13 Autry videoaters; 13 "Buffalo Bill Jr."; 26 "Adventures of Champion." Deal is also being negotiated for Associated Broadcasting Corp., British commercial tv outfit, to buy same vidfilmery's "Annie Oakley" vidpix.

'Annie Oakley's' 2-Year Renewals Fetch $2,000,000

What in effect is the longest sponsorship commitment yet in the syndicated film field — through January of 1959—was signed by CBS Television Film Sales last week with the pacting of Carnation Milk and Continental Baking to two-year renewals on the "Annie Oakley" series. The renewals, which combined run over $2,000,000, are for two years each on alternate-week sponsorships, with Carnation's renewal effective in October and Continental's next January, bringing the show into 1959. Time charges will bring total coin to $6,000,000.

Under the renewal pattern, Carnation signs for 141 markets on alternate weeks, Continental for 73 also on a skip-week basis. Two sponsors alternate on the show in 57 markets; elsewhere, they alternate with local or regional sponsors. Series is current in 167 markets on a rerun basis. Renewals were set by Film Sales general sales chief Bill Edwards.

Flying A Productions, which owns the package, is planning production of 35 more of the Gail Davis starrers within the next few months, these to last through the run of the contracts. In the can already are 52 episodes, covering the past two and a half years.

CINEMA-VUE PREPS KIDFILM 'FESTIVAL'

Cinema-Vue Corp. is readying an offbeat package in the syndication sweepstakes, an hour-long kiddie-slanted "variety" show with the tentative title of "Film Festival." The 52 shows in the package, soon to be released, would each include a western, a cartoon and an animal subject.

All the films are at hand, via Cinema - Vue's program source, Cinepix Labs, and the films are in the process of editing, with the westerns being cut down from feature pix and the cartoons to be selected from the "Whimseyland" package. Undecided yet is whether Cinema-Vue will shoot in a filmed host or leave the package as an open-ender for stations to supply a live local emcee.

Similar package of edited westerns, with Gabby Hayes shot in as host of the half-hours, scored a network deal recently when Popsicle bought it from UM&M (via MPTV, Eliot Hyman and Stone Associates) for a summer run on ABC-TV.

Axed 'Readers Digest' Going Into Syndication

Hollywood, May 22.

Following Studebaker-Packard's axing of producer Chester Erskine's "Readers Digest" vidpix series on ABC-TV, Erskine is making plans to put the 78 telefilms he's canned into syndication.

Sponsor pullout is believed due to the current slump in new car sales.

$40,000,000 AT NTA'S DISPOSAL

By BOB CHANDLER

Having shelled out over $6,000,000 in cash and commitments in its purchase of UM&M TV Corp. and its 10-year leasehold on 52 top-quality 20th-Fox features, National Telefilm Associates has no intentions of stopping there. Longrange plans for the company, according to prez Ely Landau and exec v.p. Oliver Unger, call for continued acquisition of major studio backlogs plus entrance into the programming field on a wide scale in time for the next selling season.

Landau and Unger believe that top features will "create their own playing time" on the stations, and that there is no real saturation point if the pictures are good. For this reason, NTA will eschew the program syndication field completely (except for its present product plus probably the syndicated shows acquired through UM&M) and concentrate in the programming field on new shows for national sale. As for station sales, it's to be features and the recently acquired cartoon and short subject libraries only.

With some tall coin at their disposal, said to be in the neighborhood of $40,000,000, Landau and Unger are still talking a variety of deals. They are still very much in the picture at Metro and they are talking a complete library deal for the 780 features involved. While they wouldn't verify it, the report has it that they have offered $35,000,000 cash for a longterm lease deal on the backlog and are preparing to go higher. Meanwhile, they've achieved a "friendly relationship" with Paramount via the back-door, since they now own negative rights to the 1,450 Par shorts via the UM&M buyup. The 20th deal, they believe, is the beginning of a relationship which will assure them of a "continued flow of top product" from the studio, and they are talking with other top supply sources, among them Sam Goldwyn.

Partnership Deals

On the programming side, they went into their first national project this year, the Desilu-produced "Sheriff of Cochise," which they are peddling for national sale, and they envisage next year a wide variety of pilot projects for national sale, done largely on a coproduction basis with top Coast telefilm studios and major motion picture studios expanding into tv production. Arrangements would be for the most part partnership deals with NTA handling the selling. Because these properties would all be put up for national sale, no production for syndication is contemplated. NTA feels that the emergence of top features will take up most of the playing time now used for syndicated film.

Company has evolved to the point in feature film sales where it's the feature counterpart of Ziv in the programming field—that is,

UPA Sets Up a British TV Subsid, Envisions Lots of Loot on Spots

D.C. Hearing May 31

Telefilm industry group of five companies—Ziv, Television Programs of America, Official and Guild Films and Screen Gems—will deliver its testimony on network practices to the Barrow Committee of the FCC in Washington on May 31. No decision yet on who among the execs of the five companies will deliver the actual testimony, although all the company presidents will probably be present.

Expected that the group will soft-pedal charges of monopoly against the webs and instead press for a solution to the allocations problem on the basis that all the current problems vis-a-vis networks could be solved with more stations on the air.

Hollywood, May 22.

An order for a tv spot from the London Daily Mail gave UPA Pictures, Inc., Hollywood animation outfit, its entry into British tv, prexy Stephen Bosustow disclosed on his return from setting up London headquarters. Company estimates it will spend about $140,000 operating the British branch for the next year.

However, Bosustow said, the animation firm's survey of the British market indicate a hefty potential. UPA was given a greenlight by both the Ministry of Labor and the Board of Trade and approved by George Elvin of the British Association of Cine Technicians, presumption being, of course, that the UPA operation will bring additional employment for English artists.

Full production facilities for the British and other European sponsors will be completed by first of the year, Bosustow declared. Company also is now ready to undertake foreign orders, to be completed in UPA's N.Y. studio where the London plant won't be capable of undertaking the full task.

While it's UPA's plan to hire and train English artists in the UPA style of animation, company will immediately launch a rotating plan of sending its key personnel, from both its Burbank and N. Y. studios, to London. Plan is to select five or six key men at intervals, about every five to six months, for at least a six-month stay at company's London studio. Bosustow reported yesterday that official permission already has been secured in England for Americans to make the trip, possibly remaining up to at least a year.

In addition to its production facilities, UPA London plant also will serve as a center for all UPA's European operations, including the UPA Music Co. and merchandising activities. Equipment is now be-

RKO's 'Finest 52' As CBS-TV Entry For Beer, Tires?

D'Arcy is understood to have placed an order for the "Finest 52" features of RKO Teleradio with CBS-TV. The web has merely accepted the order and not provided clearance for the hour-and-half weekly stanza which D'Arcy is trying to line up for the General Tire and Rubber and Budweiser accounts.

Placement of the order with CBS apparently takes precedence over the Vitapix deal which RKO was trying to work out for the sponsors as recently as last week. Vitapix suggested hours on its 57 stations, which were not completely acceptable, it's said. However, RKO is keeping the Vitapix iron in the fire in the event the network deal is not okayed by Paley & Co., and has reportedly sent back to Vitapix for new time allocations.

RKO has a third out as well. In the event neither Vitapix nor CBS work out, it is mulling a plan whereby it will try to clear time by itself in the top 12 or 15 tv markets in the country in the belief that it can at least get 40% of the coin available via regular national sale. This would be done in behalf of General Tire, and probably Budweiser. The tire company would be willing because of its corporate tieup with RKO.

WCBS-TV Strips For Action and Gets It With 'Margie,' 'Amos'

Rating potential of strip-programmed syndicated reruns is amply demonstrated this month by WCBS-TV, the CBS-TV flagship in N. Y. Three weeks after installing five-a-week reruns of "My Little Margie" and "Amos 'n' Andy" in its 9-10 a.m. period, the station pulled a 74% increase in audience and completely reversed its position among the top four stations at that hour.

Average Pulse for May for the 9-10 hour is a 5.6, compared with a 3.2 last month when the George Skinner live variety hour was in the spot. Moreover, among WRCA-TV, WABC and WABD in the morning hour last month, WCBS-TV was in last place rating-wise, with WABD's Sandy Becker cartoonery first with a 4.5, WRCA-TV's Herb Sheldon with a 4.0 and WABC-TV's "Romper Room" with a 3.5. The May Pulse puts the WCBS-TV strips in front with the 5.6, with Becker and Sheldon tied with a 3.3 each and "Romper Room" down to a 3.0. Ratings were taken after the strips were on just three weeks.

97 U-I Westerns Go To Flamingo

Flamingo Films took over distribution-for-tv and part ownership of a group of 97 Universal-International westerns that have been in tv circulation just a few months. Films had previously been sold for video by Quality TV, a Coast distribution outfit, but were pulled back by U-I and assigned to Flamingo after being sold in four or five markets.

Understood the Flamingo deal calls for tv distribution rights plus 50% ownership in the package, which covers films originally released by U-I from 1938 through approximately 1951. Package includes 22 Buck Jones starrers, 20 Johnny Mack Brown pix, nine Tom Mix, nine Tex Ritter, eight Ken Maynard features and six Rod Cameron starrers. Others starred in the package are Eddie Daw, Russell Hayden, Kirby Grant and Bob Baker.

Deal is Flamingo's first for a western feature package, though it distributes a couple of half-hour western series. It has a library of 152 feature films, however, most of them out of the Eros Studios in England.

WGA Okays Strike Against Webs Unless They Meet Telefilm Demands

Hollywood, May 22.

The major nets will be struck by June 4 unless a telepix agreement satisfactory to the Writers Guild of America West has been reached. Unanimous authorization was voted by the WGAW membership at last Thursday's meet, at the same time WGA East was approving a similar move in N. Y.

Negotiations with the nets are expected to resume shortly, in which the Guild will ask the same terms for net writers as in pacts with the major film studios and with the Alliance of TV Film Producers. In these pacts is a "separation of rights" clause for week-to-week or term writers, granting them continuing ownership over material for use in other media; and a "non-exclusivity" clause for per-script writers, allowing scripters working on a series or a prolonged story assignment to accept outside assignments. These are expected to be central points of discussion with nets.

WGAW also held annual elections last Thursday, voted to combine the tv and radio branches, and upped the entrance requirements for active membership. As a result of the unification of tv and radio groups, not all 34 branch officers and council members elected will have a place to sit. However, a supplementary mail election will be held to settle the various conflicts.

But Edmund H. North will assume post of prexy of the Screen Writers Branch, unchanged in the reorganization, as will Jesse L. Lasky jr., v.p., and Ken Englund, secretary-treasurer. In complicated juggling, Gene Wang, elected prexy of the Radio Writers Branch, becomes v.p. of the new combined AM-TV group, with David Dortort, re-elected prexy of the tv-ites, retaining that post in the new setup. Al Martin retains secretary-treasurer post.

Other Radio Branch winners, Adrian Gendot, John Meston and Martin Wark, will not take office, nor will Aleen Leslie, elected tv v.p., the post assigned to Wang.

None of the successful council or branch board officers will assume various chores, this to be decided in the mail balloting. These include Robert Carson, Mary C. McCall Jr., Wells Roots, Harry Essex, Isobel Lennart, Sloan Nibley, William Roberts, Ted Sherdeman, Daniel Taradish, James Allardice, Lee Berg, Dorothy Cooper, Howard J. Green, Hal Kanter, Samuel Newman, Arthur Alsberg, Hy Freedman, David Friedkin, Dwight Hauser, John Meston, Frances van Hartesveldt, Richard C. Chandlee, Les Farber, Daniel Fuchs and Richard Collins.

In the new setup, SWB and combiner AM-TV branch will each have three officers and eight board members. All become ex post facto members of the WGA council, plus five members elected at large. Total number of elected officers will be reduced to 27 in the two-headed organization.

SELF SEES SLUMP IN VIDPIX RERUN VALUES

Hollywood, May 22.

With thousands of vidpix being dumped on the rerun market the past year, vidpix rerun values have dropped, and there is little chance the situation will improve, avers Meridian producer William Self.

"I believe something like 2,500 telepix went into the rerun market this past year, and that's the principal reason for the drop in values," said Self.

Producer of "Schlitz Playhouse of Stars" further declared that with the major film studios unloading their backlogs to tv, the situation will probably decline still further. "When those pictures go into circulation on tv, they'll absorb time now taken by the half-hour telepix, and it's bound to affect our situation," he commented.

WPIX'S 'STRYKER' BUY

WPIX, N. Y. Daily News tv-er, has added another vidpix item to its fall stockpile by buying "Stryker of Scotland Yard" from Hollywood Television Service. No time has been chosen for airing the half-hour adventures.

There are 13 films in the package.

Ginsburg to NBC-TV Films

Norman A. Ginsburg has joined NBC Television Films as manager of advertising and promotion. Ginsberg, former ad-promotion manager at the DuMont web, succeeds Jay Smolin, who moved over to Associated Artists Productions recently to head up AAP's ad-promo operation.

Ginsburg has been in the telepix field for the past two years via Studio Films, where he moved after four years at DuMont. Prior to his DuMont stint, he was with Mutual.

Telepix Residual Coin for Thesps Totals $1,232,197

Hollywood, May 22.

Accelerated tempo of residual payments for actors in vidpix has resulted in thesps receiving $307,360 since Jan. 1, to make a grand total of $1,232,197 since Screen Actors Guild members first began collecting on the vidpix bonanza in December of 1953.

Upped tempo is due to new pact SAG inked with vidpixers last July 21, with its effect really being felt only around the first of this year. Under new pact terms, actors get 35% of minimum on second runs, and proportionately higher hikes all along the line.

SAG tv administrator Kenneth Thomson asserted "with the continuing acceleration in receipt of residual payments, the guild fully expects they will total $1,000,000 for this year." Thus the 1956 payments would exceed the cumulative total of rerun coin collected by the guild for the period from 1944 to Jan. 1 of this year.

Telethesps are receiving an average of $70,000 a month this year. At the end of 1955, the total residual figure for actors was $924,831.75, this repping total of coin collected since rerun payments began in December of 1944. New pact, however, has accented rate of payments considerably for the actors. Figures don't include $80,364 actors have received from post-1948 pix sold to tv.

Storer Stations Buy SG's 'Movie Parade'

Four Storer tv stations have inked for Screen Gems' "Hollywood Movie Parade," bringing the recent batch of 104 Columbia features to 38 markets to date. Storer will put the pix in Cleveland, Detroit, Toledo and Birmingham, with Storer veep Stanton Kettler and SG sales director for SG closing the deal.

Thirteen other stations have purchased the 104 since it was reported some weeks ago that sales had reached 21 markets. Philly, Las Vegas, Fresno, Spokane, Wichita, New Orleans, Harlingen, Nashville, Columbus, Pittsburgh, San Diego, Midland, Louisville, were the 13, N. Y., L. A., Frisco, K. C., Denver, Houston and Minneapolis were among the first 21 sales.

'Movie-a-Day' Plan

Association Films, one of the top distributors of sustaining pubservice and informational films, is regularizing its service to stations with a new "Movie-a-Day" plan that will provide 11 weeks of daily half-hour film programming. Package will consist of a weekly group of seven half-hour films, ranging in scope from travel to sports, from do-it-yourself to community benefit.

Under the plan, stations have the option of ordering as many packages or daily programs per week as it deems necessary. Film is free of charge, except for postage.

'Riley' Yanked From Roach

Hollywood, May 22.

Producer Tom McKnight moves his "Life of Riley" telepix series from the Hal Roach studios to California studios, where NBC has rented space, in June.

William Bendix stars in the series which is an NBC package. Abbe Berlin is director. Plans are to finish the current batch of "Riley" vidpix at the Roach lot May 29, and resume with a new crop at California studios June 11.

Sound Masters Sets First International Production Service

First international production service offering consultation and actual production facilities anywhere overseas has been formed by Sound Masters Inc., veteran non-theatrical and television production house. Its new International Production Service (IPS) will be headed up by Wallace Worsley Jr., longtime Metro staffer and more recently out on his own in indie production and particularly in projects overseas.

IPS will offer a number of services, including a production advisory service under which it will furnish detailed production advice, cost analysis and rough budgets on foreign projects; a production service, under which it will prepare final budgets, breakdowns and shooting schedules and also will administer any budget submitted and underwrite any budget administered; a sponsored and documentary film production service by which it will provide full production units in various areas and will handle all foreign customs, legal and tax matters. IPS will provide these services for program films, documentaries and spot commercial and industrial films, both for sponsors and networks or indie producers.

According to Sound Masters, the new setup would produce savings for its users from the very start by giving them an accurate basis for a decision on whether to proceed with a project. It also saves the client scouting trips to the foreign location, which means time and money. The underwriting phase of the service gives the client an idea of true costs before he even starts production. Manpower provided the client is above-scale for the areas used, and would be the best available; furthermore, the client works with an American company and eliminates language and customs problems.

In essence, IPS is selling experience in foreign production, with the pitch being that it would take the client years of trial and error to build such knowledge, while here it's available for a fee. Such knowledge would include customs-legal matters, manpower matters, studio locations and facilities, all-over budgetary matters, etc.

Aussie Telepix

hold a price line the next time around, after there are tangible figures on which to base a price. Also, there's another hidden factor. Under Australian import regulations, only the stations themselves can import film, which means only they can do the acutal filmbuying. This leaves Australian advertisers and agencies at the mercy of the stations as regards program selection and price. There are already indications, even before television hits the air, that the clients and agencies are preparing to fight this regulation so they can do their own program buying asnd merely place it on the stations, American style. This would be welcomed by the American distribs, since it would widen the prospective market and consequently tend to make prices higher.

The four TPA shows sold this week were "Susie," "Count of Monte Cristo," "Ramar of the Jungle" and "Fury." "Count" was sold to Television Corp. of Syndey, others to Amalgamated Television Service of Sydney and General Television Corp. of Melbourne. Previously TPA sold "Lassie" and "Ellery Queen" to ABC.

THE BRIDGE
(The Comedienne)
With Sarah Burton, Barry Thompson, Wendell Holmes, Elizabeth Dewing, others; Richard Janaver, narrator Producer-director: Donald Peterson
30 Mins.
Writer: Doris Illoway
Syndication (transcription)

A group of clerics stashed away in an Englewood, N. J., monastery have groomed a slickly commercial radio series for general distribution to about 200 U.S. stations. Among the show's other virtues is a sophistication by the Carmelite Fathers in handling the religioso angles. They never hit the listener over the head with their motives.

The Carmelites want to redeem lost souls through the Mass—particularly those lost through alcoholism. Rev. Ronald F. Gray, who supervises the audio stanza and has a direct interest in lushes via the Matt Talbot Legion, made some pertinent points at the end of the 30-minuter heard, but he made them softly and turned the rest of the show over to some smart drama.

Particular airing (reviewed on transcription) was "The Comedienne," a story about a famous Gallic star who was sliding down the road to dissipation and death. A half-hour was never any great shakes in delineating a story of profound emotion, but scripter Doris Illoway did as well as possible. Eve Lavalliere was a music hall performer, much feted in the decade before the first World War. She literally drank herself sick, ending up in a convent nursing home. Though she was warned she would probably die if she went back on rounds, she was too lonely to escape it, until her cynical producer saw a bit of light and forced her to go away for a rest. Once away, she met a priest, who subtly began the therapeutic processes. There the story was left, with Father Gray explaining that she eventually became a nun. It wasn't a very complicated story, but most of it fell into a nice dramatic pattern. Sarah Burton was most believable as the music hall luminary and Barry Thompson played the producer nicely. Rest of roles, by Wendell Holmes, Elizabeth Dewing and Richard Janaver, were well essayed. Art.

BILL GORDON
225 Mins.; Mon-thru-Sat. 7:15 a.m.
WHK, Cleveland

Pacting of Bill Gordon, WHK's morning deejay to his sixth one-year contract assures this area of a continuance of one of radio's unusual characters. Gordon, heard daily from 7:15 until 10 a.m. and again in the afternoon except Saturday from 4 to 5:30, is a combination of palaver and comedy with an occasional bit of music. There is no middle ground with this popular disker: you either like or dislike his constant line of talk, song and tomfoolery with or without benefit of records. He frequently talks his way over an entire musical offering, and in more instances than not comes up with more than a normal share of laughs.

Apparently, advertisers like the chitchat, as his segments are well populated with spots. Mark.

CBS New Biz, Renewals On Daytime TV Sked

CBS-TV grabbed off some new and renewed daytime business last week, covering "Captain Kangaroo," "House Party" and the Bob Crosby segment. Kool-Aide signed for eight participations, one a week in the "Kangaroo a.m." segment, to start June 13 via Foote, Cone & Belding. Also new was a four-week order by Seven-Up, through J. Walter Thompson, for the Monday 3:30 quarter-hour on the Crosby show effective June 4.

On the renewed side, Pillsbury Mills, which last week had cancelled two segments and renewed two on the Arthur Godfrey show, signed a firm 52-weeker for its Tuesday-Thursday quarter-hours on "House Party." Deal set via Leo Burnett of Chicago.

with Franklin Schaffner to continue him on directing the opus next season. The question apparently came to the fore on word last week that Schaffner would become one of a foursome of exec producers formed into a commonwealth plan to bring in a skip-week Tuesday night live dramatic and musical series on NBC-TV next season (for Kaiser Aluminum) as the first of their production chores. (Schaffner's partners in the venture are Tony Miner, George Roy Hill and Fielder Cook.)

Schaffner had already given "notice" of severing his connection with CBS' "Studio One" of which he has been a rotating regular on the direction for several years. "Person to Person" producers with Murrow are John A. Aaron and Jesse Zousmer.

Danny Kaye In Belgrade

Belgrade, May 15.

Danny Kaye's arrival as the United Nations' (Unicef's) juvenile ambassador, on a four-day official visit to Yugoslavia, was greeted by thousands of Yugoslav children. On his arrival at the airport, Kaye was greeted by children and reps of the government and the United Nations' Unicef office here. He made a brief speech over Radio Belgrade.

The four days in Yugoslavia, Kaye divided between Belgrade and Sarajevo, Bosnia. Besides, visiting several children institutions cared for by Unicef, Kayé made two public appearances, both for youngsters.

sticks as well as in the cities. "It's not classical music itself that scares 'em off, it's the way it's presented," Merrill states, and that's where it's up to the networks to use their ingenuity. Similarly he's been doing a Las Vegas turn for the past few years, "and if classical music does well in the night clubs, why can't it do the same on tv?"

"Look at all the money Gen. Sarnoff spent to bring Toscanini over here and to organize the NBC Symphony. He did it because he liked music and he believed the American public would like it and also for reasons of prestige. Why can't this be the case in television as well? If the networks weren't so rating-conscious it well might be."

Houston—KPRC-TV has begun an expansion program which will give it the largest facilities of any television station in the south and southwest. Construction is under way on a 6,000 square foot utility building which, when completed in about 90 days will give the Post Oak Road studios a total of 45,000 square feet of floor space.

WAVE RADIO WINS VARIETY AWARD
for
"Imagination in Programming"!

We've been going places for months here at WAVE with "DIAL 970", our new Monitor-Weekday format. With good reason, too, it seems! . . .

VARIETY has just selected WAVE as one of eleven radio and television stations for its 1955-56 Honor Roll! Here are excerpts from VARIETY'S April 18 write-up:

"Programmatically, WAVE came up with a listenable blend of journalism and showmanship, plussed by intensive promotion. MONITOR was previewed last June via a radio spectacular running, naturally, 90 minutes. When later NBC was developing WEEKDAY, WAVE dittoed with elaborate promotion to snare local sales. The heading was DIAL 970, tailoring each program segment to time of day, available audience, staff personalities, sales requirements and promotional opportunities.

"Prime features are WAKE UP WITH WAVE, CAROUSEL (music and facts), ROADSHOW (for moving radios), NIGHTBEAT ('The Pulse of Louisville After Dark'), complete with scooperoo factors — in short, programming to keep radio from sounding like the 'same dull jukebox'."

NBC Spot Sales has all the facts on WAVE's imaginative, award-winning DIAL 970 — radio that's going places and doing things in Louisville, and exclusive with WAVE!

Dear Mr. Liebman:

I wish to congratulate and commend you on the finest program my wife and I have ever witnessed on television. "The Music of Gershwin" was full of great beauty and sheer enchantment from the moment it began. We both felt like standing and applauding at the finale.

I also would like you to know that your program was the first to stimulate me to the point of actually writing a letter about it. Congratulations again to you and your fine sponsor, and — let's have a repeat sometime of Mr. Gershwin's music.

Sincerely,

each time it acquires a top package of features, it has a list of virtually assured clients (sponsors as well as stations) who are ready to talk terms. It's virtually an unparalleled situation in the feature business, a situation which allows them pre-judgment of the market in negotiating their deals. Selznick films, for example, have already grossed beyond the total payment to Selznick in the first couple of months, and NTA has a five-year deal on the pix.

Unger points out that up to now, there have really been no top pictures on the market, except some of the British films. Best American package until the Selznick deal, he believes, was his own Harry Popkin package. "The rest were rejects; the Bank of America package was composed of films that lost money, that bankrupted their companies. Our Korda pictures were good, so were some of the Rank pictures, but they are British and are somewhat limited in their appeal and commercial value." Now, he says, the market for the first time is getting top product and audiences will buy it. "These features make films made for television look like cheap quickies," he said, and he believes that stations will make playing time available for as many top features as come along while their audience appeal will be reflected in ratings that will bring feature film shows into Class A time as well as the current B and C. It's for this reason that the company is dickering library deals and leases wherever the top product is available.

'Gold Mine In Shorts'

Re the UM&M deal, Landau and Unger feel there's a gold mine in the shorts, but you have to dig for the gold." All the shorts have been taken off the market while Unger and sales v.p. Harold Goldman work out a sales approach on the pix. With few exceptions, they will nix library sales, but instead will develop the shorts into packages and series for national as well as station sales. On the foreign side, they feel the overseas potential of the shorts and particularly the cartoons for theatrical release will alone get them off the hook on the purchase price. As to the program series involved in the UM&M purchase, they are reevaluating the potential of the shows involved and if they feel they can work out proper methods of selling and exploiting them will continue to distribute them; otherwise they will hand them back to Matty Fox, who financed most of them and otherwise represents ownership. They huddled with Fox on the matter over the weekend.

As to the question that most of the trade is asking — "Where are they getting the money?"—Landau said that most of it is being made available by "private banking sources" and industrial groups, the latter involved on a participating basis. Also, he said, NTA's public banking contracts have been furnishing leads to private capital. "You've got to realize," he said, "that there's a lot of money available for investment in picture and studio deals, provided the investors are sure that the deals are being handled properly and by people who know their way around."

Lewis' sudden illness last week might upset a lot of plans. "Fireside Theatre" is stet under P&G; "Circle Theatre" is ditto for Armstrong Cork, with Kaiser Aluminum dramatics on the rotation beat in what looms as a strong Tuesday lineup. "Big Town" may stay at the 10:30 fringe but Lever and AC Sparkplug are not set.

Wednesday—This continues Eddie Fisher in his "Coke Time" 7:30 fixture mated to the news stanza; at 8, with "Screen Directors Playhouse" vamoosing, the network has been playing in and out with "People Are Funny" and "Impact," though latter may be slipped into the "Medic" time. In the hot time periods, Wednesday is as is from 8:30 on—"Father Knows Best" (for Scott Paper), "Kraft TV Theatre" and P&G's "This Is Your Life." At 10:30, "Midwestern Hayride" gives way to Ina Ray Hutton for the hot weather under Purex auspices.

Thursday—Dinah Shore, news, Groucho Marx's "Bet Your Life," "Dragnet," "People's Choice"; Tennessee Ernie Ford replacing "Ford Theatre" for Ford Motors; "Lux Video."

Friday—Eddie Fisher and news; at 8, "Life of Riley" pushed up to 8 o'clock (ousting "Truth or consequences) to allow a new Jack Carson comedy series, "Johnny Came Lately," to make the 8:30 entry under P. Lorillard (the "Truth" backer) and Toni; at 9, Campbell may slot "On Trial" vidpixer in place of its current 9:30 "Star Stage," with "Big Story" probably being pushed back to 9:30, but no contract yet from American Tobacco (Pall Mall) and Simoniz as to playing along. Gillette's "Cavalcade of Sports" and "Red Barber's Corner" (State Farm Insurance) stay, of course.

Saturday—"Big Surprise" for Purex and Speidel; Perry Como show, but money auspices not set; and 9 to 10, Sid Caesar back at his old "Show of Shows" stand (less 30 minutes) in the ejection of "People Are Funny" and Texaco's Jimmy Durante; endpieces as is with George Gobel and "Hit Parade."

Spectaculars and Specials—The major new entry is Friday 8:30 to 10 on an every- four weeks basis, rotating Max Liebman, Tony Miner and Fred Coe as the producers and with RCA-Whirlpool set and another sponsor hoped for. Saturday goes under Oldsmobile and RCA-Whirlpool and Monday's "Producers' Showcase" lists the latter sponsor, with Olds a possibility to share the freight. "Hall of Fame" may get three 7:30 to 9 Sunday spots and another threesome from 9 to 10:30. At least that's how NBC would like it.

ing lined up for immediate shipment. UPA Pictures, Ltd., Bosustow said, already has been incorporated in England and has a five-man board, including three Britons. Prexy, also board chairman, and Scanlon, are the American members.

In a further expansion of its Burbank facilities, where UPA is headquartered here, company has bought a two-story apartment building across the street from its studio, for additional exec offices and drawing department.

Project marks the second building purchased by UPA during past year, to accommodate growing personnel. In addition to its theatrical program and large amount of tv and commercial orders, UPA will launch a weekly half-hour CBS-TV program in September. The London plant also will handle some of the subjects for latter.

Further building program calls for erection of a multiple-story building either in Van Nuys or North Hollywood, to consolidate all departments under one roof. This gets under way around Jan. 1.

second Metopera layout, also 7:30-9, while "Playboy of the Western World" winds it up on Saturday, May 4, at 9-10. Documentaries out of the John Daly pubaffairs office aren't set up, but plans call for at least three on the same preemption basis as the specs.

Network is attempting to sell the specials either to one client for all eight or individual sponsors for each show. Failing that, it will sell half-sponsorship or third-sponsorship in each show. Discount structure favors present ABC clients, who under the web's "Umbrella Plan," will get a 22½% discount on the spec and a 30% on their 52-weeks-firm regular filmed half-hour series. Discount structure on the specs alone for outside clients gives a sponsor buying all eight a 27½% discount, non-ABC clients buying individual shows a 10% break, any half-sponsorship a 7½% discount and any one-third sponsor a 5% cut.

intend that "other possible actions" be held up. "On the contrary," he asserted, "I contemplated that as a necessary adjunct to the research program the Commission would be doing everything possible to improve the immediate tv situation and to assist UHF."

It's understood that the "next step" referred to by McConnaughey may be a notice of rulemaking to deintermix channel assignments in the few remaining intermixed cities in which VHF stations have not been authorized. This would be a reversal of the agency's action in turning down selective deintermixture proposals in favor of an "overall" solution to the allocation problem.

The plan would also involve shifting the VHF channels allocated to these cities to provide for more VHF stations in other markets.

The Commission has been weighing various proposals for deintermixture at a series of meetings during the last few weeks but has been unable to determine how far it shall go in this direction. Some consideration, it was learned, was given to deintermixing channels in cities in which VHF stations are soon to go on the air in competition with UHF. Such action would mean rescinding recent VHF authorizations, with probable lengthy court fights.

Whatever action the agency takes to provide for some UHF "islands" will almost certainly bring strong criticism from UHF broadcasters in Madison, Wis., Evansville, Ind., Fresno, Calif., Corpus Christi, Tex., and other cities who had urged deintermixture but were turned down. Litigation before the U. S. Court of Appeals to stop VHF operations in these cities is pending.

a lens arrangement fitted on either to a film or live camera. No additional equipment at the transmitting source is involved, and viewers need only a cheaply-made pair of viewing glasses. Idea is to turn the glasses into an advantage by enclosing them with the sponsor's package, so that, for example, Pabst could entice viewers to buy a case of beer so that they could get the glasses to watch the fights in 3-D instead of in the flat view.

Interesting aspect of the process is that it works more easily on a film camera than on live units, and that once the effect is embodied in the film, no equipment is needed at the station or network level. This means that Dudley can go directly to the sponsor of a filmed network show and set a deal without bringing in the network at all. The 3-D effect would already be embodied in the film, which could be projected under the usual methods at the studio, with the public seeing the 3-D by buying the sponsor's product as packaged with the glasses. Networks would have no objection since the process is perfectly compatible—viewers without glasses would see the normal picture.

Not only does the incident tend to deprecate our profession, but the charges made public without my knowledge and without any opportunity for rebuttal may harm our young agency with persons who hear only your side of the story." Nathanson enclosed a statement by Stuart K. Hensley, v.p. of the Toni Co., supporting his stand and adding: "Toni's record is pioneer and builder of the $100,000,000 home permanent business speaks for itself. We have always strived to offer a product that merits consumer confidence and to avoid any advertising claims that tend to confuse the consumer. This has been the basis of Toni's continued leadership in the home permanent field."

KEN HILDEBRAND ENDS 19-YR. DUQUESNE TIE

Pittsburgh, May 22.

Ken Hildebrand, veteran announcer and newscaster, has resigned his exclusive contract with Vic Maitland Associates, local advertising agency, thus terminating 19 years of radio and tv work with Duquesne Brewing Co. Maitland handles the Duquesne account now on his own, taking it with him from Walker-Downing, which office he was with for a long time.

Hildebrand has long been the voice of Duquesne on practically all of its local shows, previously sharing the work with Charlie Garratt, who left for New York in '54 and is now spieling for Old Gold in New York. Hildebrand says he'll stick in Pittsburgh and will freelance.

Lasker Award statuette

of America

We are proud that our television series on the NBC network, "The March of Medicine", has been selected to receive the first Albert Lasker Award in the field of television and radio.

But we feel that those really being honored are the physicians and research scientists of America.

These men—their dedication, their hospitals, their laboratories and their loyal staffs—have made it possible for "The March of Medicine" to report the story of medical progress to the public.

The Lasker Awards heretofore have been bestowed on many of the nation's outstanding medical scientists and journalists. As a member of the pharmaceutical industry, we are particularly grateful for the honor represented by this award.

We are also grateful for the support we have continually received from the American Medical Association, which has cooperated in this series from the very beginning.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Doris Day: "Whatever Will Be, Will Be"-"I've Gotta Sing Away These Blues" (Columbia). A simple, captivating song from the current Paramount pic, "The Man Who Knew Too Much," adds up to a potent entry by Doris Day. Lyric has a neat philosophical peg while the melodic line is lilting throughout. Flip is a good blues number in a traditional groove.

Patti Page: "Allegheny Moon"-"The Strangest Romance" (Mercury). "Allegheny Moon" is tailor-made for Patti Page, a slow-tempoed ballad with immediate appeal via this lucid rendition using the multiple-dubbing voice technique. It could be Miss Page's biggest side in some time. "The Strangest Romance" is a more pretentious ballad also with commercial chances.

Kay Starr: "Second Fiddle"-"Love Ain't Right" (RCA Victor). As a followup to her click "Rock 'n' Roll Waltz, Kay Starr has changed pace with "Second Fiddle," a good ballad idea with a "Tennessee Waltz" flavor which the songstress belts effectively. Joe Reisman's background lends an important assist. Flip is a so-so up-tempo novelty.

Gordon MacRae: "One Misty Morning"-"I Asked The Lord" (Capitol). Gordon MacRae's failure to come up with a big disk remains one of those show biz enigmas. A solid stylist with legit pipes and with plenty of exposure via his film and tv roles, he hasn't made a comparable dent in the pop field. But he could make it big with either of these two sides. "One Misty Morning" is a class ballad which MacRae projects to the hilt, while the reverse is another likely pop religioso.

Lawrence Welk: "It May Be Silly"-"Rock 'n' Roll Ruby" (Coral). Two more typically pleasing by the Lawrence Welk organization which doesn't try to knock anyone over, but manages to come up with a consistent brand of mass entertainment. "It May Be Silly" is a hillbilly-type novelty with some uncomplicated humor. "Rock 'n' Roll Ruby" is a listenable take-off on the current music fad, played without the usual noisy attack. Buddy Merrill handles the vocal assignments on both sides competently.

Henri Rene Orch: "Maria"-"Taquito Militar" (RCA Victor). "Maria," theme from the film, "The Man With The Gray Flannel Suit," is a fine instrumental tastefully orchestrated under Henri Rene's baton. Merits attention from jocks looking to spot class material. Flip is a colorful showpiece in a Latin groove.

Della Reese: "Headin' Home"-"Daybreak Serenade" (Jubilee). Della Reese is a powerful stylist who can handle varied tunes with equal authority. In "Headin' Home," she is a standout blues shouter on a suitable number for the genre. She switches moods on "Daybreak Serenade" to render this lovely ballad with appropriately soft mood and phrasing.

Marion Marlowe: "Ring, Phone, Ring"-"The Hands of Time" (Cadence). "Ring, Phone, Ring" is a compelling, offbeat dramatic opus with a strong lyric, in fact, too strong in spots. It's an unusual piece of material which could be a big hit for Marion Marlowe and Archie Bleyer, who's billed for his snapping fingers. "The Hands of Time" is more standard fare for the songstress, a nice ballad with a wholesome lyric.

Larry Wagner Orch: "Caribbean Cocktail"-"Two Left Feet" (Forest). This is a solid entry from an indie label. It's straight music, with no gimmicks, but imaginatively presented by batoner Larry Wagner. "Caribbean Cocktail" has a catching flavor, abetted by a wordless chorus, while "Two Left Feet" is a humorously swinging piece. Both rate jock spins.

Buddy Hackett: "I Used to Yate Ya"-"The Songs My Mother Used To Sing To Who" (Coral). Buddy Hackett should return post-haste to his Chinese dialogs. He's way out of his element on this disk. "I Used To Yate Ya" is an okay dialect novelty, but not Hackett's cup of tea. Flip is completely weird, an attempt at nonsense comedy that doesn't come off at all.

Johnny Carroll: "Wild Wild Women"-"Corrina, Corrina" (Decca). This is Elvis Presley's responsibility. Johnny Carroll is the latest entry into the frenetic school of song selling. There's no denying the frenzy and if there's enough room for a couple of Presleys, maybe Carroll can fill the berth. "Wild, Wild Women" is wild, while "Corrina" is hardly an improvement.

Reelect Cella AFM Prez In Philly, With Rival Bd.

Philadelphia, May 22.

Romeo Cella was reeelected president of Local 77, American Federation of Musicians, by an overwhelming majority last week. Cella was named to his first two-year term in 1952, but tapped with him were an opposition executive board and slate of officers.

In the recent election Cella was opposed by his vice president, Fred Calabrese, and won out by a tally of 1,368 to 555. A. A. Tomei, incumbent secretary, was defeated by Cella's running mate, James P. Perri, 1,259 to 651.

Others named were Charles Musumeci, vice president; Charles McConnell, assistant secretary, and Louis Schvom, treasurer.

Album Reviews

"Ella Fitzgerald Sings The Cole Porter Song Book" (Verve). When Ella Fitzgerald was with Decca Records, one of the best things she did was her album of Gershwin tunes. Now with Verve, she has a standout set of Cole Porter tunes, a collection of great standards which she executes with her flawless timing and subtle jazz shadings. Not only does she do the w.k. choruses but she throws in the lesser known verses on numerous tunes. Buddy Bregman batons a neatly swinging orch for the backgrounds and always maintains a proper balance in favor of the vocals. The double 12-inch set contains 32 Porter songs and three liners by Don Freeman, Fred Lounsberry and Norman Granz.

Harry Belafonte: "Calypso" (RCA Victor). Since Calypso tunes comprise an important part of Harry Belafonte's concert routine, a collection of native Caribbean numbers was a natural for a wax package by this popular disk name. As usual, Belafonte pitches up stylized versions which are a blend of the arty and the folk for a slick, catching quality. Tony Scott's combo with Millard Thomas on guitar and the Norman Luboff chorus on one number give attractive accompaniment to Belafonte, who has made good use of the multiple-dubbing technique here for the harmony effects.

Robert Maxwell: "Hi-Fi Harp" (MGM). One of the top practitioners of the harp in the pop field, Robert Maxwell has whipped up a colorful assortment of sounds for an amusing platter layout. Maxwell has included several standards, such as "I Got Rhythm," "Cymana," and "Pavanne" with a flock of original numbers with zany titles like "Injury Music For Football Games," "Accidental Slip On an Oriental Rug," "Stompin' At the Stork Club," etc.

Lester Lanin Orchestra (Columbia). In this area of rock 'n' roll, the musical genre known as "society music" doesn't get much prominence on disks even though it still has plenty of playing time at hotels, parties, weddings, etc. In this set, Lester Lanin's orch, one of the top names in this field, dishes up a sampling of a musical idiom which hasn't changed much over the past couples of decades and thus has a rather quaint, if not corny, sound. This, however, is highly danceable music with a dominance, almost a monotony, of the fast foxtrot tempo.

Pat Boone: (Dot). Pat Boone is another of the young pop singers promoted to the album class. Set is mainly a rehash of his single clicks and will appeal mainly to those who want an LP memento of the Boone styling. In the package, of course, are such items as "Ain't That A Shame," "Gee Whittakers," "Tutti Frutti," etc.

A flock of fine jazz albums have hit the market recently, including collection of old sides by Thelonius Monk, one of the earliest avant-garde jazz names, on the Blue Note label . . . A less esoteric jazz album headed by another fine modern jazzman, trumpeter Joe Newman, has been released under the rather too clever title, "I Feel Like A Newman," by the Storyville label . . . In the swing band groove, George Siravo batons a neat session for Kapp Records, while on the Fantasy label, Pete Terrace quintet dresses up some interesting jazz

Disk Names O.O. Label Tieups in Light Of New Global Distribution Pattern

By HERM SCHOENFELD

The recent reshuffle in the pattern of international disk alliances is due to have repercussions on the talent level within the next few years. Top names, particularly in the longhair field where global distribution knows no language barriers, are reexamining their label affiliations to find out who's handling them in the various countries and once their pacts run out, they will veer to the deal which gives them the best distribution chances.

Since the U.S. market is the biggest and richest, likely accounting for more sales than the rest of the world combined, the foreign longhair names will be most concerned to get the best possible hookup in theh U.S. It is expected, for instance, that there will be some jockeying for names in England between the HMV label of Electric & Musical Industries combine, which severs its relations with RCA Victor next year, and British Decca, which takes over as Victor's affiliate in England. EMI's outlets in the U.S. will be handled via Angel and Capitol Records, both being owned by the British company.

The revamp in the international hookups is due to be of immediate benefit to some artists. For instance, Yehudi Menuhin, an HMV artist, has been playing second fiddle to Jascha Heifetz on the RCA Victor schedule in the U.S. When EMI severs with RCA, Menuhin will undoubtedly be the top fiddler for HMV, while Heifetz will con-

Satchmo's Kudos For Armstrong's Bagpipes (He's Duke's Bellower)

Newcastle, Eng., May 22.

After a gettogether with Jack Armstrong, piper to the Duke of Northumberland, he wrote in his ghosted newspaper column: "Y'know, folks, we hear the Scottish bagpipes all the time back home. And when they have a big parade on Fifth Avenue, they always steal the show with their thrilling sound and the kilts and stuff.

"But Jack plays a different instrument entirely. He doesn't blow into it all—just pumps it up with a bellows. He works with his elbow. But can he manipulate that thing! Why, it sounds just like a fine flute or clarinet."

Armstrong was set to plane out to the Gold Coast, Africa, today (Tues.).

Baer SPA Prez Again; All Officers Renamed

Abel Baer was reelected president of the Songwriters Protective Assn. at an SPA council meeting last week. Along with Baer, the rest of the incumbent officers were also renamed, including Louis Alter, v.p.; Walter Bishop, second v.p.; Joseph Meyer, secretary; Leonard Whitcup, treasurer, and Edgar Leslie, chairman of the council.

Seven members of the 21-man council who were up for reelection this year also were named to serve again for a three-year term. These were Oscar Hammerstein 2d, Otto Harbach, Charles Tobias, Arthur Schwartz, Edgar Leslie, Louis Alter and Jack Yellen.

Garner In Hospital

Pianist Erroll Garner is under observation in New York's Lenox Hill Hospital after injuries suffered in a cab accident last week. His manager, Martha Glazer, who was with him, suffered only minor injuries.

It's expected that Garner will resume work June 1.

Loew's Veeps Walker

Frank B. Walker, general manager of MGM Records, has been given his veepee stripes at the parent company, Loew's Inc. Walker joined MGM in 1945 when Loew's formed the subsid disk division.

Walker, a vet recording man, was v.p. at Columbia Phonograph Records in the 1920s. He left Col in 1933 to switch to Victor as veepee.

Col Pushing $1.49 Summer Sampler; Jubilee's Cuffos

Columbia Records has prepped a special $1.49 summer sampler to help stimulate hot weather traffic in the retail shops. It's the third sampler to be issued by Col in the past year.

The low $1.49 tab for the 12-inch LP still allows for a 30% profit by the dealer. It is, however, still a touch-and-go venture for the diskery, which just about breaks even on the deal. Current Col sampler contains sides culled from its regular album catalog.

Impact of the sampler offer on the consumer level was pointed up by Col's previous releases. The "I Like Jazz" model racked up 260,000 sales while the Andre Kostelanetz sampler hit the 400,000 bracket. Production on both had to be cut off when the plants couldn't get out the regular product.

Peg for the summer sampler, which goes into the market June 1, is "Having Wonderful Time—Wish You Would Hear." Platter comes with a brochure insert containing a list of Col's complete pop line.

For its June "Buy-of-the-Month," another program in Col's summer push, label is offering Michel Legrand's "Castle in Spain" and Eugene Istomin's Rachmaninoff's 2d Concerto. The "Buy" program offers two LPs a month (one classical and one pop) to be peddled at $2.98. Col's "Buy" for May was the Rosemary Clooney-Duke Ellington "Blue Rose" and David Oistrakh's Mozart-Mendelssohn coupling. The pop platter racked up close to 108,000 orders while the longhair LP pulled in nearly 91,000.

The indie Jubilee label is out

FRANK TO REP ASHLEY COS. FOR PIX-TV SALES

Hollywood, May 22.

In a move to get more action on their tunes, the Al Ashley-Paul Gewirtz music operation has entered into a deal with Frank Distributing Co., a subsid of Frank Loesser's Frank Music, under which the latter acquired exclusive licensing rights for pix and tv. Catalogs involved are Edward Schuberth & Co., Consolidated Music (formerly a J. J. Robbins & Sons subsid), and Lewis Music. Deal, which was arranged by Frank rep Herb Eiseman, gives the Loesser company a percentage of all tunes sales for films and video use.

Catalogs include such standards as "Intermezzo," "Tuxedo Junction," "Jersey Bounce," "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend" and "Bye Bye Baby."

Decca Stocks Talent

Decca Records has added several more new names to its talent roster. They include the Chorals, a male vocal quintet in the rock 'n' roll idiom, and the Bey Sisters, a vocal duo. Andy Bey, a brother of these girls, was also pacted separately.

In the country & western field, the diskery added Bobby Helms, from Indiana.

BUCK R&R FOR TOP POP SPOTS

Film and legit tunes are breaking out to a hot pop platter reception. After being shut out for some time by the rock 'n' roll and the straight pop entries, the score tunes are beginning to pick up solid sales and deejay play.

After a quiet start, the legituners came through this spring with a flock of noisemaking disks. From the Sammy Davis Jr. starrer, "Mr. Wonderful" came a hot platter version of the title song by Sarah Vaughan (Mercury) and Peggy Lee (Decca). Edye Gorme's workover of "Too Close for Comfort," from the same show, has been a big seller for the ABC-Paramount label.

Coming up now are tunes from "My Fair Lady" and "The Most Happy Fella." The strong items from the "Lady" score are "I Could Have Danced All Night" by Sylvia Sims on Decca and Vic Damone's "On the Street Where You Live" for Columbia. The Damone disk, incidentally, was issued with Col's mass release of "We All Need Love" (five artists cut the tune). Nothing much happened to "Love," but Damone's "Street Where You Live" shapes as a big one for the label.

Most active of "The Most Happy Fella" entries so far is The Four Lads' slicing of "Standing On the Corner" for Columbia. Frank

Paul Wexler Exits Col.

Paul Wexler exited his veepee post at Columbia Records last week. For the past year he had been in charge of Col's Electronic Products division, which includes Epic Records, the phonograph and transcription departments.

Wexler had been a veepee at Col since 1951 when he was in charge of sales. He was upped to Electronic Products when Hal Cook switched from Capitol Records to take over as Col's national sales director.

Col execs are currently mulling a replacement for Wexler, who plans to enter private business.

HER VOICE REGAINED, KITTY KALLEN ACTIVE

A year-long hassle with her vocal chords came to an end last week when Kitty Kallen cut two sides for Decca. Thrush began having trouble with her voice last June when she was touring Europe and worked with a medico in attendance. Since then she's only worked about six days.

She gave up in July when she lost her voice and went into seclusion at her New Jersey home. The secret of her vocal problem was well kept and stimulated various wrongo rumors in the trade. Decca's artists & repertoire chief Milt Gabler knew what was wrong and despite contractual obligations that the thrush had with the company, decided to sit tight until she was ready to get back into action.

About six months ago she got help from Dr. Georgianna Preacher, profesor of phoniatrics in Temple U.'s Dept. of Larynology. On advice from her husband-manager. Budd Granoff she waited a few months more before swinging into singing action.

At the session last week, she cut "True Love," the Cole Porter tune from the Metro filmusical "High Society," and "Will I Always Be Your Sweetheart?"

She's also set to get back on the in-person circuit. She has a three-year deal with the Riviera, Las Vegas, yet to be fulfilled.

Phyllis E. Powell, 20, Fort Wayne, Ind., who has been singing with Jimmy Stier's orch there for the past two years, will become vocalist with Ted Weems orch starting May 25 in Fort Worth, Tex.

Cong. Committee Probing Music Fund Hears Petrillo Branded as 'Dictator'; Cecil Read Grilled for Three Hours

Hollywood, May 22.

Obviously confused by manifold angles in the dispute over the Musicians Trust Fund, a three-man House education and labor subcommittee wallowed through four hours of testimony yesterday (Mon.) in an effort to determine whether any legislation is indicated. Although authorization is limited to probe of the fund, the committee—which did not swear in witnesses—heard charges of AFM prexy James C. Petrillo's "dictatorial" powers and studied controversial Article 1 Section 1 of the union's constitution. Chairman Phil Landrum (D., N.C.) finally decided a bylaw provision for amending the constitution "has no value whatsoever if the president wants to use sweeping powers." Rep. James Roosevelt (D., Cal.) later called it "the most undemocratic powers ever given any individual."

After four hours of testimony on pix-to-tv formula, telepix, canned music, reuse of transcriptions, etc., Rep. Joe Holt (R., Cal.) admitted wearily, "every time I think I understand one of these things, there's something new."

Live-Canned Differential

CBS' western director of music, Lud Gluskin, told the committee that the difference between live and canned music on a teleshow would be about $3,500 weekly. Using live music, 10 musicians would earn around $1,000 while the Trust Fund would get $1,500. Giuskin, who said he is innocent of AFM charges for which he was expelled

Carlton's 3-Year Pact

Joe Carlton, RCA Victor's pop artists & chief, is due to sign a new three-year deal with the company shortly. Larry Kanaga, Victor v.p. and general manager of the disk division, said the company's pop single business has been rolling strongly and that he was "most happy" with Carlton.

Carlton took over the a&r reigns at Victor three years ago. His last pact ran out at the end of last month.

Solon Asks Legal Curb on Petrillo At AFM Grill

Hollywood, May 22.

Legislation to curb "sweeping authority" now enjoyed by James C. Petrillo, prez of American Federation of Musicians, "should be" recommended to Congress, Rep. Phil Landrum (D., N.C.) declared today (Tues.) after hearing testimony in the Music Trust Fund disposition. Landrum is chairman of three-man House education and labor subcommittee currently in L. A. to hear member complaints against the fund and Petrillo.

Landrum told VARIETY evidence indicated that legislation is necessary. "He has more power over this union than I have over myself," he declared. Such legislation, if suggested, couldn't, however, under normal procedure be enacted for at least two years.

Meanwhile John te Groen, ousted Local 47 prexy, told the committee Petrillo had admitted it was "a mistake" to have diverted to the Trust Fund the $25 scoring fee for old pix to video which originally went to individual members. Asked if Petrillo would give it back, he replied, "that I don't know." He said Petrillo and members of the union's international exec board admitted the action was taken "without too much forethought."

SARAH VAUGHAN'S NEW FOUR-YEAR MERC DEAL

Sarah Vaughan's pact with Mercury Records has been picked up for another four years. Thrush's initial paper had seven more months to run but Art Talmadge, Merc's veepee, set a new deal retroactive to April, 1956, with a hefty guarantee. She received no guarantee when she joined the label in December, 1953.

Miss Vaughan will continue to cut pop disks under the Merc banner and jazz etchings for its subsid EmArcy label. Her top disks since joining Merc have been "Make Yourself Comfortable," which went over 1,000,000 sales, "Whatever Lola Wants," which hit the 880,000 mark, and "How Important Can It Be," which rang up close to 500,000 platter sales.

She'll also continue splitting her in-person appearance between class niteries and jazz clubs. In the offing are dates at the Fairmont, San Francisco, Harrah's, Lake Tahoe, Nev., the Steel Pier, Atlantic City, and the Newport (R.I.) and Lenox (Mass.) jazz festivals.

Elmer Bernstein's Pact

Elmer Bernstein, who composed the score for the pic, "The Man With The Golden Arm," has been signed by Decca as maestro.

He will slice a series of jazz and film albums and some of his classical compositions.

House Would Put 10% Bite on Phonos, Tapes 'Where They Compete'

Washington, May 22.

Record players and tape and wire recorders should become subject to a 10% excise bite, the House Ways and Means Committee has decided tentatively. The committee, where all Federal tax legislation originates, has been considering the report and recommendations of its special subcommittee on excise tax technical and administrative problems. The subcommittee proposed changes to eliminate inequities and to improve administration of the excise laws. The full committee will be continuing its work all this week.

The record players to be taxed would be those in competition with phonographs, which are already subject to a 10% levy at the manufacturers' level. Tape and wire recorders would be taxed because they are in competition with phonograph records, which are under a 10% tax.

The Ways and Means Committee also tentatively approved another amendment which would make the tax on tv and radio components apply to those in connection with entertainment type sets. The law presently covers all components. The committee rejected its subcommittee's suggestion that transistors, which are in competition with radio and television tubes, also be taxed at 10%.

Denton's French Rights To Bloom, Fields' Tunes

Just before Jack Denten, head of Publications Francis Day, returned to his Paris base he picked up Ben Bloom's newie, "The Legend of the Bells," an instrumental by Paul Weirick to which Elsie Simmons set the lyric. Denton also acquired five Latin-type instrumentals from pianist Irving Fields, bandleader-composer at the Park-Sheraton's Merm-aid Room, N. Y.

Fields will publish them himself in the U. S.

and fined $5,000, wasn't asked if CBS would use live musicians if the fund payments were eliminated. Similarly, Dean Johnston, attorney for the Assn. of Television Film Producers, which makes "about 70% of all telefilms," wasn't asked if the Trust Fund formula was responsible for the fact that "about 90% of all telefilms now use canned music."

Petrillo 'Defeatist'

Bob Crosby blamed the present music biz plight on Petrillo's "defeatist" attitude. Asked why N. Y. Local 802 hadn't joined the revolt, he opined that they're "probably waiting to see what happens to men here who face expulsion—which I guess now includes me."

(Petrillo and the AFM board started deliberations today (Tues.) in N. Y. on a recommendation to expel the leaders of the Local 47 revolt. A decision is expected shortly.)

Committee also heard Holly Humphries, orchestra manager for Ozzie Nelson, and read Nelson's letter recounting Petrillo's refusal to make a deal cutting fund payments in return for guaranteed employment. Result has been mounting pressure from ABC-TV to use canned music on "Ozzie and Harriet."

Cecil Read, Local 47 veepee, leader of the insurgents, was on the stand for almost three hours, taking up the entire morning session tracing background of the dispute, particularly the changing AFM policies on pix-to-tv which "cost local musicians $2,500,000" since last June on scoring fees for old theatrical pix sold to video. He also discussed the recording industry contract and injected new copyright angle, contending that Petrillo is now attempting to control international discussions of performers' property rights by creating what amounts to an international music performance trust fund. However, said Read, also involved would be actors and singers, whose unions (SAG, AFTRA) were "deliberately excluded from discussions by Petrillo's autocratic and dictatorial manner."

Pressure On Probe

Hearing opened against a background of reports of pressure from the Eisenhower administration to call off the probe of the Music Performance Trust Fund. Rep. Holt told a press conference Friday (18) that there had been pressure from several sources. He admitted, under questioning, that some of the pressure had come from "the executive branch of the Government" although he denied that there had been any direct communication from the White House.

Meanwhile, the insurgents sounded the battle cry for another stormy membership meeting to be held next Monday (28) with the official announcement of an agenda listing six instructions to delegates to the AFM convention in Atlantic City June 11-14. The delegates, elected two years ago, are John te Groen and Maury Paul, ousted as president and recording secretary of the local respectively two months ago in the early phases of the Local 47 dispute, and Phil Fischer, international studio rep for AFM and a former veepee of the local.

Trio, of course, are pro-Petrillo, but the membership will be asked to vote to order them to go before the convention with a series of suggestions for amendment changes curbing the powers of Petrillo and the international board, reversing the policy towards the Performance Trust Fund and reversing any action in connection with the recommended expulsion of the dissident leaders.

Other instructions to the delegates—if approved by the membership — would demand amendments under which the locals could participate in negotiations and approval of all collective bargaining agreements affecting them; and resolutions requiring for collective bargaining agreements to provide for residual rights and re-use payments comparable to those of SAG, AFTRA and other show biz unions.

A Bombshell

Dissidents sprang a bombshell at the Local 47 board of directors meeting Friday (18) in a series of maneuvers insuring control of the Board regardless of any action taken to expel the leadership "tried" by Goldberg. At intervals during the day (so that the insurgent majority was never threatened) five directors facing possible expulsion tendered their resignations. Successors were immediately nominated and voted into office on an "interim" basis, leaving the Head faction still in control of the local even if the threatened expulsions take place.

A similar maneuver took care of control of the Musicians Club, nonprofit organization in whose name is vested the title of the local's modernistic $150,000 home.

Directors who resigned were Uan Rasey, William J. Atkinson, Warren Baker, Jack Dumont and Ray Toland. They were succeeded by Virgil Evans, Warren Barker, Herbie Harper, Maurice Harris and John Tranchitella, all Read supporters.

Another fight was shaping up over proposed changes in the constitution of the Musicians Club, changes which te Groen promptly labeled as "Read's most diabolical plot to date." If passed, te Groen contended, the Club's property "would become the property" of a new musicians union which Read could set up, and "members who wish to remain in AFM would lose their property rights" in the Musicians Club.

Promise or Threat?

Hollywood, May 22.

Newest—and most unusual—disk version of the George Gershwin classic, "Porgy and Bess," will be released by Bethlehem Records in the next few months.

It features Frances Faye as Bess and Mel Torme as Porgy. Russ Garcia's orch backed.

DECCA SEEING DOUBLE ON ALBUM-SINGLE HITS

It's an unusual event when an album and a tune from the same album are simultaneous bestsellers in their respective brackets, but Decca has two such double clicks now riding. The diskery's soundtrack album of "The Man With the Golden Arm" is a topseller and a single platter extract from the score, the "Main Title" number, also has been showing up strongly.

In the same way, the soundtrack set of the Columbia Pictures production, "Picnic," has been a strong seller, while the "Moonglow"-"Theme From Picnic" single extract from that package has also been moving fast. Elmer Bernstein batoned the "Golden Arm" score and Morris Stoloff conducted the "Picnic" soundtrack.

MGM GUNNING FOR 'ANNIE' TRACK MARK

MGM Records is shooting for new sales on its soundtrack set of "Annie Get Your Gun." Label is prepping a promotion on the soundtracker geared to the re-release of the Metro filmusical set for June 15.

MGM sales execs figure that a new platter market for the set has developed since the film was first released in 1950. Label is pitching a 10-inch LP and a 12-incher. Later couples "Annie" with "Easter Parade," another Metro filmusical.

Satchmo in Top Form For Two Scot Shows

Glasgow, May 22.

Louis Armstrong and the All-Stars, here for two shows in the 3,500-seat auditorium of the massive Kelvin Hall, received a top welcome from local patrons. Satchmo faced a nearly two-thirds empty first performance, but the second show was much bigger. Armstrong was backed by a support layout. Lack of crowd for first show was blamed on high scale.

The mild first show didn't throw Satchmo off his style. He was in top form. So were his musicians.

Organ Music In Comeback But On Jazz Beat

Minneapolis, May 15.

As an "experimental" added attraction at the 4,100-seat Radio City Theatre, Charlie Winchell, new United Paramount circuit general manager, is re-introducing organ music.

This time, however, instead of emanating from the theatre's huge Wurlitzer, the music will be played on a newly installed Estey electrical so-called "hot" organ for jazz, swing, rock 'n' roll and stuff likely to appeal to the younger set.

Added quirk: Frankie Cammarata, majoring in music at the U. of Minnesota with the idea of becoming a symphony orchestra conductor eventually, will preside at the "hot" keyboard.

Cliff Ayers has moved his Melody Acres dancehall and restaurant operation from Covington Downs to the Log Cabin Park, Lathrop Rd., closer to Fort Wayne, Ind.

Inside Stuff—Music

Memphis has long been known for its film censorship, but a ban of a musical kind was recently imposed by another Tennessee city—Jackson. However, the Jackson censorship was of a benevolent sort designed to keep an old lady's feelings from being hurt. When the Casey Jones' memorial was recently dedicated at Jackson, in the house "the brave engineer" occupied before his tragic train wreck death in 1900, a feature of the program was taped dubbings of about a score of "Casey Jones" recordings provided by Jim Walsh, VARIETY musicologist. But to spare the feelings of Jones' 86-year-old widow, who was present and made a spry speech, Jackson officials asked that the erasing device be applied wherever the couplet about Casey's children having "another papa on the Salt Lake line" occurred. This was done, thus sparing the feelings of Mrs. Jones, who has battled against the lines she has considered objectionable ever since the "Casey Jones" ballad swept the country in 1910.

Plans by Philips to wax a performance of Louis Armstrong and his All Stars during concerts at the City Hall, Newcastle, England, were vetoed by the British Musicians' Union last week. Philips hoped for okay to record the group, Armstrong being under contract to Columbia Records for whom Philips issues disks in England. Contracts for the Armstrong tour included a paragraph which stipulated he must not record, film, televize or broadcast, except for the purpose of an interview. A similar clause is in Freddy Randall's contract for his U.S. trip.

2 Bylaw Changes Put To ASCAP Membership

ASCAP members are currently voting on a couple of technical amendments to the Society's bylaws which were proposed recently by Stanley Adams, board member who just stepped out of prexy post. One amendment involves the filling of vacancies on the ASCAP board.

Present articles fail to take into account that all board members have been elected for two-year terms since 1950, rather than the previous system of electing one-third of the board each year with each member serving three years. Adams' amendment brings the provision for filling vacancies in line with this.

Other amendment is similarly constructed to bring the bylaws into conformity with the facts and concerns the procedure of making appeals. Present wording has the board as the top appeal panel while the amendment would change that to read a panel of board members.

Cabbie Asks $100,000 In 'Wake The Town' Suit

San Francisco, May 22.

James Johnson, a 29-year-old Frisco cab dispatcher, finds tunes running through his head while he works. Or so, at least, he says in a $100,000 general damage suit he filed in Federal Court last week. Seven years ago, his suit claims, he discovered a tune he titled "Looking Into Space."

But now he claims he heard the same tune, this time called "Wake the Town and Tell the People." Johnsons suit acknowledges the words are different but claims the pop hit used the "composition and format" of his melody.

So he's suing the publishers, Joy Music, and writers Jerry Livingston and Sammy Gallop.

Talent Jockeying in Chi's Jackpot Of Jazz Joints Bopping a New High

By GABE FAVOINO

Chicago, May 22.

The Chicago jazz scene continues to expand. Latest entry in the rash of niteries adopting a jazz policy is the Modern Jazz Room, which opened last week (18) with J&K booked in for 10 days as the room's preem jazz talent.

The room, situated above the Preview Lounge, is operated by Ralph Mitchell and Milt Schwartz, who also run the Preview. The Preview will continue to showcase the more commercial dixieland and rook 'n' roll groups, while the new room will offer exponents of avant-garde jazz. The jazz spot was converted from a terpery. Mambo City laid low as the mambo craze died down.

The new room will feature names and semi-names of the progressive school of jazz. Eli Phelps, former Decca record plugger here, is handling promotion for acts playing the room and their records. Associated Booking Corp. agent Hal Munroe is house booker.

Following J&K, Gerry Mulligan bows May 30 for two weeks, Chet Baker comes in June 20 for two, Dan Elliott opens July 4 for a pair, Chico Hamilton is set for two frames July 18 and the Australian Jazz Quartet is inked for a two-weeker Aug. 1.

British Publisher Rights Force 'Hit Parade' Off Amer. Forces Network

Frankfurt, May 22.

Officials at the American Forces Network headquartering at Hoechst near here have admitted that British publishers' rights have forced them to discontinue the popular "Hit Parade" show.

Show, which has been a major Saturday night feature at the AFN net for many years, has been produced by the station itself based on a compilation of the top hits listed in VARIETY and from recording company information of the most popular current tunes in the U. S.

However, it is a fact of long-standing grievance to AFN listeners that British song publishers option music from American musicals, and until the musical itself has played in England, the music from it cannot be aired where British listeners can hear it, in order that they will not be tired of the music before the show plays. Although the purpose of AFN is to provide entertainment and information for the U. S. troops in Europe, the music ban extends to its shows, since many of its listeners are British.

AFN officials and listeners have long objected to this ruling, since it deprives American troops stationed here of hearing music that's popular in the States. As a result, "Hit Parade" has become unreal, since many of the American counterpart tunes cannot be aired in this area. Only recently, the music from "Plain and Fancy" and "Three Penny Opera" and "Pajama Game" has been cleared here, coinciding with or following the opening of the plays in London.

Ed Sullivan is replacing the "Hit Parade" in its eve slot.

Material ranges from ancient chan's to the modern dance stuff prevalent in the Islands.

Now, Harry Owens has made a deal to use the Criterion package for his upcoming series of 15 minute travel telefilms based in the romance of the Tahiti area. Similarly, a Criterion item, "The Far Lands," written by James Normal Hall and Eddie Lund, has been picked as the theme for the Jon Hall "Knight of the South Seas" vidfilm series. Calls for the music also are developing in other quarters and Criterion recently placed some of its stuff in a commercial film made for the Matson Line, whose steamers ply between the mainland and Honolulu.

RCA VICTOR spotlights hometown broadcasting

Goody Asks 750G In Hi-Fi Trust Suit

Sam Goody, large N. Y. dealer in disks and audio equipment, filed a $750,000 triple damages action in N. Y. Federal Court last week against several manufacturers of hi-fi equipment and Hudson Radio Corp., a competitive retail store. Other defendants are R. T. Bozak Sales, Electro-Voice Inc. and Eugene Carduner, distributor of British equipment in the U. S.

Plaintiff charges that he had entered into deals with the manufacturers for their equipment to be sold through the Goody Audio Center, a part of Goody's disk outlet in N. Y. Goody now charges that the defendants have entered into an agreement to stop selling him and thus are engaged in a conspiracy and combination in violation of the antitrust laws.

Victor Adds New Field Rep for Singles Dept.

Dick Maxwell has been added to RCA Victor's pop singles division as field representative for the southern territory. Formerly sales rep for RCA's Milwaukee distributor, Taylor Electronics, Maxwell is one of a half-dozen Victor staffers on the road plugging nothing but single disks. Victor has a similar personnel complement in the field for the album division.

Maxwell took the spot formerly held by Sam Esgrow, who has been moved into the company's home instruments division.

Torch Carries Smitman

Ralph R. Smitman returned to the music biz last week as general manager of Torch Productions, an ASCAP firm.

He previously was associated with Von Tilzer Music.

Westminster Exec O'Seas

Henry Gage, v.p. of Westminster Records, headed for Europe over last weekend to expand the long-hair company's distribution abroad.

to spark its summer revenue with a special sales program on its album product. During June, July and August, diskery will give dealers one cuffo LP for every 12 albums ordered. Six additional albums will be cuffoed for every 144 sets purchased.

The bonus deal will apply to Jubilee's extended play product also. There are about 50 album's in Jubilee's catalog now.

With the Morty Palitz regime just a little more than two weeks old, label is now settling down to a regular release pattern. With four albums due in May, Palitz will slice the schedule during the summer season to one a month. In the singles field, plan now calls for the release of two platters every two weeks.

tinue to get first call on repertory from the U.S. company.

Similarly in the British Decca setup where Mantovani has been the big name in the U.S., via London Records, it's likely that another British Decca maestro, Frank Chacksfield, will be given a buildup on the Victor label in the U.S. under terms of the deal which gives Victor the call on some of British Decca's names for distribution here.

Metropolitan Opera star soprano Victoria de los Angeles is likely to be in a favorable position between HMV and Victor when her HMV deal runs out. Victor, which has been accenting opera releases with the top Metopera names, would like to retain the singer since she's virtually indispensable. The possibility of talent swaps, a la the baseball clubs, is also likely among the various companies who want to arrive at a well-balanced roster which complements, rather than conflicts with, their foreign affiliates.

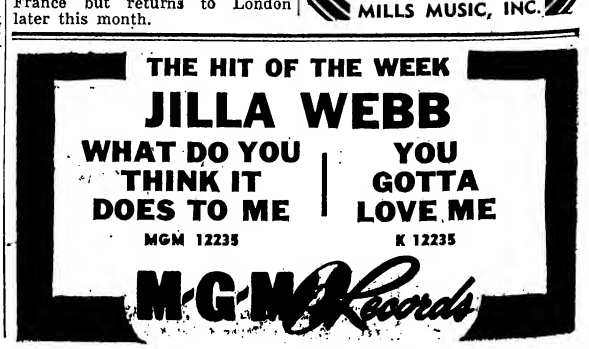
Howie Richmond Abroad

London, May 22.

U. S. music publisher Howie Richmond has arrived in London for a month's business visit. He spent his first week conferring with David Platz of Essex Music, the British side of Richmond's business.

Richmond flies on to Italy and France but returns to London later this month.



Chi's 500G Combo Eat-Terp-Teevee

Chicago, May 22.

A Chicago south side restaurant operator is building what may be the first restaurant, ballroom and outdoor theatre especially designed for tv band remotes. Tony De Santis, whose Martinique eatery has grown too big for its present locale, plans to debut his new concrete and steel showplace July 1, at a cost of around $500,000.

De Santis is planning to invite top execs of all local video outlets to o.o. his new spot to excite their interest in the kind of thing he's mulling and possibly conclude a deal with one of them.

A unique feature of the new Martinique is a special balcony for placement of tv camera crews, with a two-and-a-half inch conduit for a video line. Construction of steel-supported balcony forced the ceiling up on one side of the room to almost twice the height of the rest of the place. From the tv balcony, directly opposite a jumbo bandstand, it will be possible to pan the entire room, and of course, to focus directly on the band. Room will be dominated by a two-story waterfall, running into a basement ballroom with room for 1,500 dancers or 800 diners. Upstairs capacity is 600.

De Santis says he is currently negotiating with seveal bandleaders and that Wayne King so far seems to be the strongest contender.

Decca in Big Spree On Legit 'King' As Pic Nears

Once again an original legit cast album will have renewed commercial values as a result of the pic version of the Broadway musical. With 20th-Fox's version of Rodgers & Hammerstein's musical, "The King and I," due to be released this summer, Decca Records has already started a promotion of its five-year-old legit cast album starring the late Gertrude Lawrence and Yul Brynner. Latter is also starring in the Capitol Records' soundtrack set of the pic.

In the last year, Decca has had renewed sales activity on such legit cast albums as "Oklahoma," "Carousel" and "Guys and Dolls" as a result of the musical's Hollywood versions.

Talent Jockeying In Chi

there profitably for a longer time and that longer bookings will make it possible to avoid repeating the same groups too often.

When the new Modern Jazz Room opens, Chicago will have seven music rooms of importance, four in or near the Loop (the Blue Note, the London House, the Preview and the Modern Jazz Room) and three on the south side, (the Crown Propeller Lounge, the Stage Lounge, and Budland). This tally does not take into account the minor rooms with local groups or the Cloister Inn, where an attempt is made to discover potential jazz stars and ink them to longterm contracts. A report has Cloister operator Paul Raffles thinking of converting his basement jazz emporium to a record name policy.

Threat To Blue Note

The growing number of rooms showcasing musical groups, a development in part dictated by modern day show biz economics (20% tax, Vegas and tv-hypoed entertainer salaries, and difficulty of obtaining name performers in niteries, all of which have hurt the traditional nitery), shapes as a threat to Chicago's oldest jazz nitery, the Blue Note. Faced with little competition for years, owner Frank Holzfeind is watching acts that used to play his room exclusively now being booked into the Johnny-come-lately rooms. For example, Errol Garner, Marian McPartland, and the Australian Jazz Quartet all played the Blue Note in the past. Now, tradesters believe, it looks like Holzfeind will have difficulty getting enough strong attractions to keep the Blue Note humming 52 weeks a year. He still has the only conveniently located room large enough to play the big bands; but it's not necessarily true that the big bands, in short supply anyway, make big coin for an operator and certainly he can't operate 52 weeks with Kenton, Basie and Ellington alone.

Another interesting fact highlighted by the Windy City jazz boom is that Associated Booking Corp. thoroughly dominates the jazz field; the whole Chicago jazz upbeat has been sparked by veepee Freddie Williamson of ABC and agent Hal Munroe, with Joe Glaser calling signals from New York. This is of course a two-edged sword, with the nitery operator who won't play ball getting the wrong edge. Still, a lot more people are making healthy coin this way than if everybody went fishing, although ABC stands to make money win, lose or draw and regardless of who they sell to, just so long as they keep selling.

specimens in Latin tempo under the title of "Invitation To The Mambo" . . . French for Travel is a good Columbia LP (ML 5086) which, as the title indicates, has Howard G. Harvey, French prof at the U. of Rochester, presenting a savvy road company of Berlitz on wax—excepting that Berlitz has nothing to do with it. Four different voices, in authoritative accent and with skillful repetitiveness of words and phrases, run the gamut of conventional conversation. It goes beyond the "restaurant French" approach because, apart from breakfast, lunch and dinner ordering, there are vignettes at the hotel upon arrival, and some routines at the shopping, perfume counter, cigar-stand, information and railway ticket offices. A good brochure accompanies the LP; there is a li'l SAS (Swedish airlines) commercial, because of the Mitch Miller angle; and there's another little French touch with a replica tag of a Lanvin perfume bottle to tie it all together. It's about time that the diskeries, which have been most enterprising in musical Cook's tours, approach the major foreign languages with platters like this. They are bound to further whet international interest. Abel.

Pix-B'way Tunes

Loesser, who publishes his own score via his Frank Music firm, is spotting release dates of the show's tunes and there are still more to come.

Even the out-of-town foldo, "Strip for Action," came thorugh with a strong pop entry in Nat King Cole's "Too Young to Go Steady" for Capitol. Biggest showtune click this year, of course, is "Moritat," from the off-Broadway production of "Three Penny Opera."

Of the film tune showcasings, the duo 'Moonglow-Picnic," from Columbia Pictures' "Picnic," is getting plenty of disk and sheet sales action as wel as a third-consecutive week slotting on "Hit Parade." The high-riding disks are Morris Stoloff for Decca and George Cates for Coral.

Theme songs from "The Searchers" and "The Proud Ones" are now being primed for a big disk push and Doris Day's "Whatever Will Be, Will Be," from "The Man Who Knew Too Much," looks like it's on its way.

DECCA KEEPING PACE WITH SUBURBAN TREND

While an increasing number of disk buyers are exodusing the New York metropolitan environs for the suburbs, the disk distribution setup has still been more or less centralized within the city limits. Now, however, Decca Records is moving to keep its distribution in step with the population shifts.

The diskery has opened a new substation in Uniondale, L. I., to service all the company's accounts in Nassau and Suffolk. Abe Levine will manage the new branch, which will operate under the general jurisdiction of the Decca branch in Woodside, Queens.

AGVA Poses Clyde Beatty as Rival To Big Show at Key Eastern Stands

Boston, May 22.

With statements and counter-statements shooting back and forth from Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus in Boston Garden and the American Guild of Variety Artists' circus in the Arena during last week's six days for Ringling and seven days for AGVA, it appeared that the first test of labor strength in the controversy between the union and the Big Show had cut the customary Ringling gross of $250,000 for its Boston stand to less than $100,000.

The round-the-clock picketing, with 44 pickets from AGVA and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, slashed matinee and evening performances attendance at opening (15) and accounted for a heavy toll during the ensuing five days.

Attendance situation was a touchy subject at Ringling Bros. Its official figures were disputed by AGVA. Ringling claimed opening matinee of 8,000; 6,000 at opening night; Wednesday matinee, 8,000; Wednesday night, 6,000; Thursday matinee, 10,000. Boston Garden seats 13,909.

It was the smallest attendance on opening night in the history of the Ringling stands in Boston. Even the customary heavy paper didn't show up. One wire service reported opening night at 1,600.

AGVA said it clocked the Ringling attendance at 1,800 for Tuesday matinee; 2,100 for Tuesday night; 2,200 for Wednesday afternoon; 2,760 for Wednesday night, and 3,000 for Thursday matinee.

Jackie Bright, national administrative secretary of AGVA, estimated total attendance for Ringling was in the neighborhood of 50,000 for the six-day stand ending Sunday (20). Bright said the AGVA circus grossed between $22,000 and $23,000, and had an operating nut of $18,000, anl played to around 80,000 persons. AGVA show was price-tagged at $1.50 with children free when accompanied by parents.

North Up Ahead

Controversy over figures raged between the rival circuses. The affray was marked by the nonappearance in Boston of John Ringling North, who was reported in Baltimore and Washington checking on the advance in both spots.

Rumors flew that North might close the show and go back to Florida after the Boston stand. Another strong report to the effect that stockholders were bringing court action for a receivership, with Edward Kelly to be appointed receiver for the estate of Mrs. Charles Ringling, was circulating. John Ringling North reportedly owns or has influence over 51% of the stock.

Meantime, Bright reported that the Clyde Beatty Circus, folded in Deming, N. M., would be brought in to play in opposition to Ringling in Baltimore, Washington, Philadelphia and along the route. Bright said the Art Concello, former general manager for Ringling,

Boston's Fightin' Femme License Chairman to O.O. Strip & Belly Terpers

Boston, May 22.

A drive on strip and "Oriental" dancing is underway here by the Boston Licensing Board. Chairman Mary E. Driscoll said: "Any place found to be featuring risque, off-color striptease or so-called belly dancing will be brought before the board for a hearing."

Action came following a wave of Oriental terpers imported by several niteries. The outspoken chairman said that one of her pet peeves is "obnoxious" dancing performances. "I'm sensitive about these things and I'll get out myself and see these belly bumps," she said.

No formal complaints from either citizens or police have been made to the board concerning this type of dancing, she pointed out, but said the board is making a careful study of the type of entertainment being offered in night spots and that her tour is part of the study.

Professional ice shows lose more skaters to Harvard Law School. Hayes Alan Jenkins, who will tour with "Holiday on Ice," during the summer, will pick up enough change to enter that Blackstone preppery, and after that, his professional career will be indefinite.

Jenkins is following the pattern set by Dick Button, the previous Olympic men's single figure skating topper, who also entered Harvard Law School following a season with a pro outfit, "Ice Capades."

Jenkins will join "Holiday" at Minneapolis July 10, thence to Portland, Ore., July 20, and he follows with a summer with the European edition of "Holiday on Ice," joining the show in Gotenborg, Sweden, until Sept. 10.

Jenkins, in addition to being the Olympic champ, holds the grand slam in singles championships, the world, U. S. and North American tiaras.

Question State Dept. on Payment Of Entertainment Tax

Washington, May 22.

U. S. State Department is being asked for an opinion on whether excise tax exemptions for foreign diplomats and members of their families should be continued. The exceptions include the 10% tax on admissions and the 20% bite on night club checks.

Information has been requested by the House Ways and Means Committee, which originates all Federal taxes. Action was taken at the request of a subcommittee on excise technical problems.

House Panel Sets New Excise Rules On Niteries, Etc.

Washington, May 22.

The House Ways and Means Committee last week approved a number of technical excise tax changes — principally affecting niteries—which had been recommended by a special subcommittee on excise tax technical problems. These are:

1. The proprietor or operator of a cabaret shall be required to collect and pay the Government the 20% cabaret tax on sales made by concessionaires.

2. Internal Revenue Service should issue new rulings providing that when a private organization conducts an affair in a room normally used as a cabaret (with the proprietor supplying dinner but not entertainment), the tax will not apply when the organization negotiates for its own show.

3. The cabaret tax shall not be applicable to milk bars, where entertainment comes from jukeboxes or music supplied without charge by the milk bar operator.

4. The 10% admissions tax shall apply only to events taking place in the United States, but shall apply even if the payment is made outside this country.

5. All admissions to swimming pools, skating rinks and other places offering participation sports shall be exempt from the 10% admission tax.

Phil Harris orch played four-day stand at the new Balinese Room, Galveston, Tex., last week, along with the Fontane Sisters, who'll continue for several weeks.

Burke Refutes AGVA on Poor B.O. For Big Top in Hub; Biz 'Normal' (250G)

By GUY LIVINGSTON

Boston, May 22.

Michael Bailey Burke, executive director of Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey, told the New England Associated Press Newspaper Assn. at their spring meeting in the Parker House here Friday (18) that the picketing of American Guild of Variety Artists at Boston Garden "has not hurt one bit." He said the circus was doing its "normal Boston business and expected to gross its usual $250,000," and that in regard to the AGVA demands, "I don't see any reason for us to change our viewpoint on this."

He refuted the claim of Jackie Bright, AGVA executive head, that the union represents 51% of the circus performers. "This is not so," he stated. "If AGVA represented 51% of the performers, they could pull them out. They tried it in New York and pulled out five acts, three clowns, a baton twirler and a singer—five out of 278 performers. We believe that every man has a right to choose his union. I don't see any reason for us to change our viewpoint on this."

Burke also lashed out at a statement made by Bright that the AGVA competing circus at Boston Arena and the picketing would cut the Ringling gross for the six-day Boston stand to under $100,000, saying "that's ridiculous, we had a $92,000 advance before opening."

He also branded as "false" reports that the circus would not show in Baltimore, Washington and Philadelphia. "We use 42 cars for New York and Boston," he said. "Thirty-eight cars are left in Florida with canvas. These left Sarasota and are now setting up in Baltimore. He also said that reports that John Ringling North was chasing around Baltimore, Washington and Philadelphia to eye advance money with a view to folding up and going home if the advances were too far off, were "fantastic." He said North was in New York planning for next season's circus.

Next Season's Innovations

Burke revealed that Ringling Bros. is planning a new type tent for next season, octagon instead of oval, without quarter poles, to be supported by aluminum trusses and raised by hydraulic lifts. "This will bring everyone in closer and allow full visibility throughout," he said. Plans are now in the drawing board stage, he reported.

"The circus is in the public domain; it is a national institution and of course everybody tries to tell us how to run the circus," Burke told the newspaper executives. "We are trying to keep it a circus, but modernizing it to compete with other forms of entertainment.

"Oftentimes we hear that we have 'gone Broadwayish,' that the 'oldtime circus doesn't exist.' We will always have things in the circus that will make it unique. How to keep abreast of the times is the neat trick and it's up to us to do it. There have been many changes internally in the circus this season," he said.

He said that there was no plan

Wildwood, N. J., Digs Wax, TV Acts As 100 Cafes Get Set for Teeoff

By CHARLES V. MATHIS

Wildwood, N. J., May 22.

This seashore resort city near south Jersey's Cape May again figures as one of the most important show biz centers and buyers of talent for the summer of 1956. Over 100 night spots, which annually attract upwards of $2,500,000 in business, have the rubber bands off the bankrolls on live talent for the season. Teeoff is May 25 for most of the night spots. Record and tv names are again getting the nod over Hollywood personalities, while the clubs not featuring big names are going in heavily for rock 'n' roll attractions. Shows will be continuous from nine o'clock seven nights a week, with daily matinees at many clubs and weekend matinees at others.

Ben Martin's Club Bolero has already pacted one-week engagements for Frankie Laine, Julius LaRosa, Lillian Roth, Teresa Brewer, Vagabonds, Four Aces, Tony Bennett, and Don Cornell.

The Bolero, seating over 1,200, also is reported dickering with Elvis Presley and Sammy Davis Jr. to fill in some of the remaining slots. Martin is also shopping for a Broadway line. He has signed the Rocky Valentine band from Philly's Latin Casino for 10 weeks and it will also be a showcase for name comics, mostly from tv ranks.

Eddie Suez has signed Joe Maize and his Chordsmen, frequent features of the Ed Sullivan tv show, for the summer at his 1,500-seat Club Avalon. Al Fisher and Lou Marks, comedians, are in on an optional contract. Jackie Burns opens the spot's summer policy May 25. Suez will offer a name singer policy. Sammy Paul's band from Sciolla's in Philly will furnish the musical background. Six nights weekly, Suez will highlight a comedy show, with Monday nights devoted to rock 'n' roll combos.

Other Bookings

Decca Records' Four Matys Bros. have been inked for 10 weeks at the Grenoble hotel and cafe. Jake Diamond's Martinique, another center-island spot just a few feet from the Oak Ave. entrance to the boardwalk, has pacted Steve Gibson & Red Caps with Damita Jo for an all-season stint. It will be the 15th summer-long return for the Red Caps. This time out, they will share the stage with the Four Tunes. Unlike Atlantic City, Wildwood does not permit night clubs on the boardwalk, so this spot gets a heavy play from strollers who can glance at the marquee from the strand.

Phil Bonelli and Edward Rossi of the Hotel Biltmore Surf Club are seeking the eighth summer engagement of the Herbie Fields orch. In addition, they are dickering with Lionel Hampton and Count Basie for two-week stands. Singer Buddy Greco is sought for three to five weeks. Other tentative bookings include the Blockbusters and Chris Powell and his Blue Flames. The Surf Club reopens May 25 with a one-week stand of Don Haven and his Hi-Fi's.

Charlie Johnson's Cafe has signed Coral Records' Jackie Lee for his ninth summer season in the Wildwoods. He will share the stage with Lou Barry, of Philadelphia's Balinese Room.

The first name attraction at Hunt's Starlight Ballroom on the Wildwood boardwalk at Oak Ave. will be the Charlie Spivak orch. Starlight dancery has been a long-time showcase for name bands and singers.

The Manor Hotel Supper Club reopened over the weekend with Pedro Albani orch and comedy team of Marty Allan & Mitch DeWood. A big ice show moves into this room in June.

'Water Follies' Fat 100G At Hi $2 Top in Mex.

Mexico City, May 15.

Sam Snyder's "Water Follies 1956" did socko, grossing nearly $100,000 for 15 shows in 10 days. It was first attraction of its kind to play this city. Top was $2, high for here. Unit was brought here by Luis Yanez and A. Diaz Arraiza.

Show had to adjust quickly after the first performance (May 4) to work in Spanish. Troupe of 40 did that in 24 hours and it made for smoother going. Biz was holding up well enough to warrant another week, but that was prevented because of a booking to open May 28 in Orange, N. J. "Follies" imported plastic diving and swimming tanks. More than 2,000 persons saw the show here, it was estimated.

K.C. Park in Bid For B.O. on 1 Fee

Kansas City, May 22.

Outdoor season in this area bids to be a strong one this year, with opening of two amusement parks scheduled within two weeks. Entertainmentwise, Wildwood Lakes gets the nod, as it will operate on policy established last year of one admission for all attractions including floor show, dancing, concerts, picnics, and swimming. It will be the only al fresco operation fielding a cafe-type bill.

Wildwood kicks off May 29 with Somethin' Smith & the Redheads topping and a band and other acts yet to be announced to round out the week's bill. Summer schedule is expected to include Helen O'Connell, Dorothy Collins, Lillian Ross, the McGuire Sisters, Mindy Carson.

Operating staff at Wildwood includes Vic Allen, Bob Shaw and Mr. and Mrs. George Griffin. This year they are joined by Will Wittig, for 19 years manager of the Pla-Mor Ballroom. Wildwood is located east of town in Jackson County.

Fairyland, the in-town amusement park, already has opened.

Artists Equity Bal Masque A Gay Gig at N. Y. Astor; Still Tough to Spot Sex

The mature values of the town's artists grouped into Artists Equity resulted in one of their top bal masques in the long history of this organization. The overflow attendance of 2,000 at New York's Hotel Sheraton-Astor Friday (18) who came to see, be seen and be judged, provided one of the most picturesque gatherings the town has had since some of the earlier soirees launched by this outfit.

The group, representing some of the best known in the country, apparently has sufficient faith in the followers of the frolic to let them come as they please, with no strings attached on theme or other gimmicks. Thus, the Bal Fantastique lets 'em express their spring madness in any way that it behooves them.

This year's edition showed very imaginative dress and undress. For the evening, the gay set left their usual haunts and congregated here in their finery. To the uninformed observer, it seems that these kids outnumber the Elks. But they did show up and have themselves a time. Except for the announcements by emcee Morey Amsterdam, it would have been difficult to distinguish some of them from genuine girls. However, being left to their own resources, they livened up the event sartorially, terpsichoreally (some of them danced solo) and atmospherically.

The nudes were also very much in evidence. The number with far less than minimal beach requirements, both male and female, were on the same level as in previous years. Perhaps there weren't as many daring bodies flashed around, since many of them figured to try for the final judging, but the epidermis was more imaginatively dis-

Chi IBEW in High-Voltage $50,000 'Salute to Color TV'; Union's Tint Stake

By GABE FAVOINO

Chicago, May 22.

As one of the more lavish expressions of the ever-growing branch of industrial entertainment, the semi-annual Chicago electrical workers' show is the grandaddy of them all. Started 10 years ago to stem Commie infiltration of this largest local union in the U. S. (38,000 members), the shows have grown from a single act of minor importance at the end of a union meeting, into a seven-day $50,000, two-hour-long display of professional calibre. With 10% of the dues yearly is available to keep the membership happy.

SALUTE TO COLOR TV

Chicago Local 1031, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, presents "A Salute to Color Television," with Imogene Coca, Frank Libuse & Margo, Joe Novelle's Dogs, Joe Chester, Len Dresslar, La Verne Pearson, Rita Raines, Muggsy Spanier Orch (6), Darlings Dancers & Singers (24), Lou Breese Orch (18); choreography and staging, Johnny Bachemin; musical arrangements, John Danyluk; art direction, Frank Sylos and Kurt Behrend; sets, Risser Scenic Studio; costumes, courtesy of Moulin Rouge, Hollywood; produced by Frank Darling; admission free to Local 1031 members.

The tag on this, the 69th show in the series, is a bow in the direction of color television, recognized by Local 1031 prexy Frank Darling as the next most important development in the industry that employs his membership. The members of Local 1031 of the AFL International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers push out approximately 65% of the entire U.S. production of tv and radio components and obviously have a big stake in the development of color television. Current show is an example of progressive industrial relations, a positive approach by a union in promoting the industry that provides its employment.

The electrical workers' show is in effect a variety revue, a series of acts spaced with topical production numbers. Although dubbed "A Salute to Color Television," the tint theme is not the thread of continuity used to hold the layout together, which is puzzling. Headliner Imogene Coca introduces the teevee theme in her turn by using some of her "Show of Shows" material. Unfortunately, the show, which has been building to a climax until Miss Coca's act, suffers a very definite letdown when it should be reaching a peak.

Miss Coca uses some very unsuitable material in an act that and his "dummies with a delightful difference"

Just Concluded

RIVERSIDE, Reno

"A rising young man, Stanley Burns, offers a decidedly different and extremely clever ventriloquist act in which the use of dummies takes on a different form than is usually seen in nightclubs. Burns is second to none in ability to throw his voice, and it will not be long before he takes his place among the great entertainers. He was a pleasant surprise, coming in without any fanfare. He didn't surprise Mert Wertheimer, however, for Mert has been picking talented youngsters and helping them to stardom for many years."

No Change in Booking Of Acts on Sullivan TV'er

No changes are being contemplated in the booking setup of the variety acts on the Ed Sullivan CBS-TV show, according to Sullivan. Syndicated columnist of the N. Y. Daily News declared that he customarily does business with all agents. Statement was made following reports that Al Dobritch, formerly from Chicago, had been signed by Sullivan to a two-year contract to set all novelty and acrobatic acts on the show. Sullivan denied that any such arrangement had been made. Fact that Dobritch was living in the same hotel as Sullivan was merely coincidental and has no bearing on the booking picture.

Mark Leddy will continue to be associated with the setting of talent. However, it's emphasized that Sullivan still is the sole booker and is the final word on anything going into his program.

Inside Stuff—Vaudeville

According to Gerald FitzGerald in the Montreal Gazette, agent Ed Fiegelman has received an offer to settle for $5,000 his $45,000 libel suit against a Toronto tab, which printed a pic of a chimpanzee riding a bicycle with an allusion to him. Fiegelman was a w.k. Montreal agent whose clients include Polish-born chantoosie Irene Andrian. She won Canadian Broadcasting Corp.-TV's nationwide "Pick the Stars" last year and has appeared in Ruby Foo's Starlight Room and in Ottawa's Gatineau Club. Meanwhile, the tabloid ran a retraction and an apology to Fiegelman, who died suddenly.

A new type of fountain display is now being marketed. Labeled Musical Fountain, it's a small model measuring 6x10 feet, and is so designed that the frequency of the accompanying music governs which of the three sprays will spot; the volume governs the height. Anthony Simos is marketing the device.

The success of the rock 'n' roll packages in the arenas and auditoriums has prompted the formation of other units to try for the big coin. Now being set up for a tour of the largeseaters is Tony Martin, who is being submitted at $5,000 guarantee against 60% for each show. Music Corp. of America is lining up the dates.

K.C. Banks on Package Deals' Hypo With Niteries as Extra-Added Option

Kansas City, May 22.

The package deal with hotel room, meals, admission to a baseball game, Starlight Theatre performance, with floor show at a night club (optional), is coming strongly into use here. Generally the package offered by one of several hotels includes room and meals overnight, or for two nights, with tickets for a Kansas City Athletics ball game and a Starlight performance, and the price ranges from $16 to $25 per couple.

Night club attendance is left optional in most cases, as only three spots in town offer major floor shows—the Hotel Muehlebach in its Terrace Grill, Eddys' Restaurant and the Orchid Room. Some agencies offering the package entertainment deal will book the night club as an extra-added attraction, for a price.

As was true last year, the first for major league baseball here, restaurants and clubs are getting into the act by offering free transportation to customers to the ballpark or Starlight Theatre, and otherwise cooperating. Whole campaign is sparked by the Merchants Assn. of which W. G. Austin is manager; the Hotel Assn. of which Noel Daniell is president; and the Hotel Assn. Baseball Committee of which Maurice Bluhm is chairman.

Just what the deal means in terms of gross to the downtown live talent spots is dubious, by their own estimates. But most are going along on the theory that what is good for Kansas City is good for them.

Operators agree that the baseball club and the big outdoor theatre in Swope Park cannot be counted as a magnet for a downtown club or hotel entertainment room in itself. Best they hope to do is syphon off some trade through the side door; and hence the cooperation with the major campaign. Only a portion of the baseball and summer theatre fans will be nitery fans, but the spots here are hoping to get to these through the cooperative plan.

The campaign is a reprise on last year, with improvements. Experience then showed that on occasion the cooperative deal was helpful. But it was not a steady patron provider.

Aside to Lindy's: Sgt. Bilko No 'Bomb' in L.V.; 14,000 in 1st 11 Days

Las Vegas, May 22.

Phil Silvers has tallied up an impressive house record for his first 11 days at the Riviera, playing to approximately 14,000 of the Vegas dice-set. The average of 1,250 customers a night, according to maitre d' Jack Denison, shows no sign of diminishing for Silvers' entire run of one month. Denison claims a turnaway of hundreds during the first 11 days will serve to bring 'em back for another crack at the ropes.

Rumors afloat among Gotham's Lindy set (Silvers' own hangout) had spread the word that video's top banana was "bombing" in Vegas with his return to this rich nitery field. This mongering may have been the result of some grumblings about Silver's Riviera format, which doesn't showcase enough of his Sgt. Bilko video character in ratio to his cafe act.

It is no secret that the magnet is Bilko and his "platoon" of GIs (reduced in numbers for this engagement), Maurice Gosfield as Pvt. Doberman; Billy Sands, Pvt. Pappereli; Alan Melvin, Cpl. Henshaw, and Harvey Faye, Cpl. Fender, and that customers want a complete production based upon the "You'll Never Get Rich" theme. Silvers opens with an Army scene which also incorporates the title tune of "Top Banana" and some burley bits. His return as a single, following a choreo production, is in mufti for the concluding half-hour or so.

A tremendous bally surge has accompanied Silvers' Vegas date. A "Sgt. Bilko" day was proclaimed by Mayor C. D. Baker last week (15) and the U. S. Air Force international talent contest held at Nellis AFB here (19) was highlighted by appearance of Silvers as emcee and as a judge along with Abe Schiller, Bill Miller, Stan Irwin, and Sammy Lewis.

LIBERACE HOT $11,800 IN PORTLAND CONCERT

Portland, Ore., May 22.

Liberace grossed a scorching $11,800 in one-niter concert at the Auditorium Friday (18). This is about $4,000 short of his gross here about three years ago, but still on the slightly terrific side considering it was election day and the mercury hit a new high for heat this year.

Concert included brother George and a 40-piece longhair orch. Program had several scenes from his Riviera Hotel show, "Come As You Are." The 3,700-seater was scaled to $4.80. Frank Breall handled the promotion locally.

Jaye P. Morgan will be star of the "Midnight Breakfast" that follows the annual Pin Oaks Stables Charity Horse Show, May 31, for benefit of the Texas Children's Hospital.

Hub's Clubs Charting Name Spree For '55-'56; 'Orphans of the Storm'

Boston, May 22.

Hub niteries, winding up a so-so season, look to make changes in format next season with emphasis on names. Only spot way out in front this season is Blinstrub's, which stuck continuously to the name policy. Hub clubs were walloped by bad weather weekends and worst snowstorms in area's history, which tied up traffic and kept customers away from town.

Owners are also planning a public relations program with radio stations and the Registry of Motor Vehicles to do away with repeated warnings to motorists not to drive in town, long after the storm situations have been cleared up. Several times during the past season, warnings kept coming over the radio on disk jock programs long after the roads were opened. This sort of thing, club owners pointed out, has cost heavily this season.

Windup of season found longest booking in Blinstrub with Frankie Laine ending a 10-day run. Boniface Stanley Blinstrub wanted Laine for a full two weeks, but singer was unable to oblige because of other commitments.

With a $5 minimum at Blinstrub's, Laine was a sellout at the 1,700-seater. Blinstrub's segue of Laine with Jackie Miles and Gisele MacKenzie winds up the last of season's big names for the South Boston boite.

Two niteries will continue all through the summer months, the Frolic at Revere Beach, which has adopted a big name policy, and Al Taxier's roof club in the Bradford Hotel. Salisbury Beach Frolics will operate again this season with standard big name policy.

Steuben's, which has racked up a good season with variety acts, changing the show every two weeks, closes in June. Max and Joe Schneider hope to wind up with stars.

Horace McMahon May Give Vaude 'Sketch' New Life in Palace Anni Bill

The "sketch," always a standard in the heyday of vaudeville, has not been part of the hybrid vaudfilm shows for more than a generation, but Dan Friendly is testing it in N. Y. this week (25) for seventh anniversary show at the RKO Palace with Horace McMahon. Latter, basically a legit actor, will offer a playlet, "Three-Time Loser," with (Miss) Geene Courtney and Charles Reynolds in support, staged by Vaughn Deering, written by James Davis of the N.Y. Daily News.

Apart from its obvious dry-run as a tv potential, it may set a pattern for other legit players to essay sketches at the Palace, with a similar objective.

Traditionally, when vaude was in high, legits like Bert Lytell, Theodore Roberts, Elsie Ferguson, William Faversham, et al., offered a dramatic playlet, usually by a high-powered author—or an author who made himself heard on the Broadway boards later.

Pat Rooney, Mae Barnes and Smith & Dale (latter in a new act tagged "The Tax Consultant") will coheadline on this anniversary show.

Lubbock's Muny Dates

The Municipal Auditorium at Lubbock, Tex., is lining up a series of events. Already booked are Jeanette MacDonald, going in June 2; Liberace, June 9, and the ABC Rodeo, June 20 for four days.

The Home Show started an eight-day run Sunday (20). Bookings are by David T. Blackburn, building manager.

Old Oaken Ballots

Apparently the voters in the American Guild of Variety Artists are accustomed to teamwork. In the balloting for delegates to the union convention two longtime duos were selected. The Duncan Sisters (Vivian & Rosita) were named, as were Joe Smith & Charlie Dale.

Smith & Dale got almost the same number of votes. Smith drew 995 and Dale 988. There was a greater difference in the Duncan girls' nods. Rosita got 673 and her sister 704.

Bar Ed Rio As AGVA Delegate On Vegas Rap

Eddie Rio, for many years Coast regional director of the American Guild of Variety Artists, will be barred from being seated as a delegate from Los Angeles to the forthcoming union convention slated for Disneyland, Cal., starting June 18. Action was taken this week by the union because of Rio's connection as entertainment director for the now defunct Royal Nevada Hotel, Las Vegas. AGVA says that the hotel closed owing talent in the neighborhood of $500,000, most of which represented sums due acts who had been signed to three-year terms. Notification of Rio stated, however, that he could be seated provided the inn pays off its indebtedness to the talent.

Rio resigned from AGVA about a year ago to take over the Royal Nevada job. Vincent Mazzei moved in from San Francisco to take over the top post, while a brother of Rio —Larry—was hired as assistant to Mazzei.

Others elected from the Los Angeles area as convention delegates include Rosita Duncan,

Guatemala Show Biz on Upbeat; Americans Flock in by Plane & Boat

By JACK LEVY

Guatemala City, May 22.

Guatemala, in the throes of revitalization under a government which is going all-out to promote the tourist industry and aid private enterprise, is enjoying something of a boom. In contrast with the situation which prevailed three years ago when the hotels were practically empty, the Americans are coming in (by plane and boat) and the entertainment business is beginning to show signs of life.

In anticipation of completion of the last link of the Pan American highway between the Mexican border and Guatemala City, which President Castillo Armas has promised by the end of the year, new hotels are springing up (one to contain 300 rooms) and the first motel is in the works. The new democratic government is giving support to these projects, financially and otherwise, and the outlook is one of optimism.

All of this means that the entertainment industry which was virtually nonexistent, if not frustrated, under the previous Communist regime, is due for a reawakening. Certainly, there is plenty of good native talent around which is just waiting for the chance to perform. The start of commercial television here last week was the first big break in that direction.

Mile-high Guatemala City (pop. 300,000), where the air tourist lands from the States, has a modicum of night life although late hours aren't the usual thing here—yet. There are a half-dozen night clubs, (Club Pigalle, El Gallito, Casablanca, etc.) which have good marimbas for dancing and floor shows. Some of the first-class hotels like the San Carlos, Pan American, Palace and Colonial (which charge $6 to $10 per day for single rooms with bath and meals) also provide occasional entertainment with dinner.

Cohen Suit Vs. Insurance Co., Ex-AGVAns Settled For 5½G After 7 Years

The suit brought by insurance broker David Cohen against the Insurance Co. of North America and several individual defendants on the question of broker's commissions in the risk plan instituted by the American Guild of Variety Artists, was settled for $5,500 during trial in the N. Y. Supreme Court last week. Settlement was made under the supervision of Justice Aron Steuer. Cohen had originally sued for $150,000. The case had been pending in the courts for about seven years.

Other defendants in the suit included the late Vic Connors, who at one time was chief organizer for AGVA; the late Mathew M. Adler, an insurance broker who came in from San Francisco to handle the account; Henry Dunn, former national administrative secretary of AGVA, and Fred J. Kothe, a broker licensed in New York, who represeted Adler in the deal.

Cohen claimed that he originated the plan that was initially underwritten by the Insurance Co. of North America, but that switch had been made so that Adler, an unlicensed broker in New York, got the credit and commissions. Lloyds of London later became the insurance carrier and still retains the business.

Ralph Slater's Piggy-Back Assault On Mt. Bridey Murphy in N.Y. Vaude

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Ralph Slater's lifetime specialization in hypnotism for amusement purpose has undoubtedly had its ups and downs. Currently he's reconnoitering for another peak to climb, namely Mount Bridey Murphy. He's billed outside Loew's State in Times Square this week as "the man who may solve the Bridey mystery." The italicized may centres on his challenge, unanswered, to the Colorado housewife (he never names her) to meet him anywhere at anytime so that under his spell her recall may be evaluated.

Slater via publicity defy is attempting to grab the skirts of a celebrated case created by a national bestselling book. Whether he'll get a tumble remains to be seen. Meanwhile the "Bridey Murphy" saga is being made into a feature film from which the aforesaid Colorado housewife, Mrs. Ruth Simmons (see separate news story Page 2), is reported the one person not deriving any moola.

Oldtimers will recall Harry Houdini in his latter years going after the fake spiritualists. The latter fired plenty of volleys but invariably had left the local, battlements prior to Houdini's arrival. All this at the time was a bonanza of free newspaper ballyhoo for the Houdini dates. But any further resemblance between the master-showmanship of Houdini, both publicity-wise and performance-wise, and Slater's contemporary wistfulness cannot be supported. Slater can ride the Bridey Murphy thing only a short journey unless or until there is public response to his challenge. His best chance might well be via a tieup with the film producers, but it's a nice question whether the latter are on speaking terms with Bridey Murphy.

Meantime Slater is at the same Loew's State where he was caught by our Jose as a "New Act" in 1946. Before that he'd been around for years, once as star of a radio series, where the hypnotism had to be described, and variously at Carnegie Hall, where it could be seen.

Actually there is very little to "see." Just what Slater is doing that throws his subjects into a controlled sleep is never clear to the spectator. Although he opens

Acts Leave Icer

San Francisco, May 22.

Three acts in the Shipstads-Johnson "Ice Follies," scheduled to open here next month, will leave the show after the Frisco run at Winterland.

Dick Norris and his wife will head east and he'll go into his father's tool-and-dye business; Franz Loichinger and wife Sonja will return to Germany to open a sporting goods store; and the Pastor twins, Jean and Joan, have decided to leave the show for more home life.

AGVA Circus

and Frank McCloskey, former director of personnel for RB&BB, had a lien on the Beatty circus and were readying the 15-railroad car unit under a new name and new paint to play for AGVA. Bright said it was a question of timing as to whether the new circus could be brought to Baltimore in time, but all hands would try. He saw it as definite for the Philadelphia date of Ringling May 28-June 2.

$550 Performer Minimum

In Boston, the AGVA circus had several acts who left the Ringling show, Otto Griebling, Felix and Amelia Adler, the Fredonias, Lynn Williams, and on direct bookings, Flying Ballantines, Craig's Chimpanzes, Cole's Liberty Horses and Captain Midnight. Bright said that no act got under $550 for the week, with Captain Midnight nabbing $2,000.

Central Trade and Labor Council and the State Federation of Labor and the Teamsters backed up the picketing of the circus in Boston and other unions gave sympathy support. Heavily unionized Boston stayed from the picketed circus in droves. More paper was passed out this year by Ringling in Boston than in a decade, it was said.

Ringling statements contended that the competing AGVA circus had not effected them. Michael Burke, executive director for Ringling, said neither the picketing nor the competing circus had affected receipts.

No tv appearances for circus clowns, customary in the past, took place on the two tv stations, WNAC-TV and WBZ-TV, this year. Filene's department store, which customarily handles Ringling tickets, dropped the ticket selling on this one.

Ushers Halved

Some indication of the impact against the Ringling stand was noticeable in the hiring of 40 ushers at opening and the firing of 20 Wednesday night.

Situation was unparalleled around the newspapers in the Hub. It was a hard job to even give passes away. Printers and mechanical employees usually avid for circus paper weren't interested.

In the midst of all the hubbub, a "first" was scored by Harry Davies, pressagent for Ringling, with securing of first legit page reviews in circus history. Davies, a legit p.a., came in town ahead of the circus and did a bangup job in getting out the paper, ironing out several existing sore spots occasioned by the cutting down of paper by circus pressagents in past years.

The Boston Traveler assigned legit reviewer Alta Maloney to the circus. The Boston Globe had Bill Riley giving the circus the legit onceover. Davies scored more coverage on legit pages in Boston newspapers than has ever been seen here.

Yeggs' 3½G From Mass. Op

Somerville, Mass., May 22.

Night club operator Michael Downey was robbed of $3,500 in his Memory Lane parking lot here after returning from the bank Friday morning (18).

Two yeggs forced Downey to drive his car from the cafe to Charlestown where they forced him out of the car and fled with the loot.

Chi IBEW

drags its feet considerably. Although the audience obviously is well disposed toward her, their applause is more appreciation for pleasant moments she has given them on their home screens than for what she does in this show.

Introed by a two-man, one-girl supporting group, Miss Coca opens with a silent pic bit complete with flickering lighting, for fair returns. She follows with some of her trademark tramp stuff, a torchy chanteuse parody, a funny strip bit done in oversize raincoat and a maypole number. None has the impact necessary to top what has gone before; her material is not clever nor is it suited to the pixieish personality she has created. It almost seems she needs a strong partner to get herself across by contrast. In any event, this shuffling attempt at a climax robs the show of considerable punch.

Frank Libuse & Margo front a great deal of proppery and pratfall humor. It's corn but it sells well here. Margo plays the screeching diva and Libuse does the lecherous accompanist constantly seeking a peek behind the decollete. There are also a few geese in the act. It's earthy, noisy slapstick and gets good mitting.

Joe Novelle's Dogs, all French poodles, are an impressively well-trained set of canines who garner gasps, laughs and lusty palms. One opens the show by walking out onstage on his hind legs to the mike and introing the show (by off-stage voice.) The pooches play the harmonica, walk erect and climax by playing in a combo and dancing together; watching a hammy dog play the bass is the end for many and the house gives trainer Novelle and attractive spouse a big mitt for their canine troupe.

La Verne Pearson, a singer of generous dimensions, does a Charles Addamsish song parody and a belting comedy song with local meanings; femme also displays a rich set of pipes when singing straight semi-classics.

Rita Raines, a thrush who has already attracted attention in the pop field, gives an ample sample of why she has. Singing only two numbers, "Am I in Love" and "Love Is a Simple Thing," Miss Raines had the aud sit up and take notice. Gal has unusually rich and tuneful pipes and is a looker. With the disclicks she should get to the top of the heap.

Muggsy Spanier orch gives out with the "happy music" in a closing New Orleans production number, rich in eye appeal and choreography. Spanier plays the dixieland standards with the competence of one who helped midwife the birth of the blues.

Joe Chester does an unusually good job as a singing emcee; a melodious crooning of narrative material and excellent stage presence help create a strong favorable impression.

The rich production numbers owe their quality to the skillful staging and choreography of Johnny Bachemin, the costumes of Frank Sennes, and the eye-filling scenery. Not to neglect the tall, leggy beauties who make up the Darling Dancers. A Ziegfield-like intro sets a high standard for what is to follow with amazons languorously walking down a staircase to a medley of songs titled with girl's names ("Mary," "Rosemarie," "Laura," etc.). The Darling Singers and Len Dresslar do a musicianly job of providing vocal backing. The Granada tableau and the closing New Orleans scene do not disappoint after a spectacular opening. A "Harbor Lights" dancing scene gets gasps with an extremely realistic, wild sinking and drowning sea scene, a tribute to the stager.

Producer Frank Darling gets a solid ovation from his union members at show's end, both for the quality of his production and in support of his urging "Tell your friends to buy a color television set.

mixed dance group (Conjunto Quetzal), and a male string trio (Chelaju). The unobstrusive manner in which the dancers and string trio moved in and out of the dining room (no stage, no spotlight, no emcee) was in itself a novelty. But what stood out were the authentic barefoot Indian folk dances (symbolizing marriage ceremonies, market day, etc.) which were performed with great charm and simplicity. It was surprising to learn from the group's spokesman, Solomon Tala, one of the dancers, that these artists entertain as a sideline to other employment.

Aside from an occasional performance by a visiting Latin American celebrity, the theatre in Guatemala City is confined to the cinema. American pictures (with subtitles in Spanish) are most popular. British, French, Mexican and Argentine films are also shown.

The better houses (Cine Reforma, Capitol, Lux and Palace) have two or three performances a day, beginning at 4:15 p. m. or 4:30 p. m., with the last show at 9 p. m., 9:35 p. m. or 9:45 p. m. Among the pictures recently shown at these theatres were "The Swan," "Strategic Air Command" (Vistavision) and "I'll Cry Tomorrow." Admissions range from 50 cents to 75 cents but the price is the same for the early or late show.

No Cover Charge for Scenery

As the gateway to the most interesting Mayan country of Central America Guatemala City is becoming more and more a focal point for tourists taking the swing through the old colonial city of Antigua and such Indian towns as Chichicastenango, Solola, Chimaltenango, Huehuetenango (way-way-tenango) and Quezaltenango which are noted, among other things, for their extensive markets.

There is a rare spot in these Highlands called Panajachel (panahah-chell) where the exhausted actor, performers, producer, writer or Madison avenue executive can really relax and let his jangled nerves unravel. There are no night clubs here but the scenery is out of this world and there's no cover charge.

Panajachel is on the shore of Lake Atitlan (ah-teet-lahn) (whose colorings are said to surpass those of Lake Como) which is framed by four volcanoes and surrounded, along its 70 miles of shoreline, by a dozen Indian villages, all accessible by boat, car or horseback.

Panajachel is a place where the most celebrated personages of stage, screen or television may walk, minus dark glasses, without attracting any more attention than the average "Yanqui" tourist. The hotels, small and comfortable, have large patios, and the conveniences (even a transformer for the electric shaver) the American traveller is accustomed to. The good is delightful and the tab is low.

But it wont' be that way very long. When the highway is finished, the tourists will come in droves, every nook and cranny will be discovered, the facilities will be taxed. But for a while, perhaps a few years, Panajachel will be one of those few places off the beaten track.

played, and there seemed some reason for the paucity of apparel.

Although the nudes got their share of mittings, as did the gay set, the crowd apparently went for costumes that showed skill in conception and execution. The sympathies of the customers were made known when a group of five silhouettes, in costumes comprising dead black garb from the neck down with white areas around the head in sharp relief, were adjudged to come out eighth in the parade. The howl of the crowd was such that the judges withdrew that decision and they ultimately got the first palm.

But the important facet in the success of this year's ball is the freedom of choice in selection of costumes. Nudes weren't discouraged from entering the parade. The governing body apparently figured that if this ball depicts an annual spring madness, then let it be mad—and the madder the better. The b.o. reflected this choice by the SRO crowd. Even the lines outside the Astor were longer than usual. At $10 per skull, plus higher tariffs for boxes and tableholders, the take was considerable for the Bohemians' relief fund.

The decor committee was particularly effective this year with the construction of the sets and mobiles, and Amsterdam livened up the event with his airy emceeing.

to hire legit pressagents "as such," but that the press department needed "revitalization." "We tried to find vital, alive pressagents with new ideas. Zac Freedman, general pressagent, joined last year and did a fine job—better than had ever been done before—and we asked him to find others of similar style."

Outlining the current situation, Burke said it started in St. Louis with the teamster's union last year. He said that the teamsters admitted that they do not represent the circus employees, but that AGVA claims to represent 51% of the performers.

"AGVA and the teamsters are jabbing us with a two-pronged fork," he said.

House Reviews

Palace, N. Y.

Russ & Joy Sobey, Stan Harper, The Agostinos (2), Woodside Sisters (3), Tim Herbert, Olivette Miller & Bert Gibson, Leo De Lyon, The Jeffreys (2), Myron Roman House Orch; "Great Day In The Morning" (RKO), reviewed in VARIETY May 16, '56.

Current vaude stanza at the Palace runs to a neat 75-minute package. Headed by Leo De Lyon, bill is a well-balanced layout mostly comprising turns that have been at this house before.

De Lyon's act is socko throughout. His blend of solid comedy lines with his trick pipes pays off with a continuous ripple of chuckles. His trumpet mimicry is still highly effective in its realism while his simultaneous delivery of two different songs makes for a potent windup. And with it all, De Lyon impresses with an ingratiating personality.

Olivette Miller & Bert Gibson, in the No. 6 slot, also score with their harp-and-hoofing act. Miss Miller is an excellent swing harpist who projects strongly with this somewhat delicately sounding instrument. Gibson supplies some softshoe accomping and clowning around. Her "Me and My Shadow" vocal, in which the duo do a precision hoofing routine, gets them off big.

Tim Herbert, preceding, fails to make the most of his potential. A personable performer with obvious talent, Herbert is hamstrung by a secondrate script. He'd do best to throw it completely away and find a new routine more suitable to his ability to mimic, sing and hoof. Stale gags, unclever special material songs, too many swish and toilet gags are now snowing him under.

Russ & Joy Sobey open the bill with a smart display of hoofing while Stan Harper, in the deuce, scores with his harmonica virtuosity on an interesting repertory. The Agostinos, in the trey spot, and the Jeffreys, the closers, are both good acro turns reviewed under New Acts. In the No. 4 position, the Woodside Sisters deliver some tunes energetically. Best is their dixieland opener while their Spike Jones' version of "The Trolley Song" is slightly too noisy.

Glasgow, May 15.

Bill Kenny & Ink Spots Trio, Paul & Peta Page, Joyce Golding & Tony Stuart, Evie & Joe Slack, Joe Rankin, Johnny & Suma Lamonte, McAndrews & Mills, Bobby Dowds Orch.

Bill Kenny's fine vocalism is the draw in this average layout. Singer clicks strongly, especially with femmes in audience, to whom he largely aims his songalog. Also goes back in reminiscent mood, backed by instrumental trio.

At show caught, audience was disappointingly small for group making their 1956 British stage bow. Act, while not a standout, merited a better draw, Kenny being particularly good. His repertoire ranges from oldies like "Best Things in Life Are Free," "Whispering Grass" and "To Each His Own" to the more recent "The Best Way You Know How." Also scores with "I'd Climb the Highest Mountain" and "Maybe," and earns top mitting for "Bless You." Later he has the customers beating time to "The Rose of Roses."

Main faulting for Kenny is that he's too profuse in his thanks and description of people and things as "wonderful," a criticism often levelled here — and justly — at American performers. Too often repeated, it fails to ring true with shrewd outfronters.

Singer's playing to the femmes is a clever touch, and he shows personally in gabbing. Also registers with "Girl of My Dreams," "It's a Sin to Tell a Lie," "Into Each Life Some Rain Must Fall" and "September Song."

On support layout, Evie & Joe Slack are standout with acro-humor. Act opens originally with distaffer in shape and costuming of a chicken underneath a steaming casserole lid. Contortionist talent of femme is high. Paul & Peta Page also merit solid palming for clever puppet act which closes first segment, their best being jivecats' closer. Peta Page shows mimicry talent in voice manipulation behind her dowager-duchess puppet.

McAndrews & Mills, mixed twosome, are lithe terpers who tee off both halves with grace and ease. Johnny & Suma Lamonte, brother-sister pair, juggle and balance with skill, their props being colorful and distaffer shapely with s.o. which she could exploit ever further.

Joyce Golding, assisted by stooge Tony Stuart, is a comedienne with obvious talent, but wastes this on shapeless fun routines that, at show caught, garnered limited response. Her travesty of Johnnie Ray, complete with hearing-aid cord to her ear, is in bad taste. She's best as a ventriloquist's dummy and in multi-voiced operatic item, but otherwise her comedy is n.s.g.

Joe Rankin, making his British bow, scored fairly strongly with xylophone playing, though act has room for improvements. He exited to solid reaction (see New Acts). Showbacking in satisfactory style from Bobby Dowds house orch. Gord.

Apollo, N. Y.

Cab Calloway, Cal Green Orch (11) & Midnighters (4), Berk & Hallow, Ethel Ennis, Jenkins & Seales, Johnny Torres; "Dragnet" (WB).

With or without a band, Cab Calloway is a standout performer. In this trip at the Harlem flagship, he's working solo in a 25-minute songbag that's socko throughout.

Although he's taken on new stature in recent years via the role of Sportin' Life in overseas touring production of "Porgy and Bess" and even an Ed Murrow "Person to Person" workover, Calloway is still the hi-de-ho man to the crowd here and it reacts best when he's swinging through "Minnie the Moocher," "Chugga-Chugga-Wa-Wa" and "That Old Black Magic." In front of this repertoire come a special material opener, "I Feel Tip Top," "It Ain't Necessarily So" and the inspirational "The Voice." Throughout he displays a distinctive vocal technique and a stage savvy that's tops.

In the closing niche, the rock 'n' rolling Midnighters take over with the mumbo-jumbo beat that goes over here. The four boys work with Cal Green's combo through some frantic items that are difficult to separate melodically or lyricly.

Some low key comedics are supplied by Jenkins & Seales and Johnny Torres emcees with several tasteless items about reefer smokers.

Berk & Hallow, ofay terp duo, are an appealing opening turn. Thrush Ethel Ennis is reviewed in New Acts. Gros.

Circus Review

Circus Knie, Zurich

Zurich, May 15.

Fredy & Rolf Knie production of circus in two acts (18 displays). Musical director, V. O. Ursmar; stage manager, E. Zimmermann; features animal acts presented by Sacha Houcke; Pahlow Sisters (2); The Rastellis (5), also billed as Les Chocolats & Co.; Tipsy & Brow; Knie's Chimpanzees, presented by A. L. Smith; Eddy Seifert & Co. (4); "Louis XV," featuring Eliane & Fredy Knie, Erna Hack, Sacha Houcke, Pierrette Knie-Dubois; Cavallinis (3); Knie's African Elephants, presented by Rolf Knie; Borra (Thief of Bagdad) & Partner; Knie's Lions & Tigers, presented by V. Trubka; Trio Stoll (Pirates of the Air); Linon; Nino Rubio; Knie's Horses, presented by Sacha Houcke, Eliane & Fredy Knie. At Sechselaeutenplatz, Zurich, May 10, '56; $2.05 top.

The 1956 bill of Swiss National Circus Knie shapes as a beautifully mounted, solid program which, although lacking any novelties of world-shaking dimensions, offers most of the classical types of circus acts in top quality and contains practically no weak spots. Three-hour program, with one intermission, has style and tempo and is a cinch to please almost any fan of the sawdust trail.

A high spot is the first finale act, Borra, billed as "Thief of Bagdad." Preceded by a lavish Orientally-garbed parade of animals and extras, including a girl on a hippopotamus, this "honest pickpocket" recruits his victims from the audience (no stooges) by snatching not only wristwatches, fountain pens and wallets unnoticed by them, but also, for big laugh returns, suspenders and ties. A clever, skillful act with definite possibilities for the U.S.

Italian juggler Nino Rubio, 18, comes close to stealing the show. Standing on unsupported ladder which he holds with his hands, he throws a total of six coffee cups and saucers up on his head, one atop the other, with his right foot. Climax comes when he adds to this sugar and a spoon plus a coffee pot from which coffee is poured into the upper cup by way of a gadget. This is a sock bit, done with impeccable skill, and a heavy clap-getter. Personable lad rates attention.

Animal acts are always among Knie's main assets. This time, he offers several fine horse presentations including palominos, Wales and Shetland ponies, Yugoslavian, Dutch and the famous Lipizzan stallions, trained by Fredy Knie. His brother Rolf's specialty are pachyderms, and he has a noteworthy "first" this year by showing seven African elephants, much harder to train than their Indian brothers. They are the property of the Basle Zoo.

Voitech Trubka, one of Europe's foremost wild animal trainers, presents another of his widely acclaimed lions & tigers acts which is not so much in the showoff, "circusy" vein, but tends rather to display the beauty and grace of the animals' bodies and movements. Trubka works in a remarkably sure and quiet way which enhances his effectiveness.

Aerial acts are well represented by the Trio Stoll, from Germany, billed as "Pirates of the Air," and the Pahlow Sisters, from Berlin. The Stolls work on a ship-shaped contraption high under the big top and offer a series of high-voltage contortions in topnotch fashion, done in pirate costumes, whereas the Pahlows' begoff stunt is one girl holding on to the flying trapeze with bare feet, head down. An excellent bit.

Rapid-fire trampolinists, the Rastellis (four Italians and a Brazilian Negro), are big laugh-getters, but even more so when billed as a clown outfit (Les Chocolats & Co.) at the show's finale. Their act, never overdone, is genuinely funny, especially in the familiar musical routine by which one clown seeks to prevent his partner from playing an instrument, but which is done with a new twist here: instruments and "destruction" weapons get larger every time, ending up with a cannon blasting a piano to pieces.

Second clown team on the same bill, Three Cavallinis, are not quite up to the Chocolats in new ideas, but still manage to live up to their reputation in some routines. Show's third funnyman, Linon, coming from the U.S., is more in the tragicomical vein. Dressed in rags, he tries in vain to walk on a tightrope, being prevented by innumerable obstacles plus his own cowardice. There is real humor in this act, but with a slightly pathetic overtone.

Contortionists Eddy Seifert & Co., with rubberlike bodies, have several sock acro tricks, done in adagio style, of which the spinning-around routine on a mouthpiece, with the bodies almost completely twisted, is surefire.

Comic eccentrics Tipsy & Brow (they are the parents of young Nino Rubio) are an amusing pair, especially suited for visual media. Distaffer is the act's main asset, reminding of Cass Daley at times. Not all of their stunts are quite new, but cleverly presented as if they were. Mezo.

SUZY GODAY

Songs
15 Mins.
Blue Angel, N.Y.

Suzy Goday is a pert, diminutive blonde who overcomes a small voice with a nice personality and generally provocative arrangements and movements. Demurely gowned in a high-necked white dress, she presents her offbeat material in a competent manner which drew satisfactory if not socko returns from the opening night audience.

Chirper's contributions are not standard in terms of popular exposure via disks, but they have a definite appeal for intimery outings. Her opening special material intro carries the prosaic "Hello" tag, but it is "different" although slightly overlong. She scores best with her specials on "Too Darn Hot," "Come Rain Come Shine," and "Between Devil and Deep Blue Sea."

Miss Goday shows a nice stage presence and rates as an okay act for the eastside type of nitery. Holl.

TONIA BERN

Songs
22 Mins.
Colony Restaurant, London

Belgian-born Tonia Bern has collared publicity as a gal with a fancy for millionaires and that helps to give her name value. She's also acquired British nationality and that helps nitery operators who are faced with a British quota problem. These two facets add to her booking appeal and combine in making her an attractive proposition for West End night spots.

Miss Bern has a sophisticated appearance and dresses accordingly. A high-necked, skin-tight gown emphasizes her shapely figure and sets the pattern for her act. There's a distinct sex angle to her song selection and this aspect is enhanced by her delivery. Apart from a medley, sung in three languages, her songalog, however, is somewhat commonplace. And she would be advised to drop "Darling, Je Vous Aime Beaucoup" from her routine (Hildegarde has done this in London and elsewhere with considerably more finesse and polish). For the rest, her songs develop a single theme and among her opening night entries were "Is There a Man in the House," "I Want a Man," "Definition of a Husband" and "The Simple Life is Good Enough for Me." All of which indicate there is not enough variation in the programming.

With adjustments to the act, which would insure a happier balance, Miss Bern could develop as a more positive and entertaining cabaret chirp. Myro.

ETHEL ENNIS

Songs
8 Mins.
Apollo, N.Y.

Ethel Ennis is a Negro thrush up from Baltimore cafe work and a Jubilee Records album. Although her bow at the Apollo was a shortie, only three songs, she gave a solid indication that she's a comer in the warbling field.

Songstress has a comfortable piping style suited best for intimery work. The pipes are warm and her phrasing highlights all of the lyric values. She can handle a light and breezy motif such as "I'll Take Romance" as effectively as the moody ballad groove of an "Off Shore." Her wrapper-upper is the dramatic "Got You Under My Skin," and it's in her stride, too.

Other plusses are looks, stage ease and tasteful gowning. Gros.

NORMAND HUDON

Caricaturist
15 Mins.
Blue Angel, N.Y.

French-accented lad chirps "cute" lyrics as he limns caricatures of famous personalities on his drawing board. He displays an artistic touch in his recognizable, but distorted, pictures of such famous personalities as Churchill, Bankhead and others. His accompanying musical chatter is good for slight titters but can't be termed socko.

He goes in for audience participation by inviting the minimum-payers to make a mark on his drawing board. From the line or curve, Hudon sketches a completed picture, taking less than 10 seconds to think of his subject. Gimmick goes over well. He closes with a sketch of the French prime minister, a faceless figure in a cutaway. Holl.

WILTON CLARY & JAN NELSON

Songs
25 Mins.
Le Cupidon, N.Y.

Teamup of baritone Wilton Clary and soprano Jan Nelson, who've been singling along the nitery belt, gives 'em a good potential for the chic circuit. They've patterned the act along musicomedy styles and although it runs overlong, it's varied and colorful enough in the song offerings to hold interest.

Both have pipes that are strong and true and they're not afraid to use them. Sometimes the sound gets a little too big for a room such as Le Cupidon, but they do get their point across. He's a good looking belter and she's a tall, attractive thrush and they complement each other nicely. Repertoire has been attractively fashioned and only drawbacks are his tendency to get overly dramatic and her occasionally injected coy mannerisms.

However, it remains a likeable musical turn for those who like stickout songs expertly handled. For the most part they work together, but he gets a chance to display his lung power solo with a vibrant "Lady of Spain" and she solos with a cute item titled "Shoppin' Around." The rest is a slick melodic mixture. Gros.

JOE RANKIN

Xylophone
14 Mins.
Empire, Glasgow

Xylophonist scores via fast style and accomplished musicianship, but could use a little more showmanship between numbers. Opens with fast-tempo "Sabre Dance," then into commendable impression of a church pipe-organ playing Gounod's "Ave Maria." This achieves realistic effect and deserves the strong palming it receives. Segues with "Poet and Peasant" overture.

Act's highspot is gimmick item of showing just how rapidly a xylophonist can wield his mallets, this being done with a luminous pair and aid of two special sidelights on the xylo. Thus equipped, Rankin plays "Tiger Rag" and, in darkened stage, his arms and mallets seem to fly like bullets over the instrument.

Performer should avoid looking downwards at stage while gabbing, and could also sharpen his humor plus cut out pauses between tunes. He has easy happy style and establishes friendly link with outfronters. Okay for vaude and video in most locations. Gord.

THE JEFFREYS (2)

Trapeze
8 Mins.
Palace, N.Y.

The Jeffreys have an attractive circus-type acro routine adapted for vaude houses. Rigging involves a high bar from which they do a variety of eye-appealing aerial tricks.

Boy-girl duo work a fast turn including several trapeze catches and the use of a neck band for body-twirling effects. Excellent closing stunt has both of them spinning at top speed over a suspended bar. Herm.

THE AGOSTINOS (2)

Acrobatics
10 Mins.
Palace, N.Y.

The Agostinos have a neat turn for the acro genre. A nice-looking boy-girl duo, team blends okay pantomime comedy with several fine stunts into a payoff vaude turn.

Opening drunk bit, both as tramps, segues into an effective pyramid-balancing trick in which she strips to her regular acro garb and reveals herself to be a highly attractive blonde. Closing routine, involving some difficult-looking, body-lifting by the male while jackknifed over a chair, gets them off strongly. Herm.

Scot Troupers Appear On Troubled Cyprus

Glasgow, May 15.

Alec Finlay, Scot comedian, and a party of performers planed in from the troubled Mediterranean island of Cyprus after a three weeks' stint of entertaining troops. They visited army bases in the mountains within fireshot of terrorists. At one base Finlay declared open a tin-roofed theatre, naming it the Panopticon after a famous Glasgow music hall.

Singers Carol Eric and Babs McKinnon, Alastair McHarg, and accordionist Ronnie McCulloch accompanied Finlay to the trouble spot.

Copacabana, N. Y.

It looked like a fire sale at the Copa opening night—the Schnoz was back in town and the well-heeled clientele which is attracted to Jules Podell's East 60th St. boite took Durante to their collective arms and hearts.

Durante, in the tradition, in turn comes up with something new each time out, and while it ultimately segues back to the pianistic mayhem and Eddie Jackson's strutting with the Schnoz inka-dinka-doing it at the ivories, there are enough new fillips throughout the frenzied 50 or 60 minutes that comprises his repertoire.

For one thing a "surprise" guest sees Hollywood's Peter Lawford in exaggerated zoot making with "Digging the Rock & Roll Blues." Lawford plays it straight and, what's more, does a competent in-person saloon stint. If he isn't grooming for the cafes he should because he can make it come off.

Taking it from the top the gals are a considerably better double-quintet of lookers than last gandered, and six of them are socko personality kids who have a lil more performance stature than the average as they work with the Schnoz in his exaggerated Great Lover nonsense. What's more they act as if they enjoy it.

As another departure the line also behaves a shade better than normal when the femme terp specialist is up front; most often a chorus acts as if they resent this standout by one of their sex or, as self-ordained critics, telegraph the attitude that the upfronter ain't such much. Anyway this isn't true with this group of gals, in the main a better line of pulchritude and performance femmes.

It's the same Doug Coudy production fundamentally. Opens with "Zing in Spring," then "Who Chased Who?" two line numbers with Murio & Sheila in an energetic toreador routine, followed by still another production number, "Don't Be Afraid of Love" (green feathers couture, etc.) preceding Jana Mason.

Miss Mason is a song belter who has yet to get that disclick opportunity that was prophesied for her when first cased at New York's Basin Street. Nee Jana Jones, Miss Mason runs the gamut from "Then I'll Be Happy" to a rhythmic spiritual, with "Come Rain, Come Shine," "Can't Help Lovin' Dat Man" and a special, "If It Weren't for the Girls." She might excise one number to sum total advantage. Songstress is a looker with the "built" to match, excepting that that white gown might be suspect of an unflattering angle which a more decorous haut couture number would not.

Schnoz's riot follows. His quick-change "Clothes Make the Man" is in the better Durante tradition of broad hokum. Then there's a screen silhouet with one of those Mae Westian muscle men simulating the Schnoz in muscular profile; "Ragtime Jimmy" next with Jackson struttin' "Sweetie Mine"; Schnoz again with "So I Show My Cuffs, I Show My Handkerchief", as he heckles the busboys; the six lookers from the Copa line for the first "Umbriago" number, with a pair of heavyweight femmes (dressed in the pizza manner) contributing to the tempest; his clowning with pianist Jules Buffano, equally as good a musical foil as the gymnastic Jack Roth on the traps who qualifies for the big leagues the way he fields the piano tops, the phone and other props hurled in his direction (over the shoulder yet!). This pyramids into "Inka Dinka" by which time, of course, the Schnoz has been home—but with plenty to spare.

In between Murio & Sheila do another eyecatching acro - dance specialty. On one occasion he whirls her aloft in a somewhat sensational manner, and on another she's balanced on a thin scarf for an arresting close-to-the-floor whirl that's best appreciated in closeup. Continental pair are obviously highly rehearsed and routined in their aim for an off-beat repertoire.

Schnoz's return to the Copa is always a Gotham event and Durante bids certain to make it more so this semester. Incidentally, as long as he's been around, in the varieties, saloons and pix, there's no gainsaying that extra fillip that comes via television—he's endowed with a new aura and a new value. Particularly if, unlike not a few of his video confreres, he delivers handily; too often some of the others, removed from the context of script and environment, are embarrassingly out of their element before a live audience.

Sands, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, May 21.

Howard Keel, Billy Gray, Beachcombers (3) with Natalie, Copa Girls (10), Antonio Morelli Orch (14); $2 minimum.

With the robust warbling of Howard Keel and the racy comedics of Billy Gray, the domain of Jack Entratter will have uppish biz for a fortnight.

Kell's hearty quality, his commading looks are additives to a session that comprises musicomedy repertoire in the main. There is a definite upbeat felt in latter half of his segment when he changes from tux jacket to western coat glittering with gold buckskin tassles and gold-embroidered Stetson. Such fancy accoutrements embellish "Surrey With the Fringe on Top." For kicks, he tosses in a spate of rock 'n' roll tunes, "Heartbreak Hotel," "See You Later Alligator," for big mitting.

Tingle comes from the Keel closer, a great singing job on the "Bess" sequence from "Porgy and Bess." Offstage obligato of Bess is nicely trilled by Teresa Waters, a soprano brought over to the U.S. from England for this date by Keel.

Billy Gray bounces his quips fast for a good getaway and never lets the pace drop. An accomplished hand at whipping up yocks from ringside jibes, he displays top timing with the one-liners. Although ribaldries are rife, Gray gets away with the blue stuff via puckish delivery in specials "Medic," "It's Magic," a Texan collection, and "Heartbreak Hotel," latter a reprise of the numerous Vegas "busts" of last year.

Copa Girls continue their holdovers featuring Beachcombers with Natalie, and the Antonio Morelli augmented crew gives solid backing with Keel's conductor, Johnny Williams, doing well on the podium.

Eddys', K. C.

Kansas City, May 18.

The Continentals (4), Tony Di Pardo Orch (8); $1-$1.50 cover.

The Continentals are six-timers in Eddy's Restaurant, making them the most played act at the spot. It's been two years since their last date here, however, and it's a welcome return. They make it a well paced 45 minutes, building to a solid hand at close.

With current emphasis on male vocal groups, Continentals are right in their element and put over a show here that rates as fine entertainment all the way. They start with their own opener, parodying "The Continental," and build through a series of songs, including an Irish medley, "Gambler's Guitar," "Standing on the Corner" a mixture of "Rain" songs, and a Spanish group. Along the way there are specialties by tenor Ben Cruz, impressions by Harry Nofal, newest member of the group, special bits by Jay Moffet and Dahl Gleave, old hands. Their finesse and polish are aided by Ivan McIntyre, at the piano for the group these many years. Musical blending phrasing, choreography all are distinctive, making an act especially geared for night spots and other live audiences. This is one to be seen as well as heard.

When Olga James was New Acted last year, she just had the Cindy Lou role in the pic version of "Carmen Jones" to her credit. Since then she's added a legituner slotting in "Mr. Wonderful," opposite Sammy Davis Jr., from which she's currently doubling into this eastside cellar.

She's also added assurance and a song-selling savvy that'll help keep her busy in legit and saloons. A diminutive Negro lass, Miss James' big piping style belies her size. She's got a sharp soprano which is used effectively on spirituals, ballads and rhythm numbers.

Repertoire is neatly paced with several high spots—a medley from "Carmen Jones," a spiritual "Joy to My Soul" and Mr. Wonderful." She has a bangup begoff in "Look Who's Dancing Now" which includes the line, "Look who's coming out for that extra bow." She rates it.

Preceding Miss James' stint is the singing duo, Wilton Clary & Jan Nelson. Team is reviewed in New Acts.

Ernie Warren's trio backs neatly and dishes out the gringo beat for the terpsters. Louis Ortiz supplies the Latino rhythm.

Palmer House, Chi

Chicago, May 17.

Patachou, Trio Capricho Espanol, Tony Lovello, Dancing Dolls (2), Charlie Fisk Orch (with Lee Charmel); $2 cover.

Current four-weeker that opened Thursday (17) should keep the ropes up at the Empire Room in the weeks to come.

Patachou headlines here for the second time in the last several years and provides the thrill that generally goes hand in hand with top quality entertainment. Chanteuse with the simple garb wins the aud from the outset, completely captivates it, and has a hard time getting off. The answer is her superb confidence and a rich, sexy voice, handled like the fine instrument it is.

Another thing: she at least speaks English and has a few Anglo selections in her rep. This gesture to a U.S. audience is a refreshing change from the past deluge of completely monolingual foreign thrushes. Though not apparent to the crowd, it seems, however, that Patachou is not giving it everything she has, at least at the outset. It's the old problem of the legit actress at the 795th performance of a hit; although she is not aware of it, her role tends to become mechanically executed. Tribute though this is to the universal success Patachou has enjoyed, it calls for a little freshening.

The vibrant voice is matched with vibrant gestures and the full use of panto to intro and sell a song. Patachou opens with a medley of Gallic faves, "La Seine," "Pigalle," etc., and segues with such as "Brave Margot," "Pauvre Jean" (Poor People of Paris), "A Woman in Love," and "A Wonderful Guy." The house is wild toward the end, clapping rhythmically; thrush begs off gracefully.

Trio Capricho Espanol, two youthful femmes and a guy, support on this bill with Spanish terping. Accenting again producer Merriel Abbot's predilection for Iberian hoofers, group impresses with fire and enery rather than smooth, disciplined purity. One of the girls, Pepita Fernandez, backs ably with vocalistics in the piercing flamenco style. Group gets a plus from the customers as it goes from classic to folk dances and bows off to good mitting.

Tony Lovello puts on a display of accordion gymnastics, with much emphasis on loudness and keyboard tricks. The loudness and the trickery distract from musical value of this effort. He gets fair returns.

Layout is introed and spaced by the Dancing Dolls, two distaffers who, in varied costume and with the aid of batoner Charlie Fisk and vocalist Lee Charmel, provide pleasant, eye-filling hoofing interludes, and a few cue lines.

Fisk and band have tightened up consideraby since last time caught; they back expertly and do the dansaption with skill. Lee Charmel's vocals are ear-pleasing.

Fontainebleau, M. B'ch

Miami Beach, May 20.

Carlos Ramirez, Eagle & Man, Ortiz & Vargas, Murray Schlamm, Sacasas Orch; $2.50-$3.50 minimum.

Carlos Ramirez hasn't been around local cafes for quite a spell, concentrating on dates in Havana situations, both live and on tv. He's still the genial senor with the fractured English intros who knows how to apply his baritonings to a sound book of Latino and American compos.

Almost too deliberate in his intro talk and demeanor, Ramirez in his song sequences brings in enough of the zesty to zoom up the palm pulsings of the auditors. He concentrates on tunes he was associated with in pix made some years ago, notably "Begin the Beguine" and "Granada"—claiming a first-to-use on the latter via records. Both items are standouts and serve to keep interest sustained in the balance of his songalog, to earn him okay payoff.

Eagle & Man are a couple of young zanies who, at the moment, show plenty possibilities for the tumult-duo ranks. Forte is work on trumpets, the pair expertly taking off on a series of impreshes of the biggies in that musical form, notably Armstrong and Busse. On the comedy side they do best with screwy lampoons of Liberace and Ed Sullivan. The initial stages of their act needs refurbishing, the comedy gab being of the worn variety that has been taken to the laugh-well too often. With stronger material and insert of fresh lineage, they could work themselves up into hot prospects. It's a matter of time and elimination of that always present problem: something new to buttress their big aud-winning segment, the duo trumpeting.

Ortiz & Vargas played their first date in the States at the Seville several months ago. They impressed then as one of the better Spanish flamenco-native dance imports to be seen hereabouts in a long time. On the larger stage of the La Ronde in this plushery, their work takes on deeper dimension. The male is an authentic heel stomper, his solo work bearing a stamp of virtuosity. Femme is attractive and highly expert on toe delineations to accompanying castanet work. Both team on native handclap, heel-rhythmics and story-patterns to emerge as an authentic and colorful stint. Costuming also is authentic and eye-appealing.

Sacasas and his orch play a difficult show in highly adept manner.

Beverly Hills, Newport

Newport, Ky., May 15.

Ted Lewis Revue, featuring Caribbeans (3), Elroy Peace, Benita D'Andrea, Lynn Lyons, Barbara Esko, Ted Lewis Orch (9); Sol Klein, conductor; Donn Arden Dancers (10), Dean Campbell, Jimmy Wilber Trio, Larry Vincent; $3 minimum, $4 Sat.

A four-frame fixture at Greater Cincy's class cafe in recent years, Ted Lewis and his revue initiate a change this trip—a two-week engagement every six months.

Outside of Elroy Peace, his shadow, and his famed trade tools — battered high hat and walking and licorice sticks—Lewis is supported with new and young talent in his latest edition. This reference excludes his old batoneer, Sol Klein, and some of band crew.

Ever agile, the vet jet of show biz and original king of jazz (Rector's, 1917), adds to his record of clean entertainment. In one of his several specialties in the current offering, Lewis adds a socko rock 'n' roll flair to his trademark Dixieland treatment of "When Saints Come Marching In." The old pro's talk-songs and dramatic recitations continue as nostalgic bellringers via super showmanship.

The Caribbeans, two youths and a shapely blonde, score in Oriental and sophisticated Apache dance routines. Barbara Esko, brunet cutie, clicks in a pair of ballet numbers. Lynn Lyons, fair-haired chirper, does okay vocals and a foil for Lewis. Benita D'Andrea, sweet in crinoline, peels to display a slick chassis in a switch to lowdown blues "St. Louis Woman."

Stageshow receives effective opening and finale dress from the line of Arden dancers and Dean Campbell, singing emcee, of the house staff.

Sans Souci, Miami B'ch

Miami Beach, May 16.

Danny Rogers, Rita Constance, Sammy Walsh, Freddy Calo Orch; $2.50 minimum.

Summer policy installed—for the earlier portion of the season—is designed to go easy on the house budget, with aim obviously for the bus-tour groups who make up good portion of the twice-nightly show patrons. The tour-types are, at this time of year, comprised mostly of femmes of varying ages who don't dig too-hep material. Bookings thus call for pleasant acts who won't task their thought-processes too much; current layout is illustrative.

Danny Rogers has been around a long time and some of his material shows the years. Withal, his sometimes familiar gab raises laughs, with the act well received when he takes to a sawed-off table from which he works out the major portion of his canto. Rogers' sharply-defined tapwork is a strong palm raiser, as are the panto bits he injects. Addition of easygoing heckling forays with likely ringsiders adds to the mirth-making portions, buttressed overall by a basic warmth that weaves a receptive aud mood throughout his stint.

Rita Constance is an orb-appealing young thrush, well endowed vocally as well as physically. A recent Godfrey program appearer ("Talent Scouts" and "Friends"), she sets up an intelligently balanced catalog that mixes the ballads and rhythm-tunes adroitly to feature her throaty tones. Delivery is assured, to add plus impact. Needed is a "big" arrangement to round out what, as is, makes for a bright and appealing stint that can be fitted into video spots as well as intime cafes.

Sammy Walsh, vet comic, is house emcee and host. An affable performer, he warms the auditors in fine style and keeps the enthusiasm level high for the acts on hand. On occasion, he sets up a comedy-lyric to add to the goings-on, but in the main, concentrates on the conferencier chore. Freddy Calo and his crew back up musical matters capably.

Blue Angel, N. Y.

The description "eastside entertainment" has come to stand for a unique brand of offbeat offerings, either chichi or clever, depending on one's point of view. It appeals mostly to eggheads and is generally the stock in trade of the intime boites. The four turns currently at the Blue Angel have that eastsidey quality all the way and the designation as such is not meant in a derogatory sense.

It's appealing fare for the most part, although some may quarrel with the avant-garde flavor of the lyrics in Enid Mosier's song repertoire. Negro lass and her company, three Trinidad lads beating on novelty musical instruments (truncated gas storage drums) display a fine sense of rhythm in their Calypso and Gertrude Steinish offerings. Miss Mosier's deadpan style is occasionally wearing, but she comes out of it in time for sock results. She scores neatly with "Shopping Around" and the entire troupe contributes equally to the success of "Banana Tree" from last season's shortlived legituner, "House of Flowers."

The all-instrumental Calypso number on the steel drums by the three lads is also on the plus side. The explanation by one of the lads on how the drums are made is presented simply and cogently. Act is ideally suited for the intime circuit.

Roy Benson, comedy magician, has geared his act for the eastside trade. His magico bits are secondary to his patter, but he impresses greatly in both departments. The sophisticates appreciate his palming feats and self-kidding and he has no difficulty arousing some real yocks. Lying prone on the piano propped up on his elbow, Benson delivers a line of nonsense that is both clever and witty.

Normand Hudon, caricaturist who sketches while he chants, and Suzy Goday, a pert, stylized songstress, are also in the eastside groove. Both are covered under New Acts.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, May 15.

Duke Ellington & Orch (18), Hazel Scott, Archie Robbins, Flamingo Starlets (12); $2 minimum.

Components of Duke Ellington, Hazel Scott, and Archie Robbins make for good contrast in this Flamingo month, yet the production falters along the way. Name values on the marquee are okay to lure certain clientele, although the top gambling frat will not be expected to make a run for tables.

Ellington hasn't been on the Strip in five years. In this trip, with one of his best bands in a long time, he is allowed only a fair accounting of the splendid musical organization at his disposal. All of his innings are at the beginning, with only showbacks remaining until finale. As emcee, the Duke is in a class by himself—smooth, urbane and witty. He leads off with a showcase of his many fine instrumental soloists, Harry Carney, Johnny Hodges, Jimmy Hamilton, Paul Gonsalves, Britt Woodman, Russell Procope, Willie "Cat" Anderson, Quenton Jackson, and Clark Terry, in "VIP Boogie" and "Jam With Sam." Hodges blows a melting "I've Got It Bad" on alto sax; Jimmy Grisson chants "Everything But You"; Ellington narrates a whimsical "Pretty and the Wolf" and Ray Nance does his penguin terping, puckish vocal to "Hey Mon Cherie." For the closing set, spotlighting the maestro at the keyboard, the popular side of Ellingtonia unfolds, with each tune receiving big mitts.

Miss Scott shows her sophisticated piano and song style in a florid "Ebony Rhapsody" on the 88, moving into the French version thrushing "Autumn Leaves." She could segue into English for better reception this room. A Neal Hefti arrangement of "St. Louis Blues" is a sock Steinway romp, with the followup bluesy "Come by Sunday" having her unzip the gown and go into a terp and gamshow.

Robbins is bogged down with new material that fails to bring in yocks of any scope. Only his "Las Vegas" section receives peak attention, with a "McNamara's Band" parody on Phil Spitalny, "Bridey Murphy," "This Is Your Life" on the Gabor Sisters, and Continental tour having few solid laugh values. The Joe E. Lewis "Substitute for Love" impresh is okay, but cannot lift Robbins too far above preceding lull periods.

Moulin Rouge, Paris

Paris, May 14.

Lena Horne, George Reich "Ballets Ho!" Co. (8), Les Heirolls (4), Donald B. Stuart, Les Trompoonies (2), Renald & Rudy, Viril, Ballet du Moulin Rouge (12) with Jean-Louis Bert; Moulin Rouge Orch conducted by Jean de Smet and Sylvain David; $5 minimum.

Toulouse-Lautrec's old haunt, Moulin Rouge, is again jumping, packing them in as it probably hasn't since the nights back in the fabulous '90s. Occasion for excitement is new program's headliner, Lena Horne, who is rocking the historic nitery as she rocked the ballroom of London's swank Savoy last November. La Horne is one of America's most popular exports and dusky, throaty songbird looker has never been in better form or voice and Moulin is doing biz accordingly.

Miss Horne has played Paris before, but her current engagement (three weeks) is her longest here to date and could probably be extended through summer if other commitments didn't call her away. A speedy return may be expected for she has all its takes to start a rush on a Paris b.o.

Clad in sultry, form-fitting black evening gown, she goes into her first number, a rousing "It's Love," without customary preamble about how she is to be in Paris, and her audience is with her from the first note. Direct, blockbusting delivery smooths way for some of the less frantic material that follows as she interludes comedy and ballads with blues. On soft side she does "Mad About the Boy," "Honeysuckle Rose" and "Day in, Day Out." Comedy includes familiar saga of a U.S. girl who decides to stay in Paris even if it breaks her heart and her dad's pocketbook. "Papa Don't Preach at Me," and two numbers in French, translation of "Miss Otis Regrets" and "Toute Ma Vie," while "Baby Won't You Please Come Home" and "Stormy Weather" finale are among the blues.

Singer works in all departments with easy grace and a sexy sophistication which is nigh perfect. Everything she does registers—and immediately—and her 45-minuate stint leaves spectators hungry for more. Her two French numbers—sung in clipped Dixie accent—and blues interludes were favorites for firstnighters, but her comedy in "Papa Don't Preach" is so expert that it hurdles language barrier and her personal charm lights up the old Moulin as though it were a Turkish battleship.

On same bill is another American act (though it has been put together in Europe) of sound quality, the "Ballets Ho!" of George Reich, Reich, who came over here for Lido assignment three years ago and subsequently was in Roland Petit company and did choreography for present Folies Bergere revue, formed his own troupe of dance octet (all American) and played casino circuit last summer, warming up for Paris debut. Result is neat, fresh and pleasing 30 minutes of dance sketches in which some original material and music have been matched to U.S. musicomedy choreography. There is a bright introduction of ensemble marked by quick tempo which is sustained through entire act, which ranges from comic parkbench courtship to torrid mambo.

Balance of bill, though more routine, is of high grade, too. British illusionist Donald B. Stuart cuts up merrily in magic sequence, Les Heirolls (4) do some frantic acrobatic skating; Les Trampoloonies (2) some droll net-tumbling; Renald & Rudy display their muscle powers against background of bikini-clad chorus; and Viril, gilded bronze, poses as various classical statues. Moulin Rouge's Can-Can chorus (12) led by Jean-Louis Bert opens and closes show, as usual. Curt.

Monsignore, N. Y.

Greta Keller, one of the stalwarts of the Alt Wien school of entertainers, makes periodic stands in New York. Long an attraction to the Continentals, both the imported and domestic varieties, Miss Keller sells a sophisticated brand of schmaltz that includes tunes that have been hit paraders on both sides of the Atlantic.

Miss Keller works with a smoothness that comes from know-how in performance as well as language departments. She sings in French, English and German in a manner that brings out the lyric cut of these tongues. Included are sentimental drinking songs and numbers that just make for pleasant relaxation. Included are "Don't Ask Me Why," "Lili Marlene," and a lot of those waltzy items that get the crowd swinging.

In this stand, Miss Keller is accomped by violinist Herman Koenigsberg and pianist Paul Schlessinger. The Monsignore, incidentally, is a well-decored spot with a lot of built-in charm. The air is tres boulevardish with antebellum Muscovy overtones that make for pleasant dining. Jose.

Riverside, Reno

Reno, May 15.

Lillian Roth, Shyrettos (3), Stanley Burns, Starlets, Bill Clifford Orch, with Elaine Evans; $2 minimum.

Lillian Roth's "second career" is getting its second wind with the impetus of biopic "I'll Cry Tomorrow." Her first two trips probably didnt mean much to the younger set, even though the book was doing well at the time. But the Susan Hayward starrer has now made the rounds and everybody knows the story.

Miss Roth looks back on her earlier career with just the right amount of nostaglia and humor. She enjoys burlesquing what was considered "hot stuff" in the early '30s and has no trouble in bridging to modern interpretations. While kidding her age, she has also made that 20-year shift retaining her vigor and looks.

In fact, she doesn't stop for a breather for the first 10 minutes—going full steam. Not until toward the end of her exuberant stint does she begin to retire to soft voice and soft lights. Her courageous dancing segment, with a variety of partners from the aud with a variety of techniques could be awkward and embarassing, but always succeeds in ch.rming. Exit at the diner's entrance to the room still wraps things up with finality and drama.

New ventriloquist, Stanley Burns, although not rich in material, has enough new gimmicks to put his act in an unusual class. His dummy, Willie, also has a dummy, and the chatter among the three of them is fascinating if only for its intricacy. Also, a remote controlled dummy stirs up some "ohs" and "ahs," too.

The hi-cycling trio, the Shyrettos, make an exciting opener, doing acro on wheels and rolling through some synchronized routines.

"That's Entertainment" is the Starlet intro of the show, putting the line through a delightful businessman's expectations—brief costumes and plenty of kicking. Elaine Evans strolls through the action for the lyrics. To set the mood for Lillian Roth they waltz through "I'll Cry Tomorrow."

The mood of Miss Roth's early days is well set in Bill Clifford's music while he shadows her nicely for the numbers where she is sans mike. Miss Roth's name on the big new marquee looks like big biz for the fortnight. Mark.

Thunderbird, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, May 15.

Sons of the Pioneers (6), Romo Vincent, Jimmy Ray, Barney Rawlings, Thunderbird Dancers (8), Al Jahns Orch (10); no cover or minimum.

The annual Helldorado celebration has called for annual booking of western headliners into the Thunderbird's Navajo Room, with Sons of the Pioneers taking over for a two frame warble-rodeo. Romo Vincent is added for comedic value, and little terper Jimmy Ray completes the offering. If no stampede occurs for tables, at least there will be the certainty of locals filling spaces during the town's gingham & blue jeans shindig.

Sons of the Pioneers moderated harmonies in the country & western idiom, humor in the corn fields, is cheered lustily by tablers. Front and centre for specialties are fiddler Hugh Farr warbling "Shine on Harvest Moon," his brother Carl in some guitar blues, Shug Fisher in a funny bucolic monolog, and the perennial Tommy Doss with "Cool Waters." Payoff is a humorous sesh with "Cigareets & Whuskey," for special kudosing.

Vincent takes his comedy forays into ditties such as "Blow, Gabriel Blow," a swing at taxes in "Tony the Barber," and some customer jesting with "Deacon Jones." His drunk bit is overlong, containing sparse laugh passages, but the Texan finish pulls the quotient up into a good windup.

Ray does some excellent samplings of soft shoe while elevated upon a table for better visioning. His Joe Frisco and Eddie Foy "Ida" bring in big mitts. Thunderbird Dancers hold over the opening waltz round, and insert a lively "Oklahoma!" curtain terp which brings back the cast for a hoedown exhibit. Barney Rawlings is smooth throughout as spieler-warbler. Will.

Desert Inn, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, May 15.

Jane Froman, Jack Durant, Donn Arden Dancers (14) with Art Johnson, Carlton Hayes Orch (12); $2 minimum.

Desert Inn pages Jane Froman from its lengthy caravan of regulars and, coupled to Jack Durant's maniacal mirth, her song sesh caps a good interim package during the four frames leading up to the summer season.

Miss Froman is still one of the smoothest sopranos in the biz, plying a keen show savvy to milk the most out of each tune she embraces. Her repertoire is based on ballads, paced neatly between the newer pops and the w.k. standards. She unveils a new piece of material which highlights the act, a superbly designed song tribute to Irving Berlin. Although 16 minutes long, the segment commands unwavering attention as Miss Froman takes the patron through five decades of music authored by the composer, wrapping it up with a rousing "No Business Like Show Business."

Durant is among the regulars to this circuit who never is given reason to alter his material in order to score a maximum rating in the yock department. Laffs are instantaneous from his opening pratfall to his begoff impresh of Clark Gable. His good-natured roast of "life at home with the old lady" is also welcomed back by sustained roars.

Donn Arden Dancers are up front in holdover chores, with Art Johnson stepping into finale role created during the last opus by Johnnie Ray. Latter number would be excellent showcase for Johnson's tremendous song knowhow had not the routine been so abreviated that it has lost its continuity to a point it makes hardly any sense at all now.

Carlton Hayes, who always waves an excellent baton, has his tooters on their toes, and they respond accurately throughout. Joseph Harnell nimbly keyboards Miss Froman's turn. Alan.

Village Vanguard, N. Y.

Maxine Sullivan, Johnny Mathis, Joey Carter, Clarence Williams Trio; $3 minimum.

Maxine Sullivan, who hit the limelight in the late '30s via her jazz treatment of Scottish classics, is headlining the current show at the Village Vanguard. It's her first date at a name Gotham club in several years. The Negro songstress is in good form, while the other acts on the card also register potently. The entertainment session adds up to an overall pleaser.

Johnny Mathis, a lad with an interesting voice, kicks off the presentation. His vocaling has vigor and incorporates some good songselling ideas for impressive results. He's particularly standout on "Lullaby of Birdland" and "Babalu." A bass accompaniment on the former number gives it added punch. Other tunes worked over by the singer include "You Do Something to Me," "Stampede of Love" and "Angel Eyes."

Joey Carter handles the comedy end of the show effectively. He impresses with a quiet, dry delivery and some clever material. The routine has plenty of deadwood, but there are enough compensating bright spots, such as a bit with a candle that doesn't blow out.

Miss Sullivan is personable and pipes palatably on a flock of songs including "Change in the Weather," "I Didn't Know About You," "Restless," "I'll Go Away By Myself," "Everything Happens to Me" and "St. Louis Blues." "Raggle, Taggle Gypsies-O" is a flavorsome entry, while she also scores on a French-English takeoff on "Sweet Mystery of Life."

The Clarence Williams Trio, Vanguard's regular outfit, is up to snuff on showbacking and terptune delivery. Jess.

Eden Roc, Miami Beach

Miami Beach, May 20.

Alan Dale, Joey Bishop, Mal Malkin Orch; $3.50-$4.50 minimum.

Need for an opening act in the terp or novelty idiom has been evidenced in recent weeks in swank Cafe Pompeii of this biggery. Under the current booking policy, two acts, usually a comic and a singer, are tossed into tablers' laps without any warmup to get them paying full attention to the topliners on hand; which poses a problem for boniface Harry Mufson, who has been taking the dough usually allotted to an entr' acte and dividing it between the talent to entice the better availabilities.

Thus, Joey Bishop, in the opening slot, has to fight his way before hitting full returns for his gagbag. Credit his hitting better results in risibility raising to continued pitching, and rapport on the gain in time to wind him into a winner. Utilization of barbs anent opening cold disposed of, he settles down to his underplayed parlay of topical, domestic and ad lib one-liners, yocks them up with his pre-dawn gravedigger's lament and tops matters with screwy impresh of Ted Lewis.

Alan Dale hasn't played these parts in some time. On this outing he comes back a smooth, much improved songster who handles himself with easy confidence that is reflected in his selection of tunes. Recent platter clicks aid in grabbing listener attention, but he doesn't rely on the disk rep to hold them. Mixture of currents and standards are handled with full appreciation of the lyric line, climaxer on that segment being his version of "Laugh, Clown, Laugh." On the special material side he utilizes "Marilyn Monroe Symphony" to wheel into series of impreshes of contemporaries, done tongue-in-cheek to add plus values. "Love Walked In" serves well as base for bit with femme ringsider, then offs to heavy plaudits via "Sorrento."

There's a good bit of gab injected between numbers by Dale, aimed for laughs. In some cases the results are okay on that score; he could eliminate some of it, however for tightening purposes Withal, he easily makes the encore plateau.

Mal Malkin and his crew bolster musical matters expertly, with Malkin handling the intro chores for the proceedings. Lary.

Sheraton-Palace, Frisco

San Francisco, May 15.

Red Nichols & Five Pennies; no cover or minimum.

Management of this plush, conservative old line hotel has turned its swank Palace Corner room over to jazz for the first time in its history. In fact, the last nonbusinessmen's bounce music heard regularly within the Palace's walls was Boyd Raeburn's progressive big band of a decade ago.

Nichols, who plays a sort of polite dixieland already dubbed by aficionados as "Sheraton-Dixieland," doubles between two dixie concerts nightly and dance music in between, with considerable success at both.

A suave m.c. with the only fault of too much gab, Nichols dishes out the dixie standards like "When the Saints Come Marching In" and "South Rampart Street Parade" during the concert session and at dance time holds the group under wraps with polite music in a slightly ragged beat. The crowd, predominantly gray-haired and mink-coated, gives Nichols a big mitt for everything and obviously enjoys the opportunity to cut a dixie rug in a class spot.

If the patrons don't mind not being able to carry on the normal supper room conversation over the band's efforts, this should be an unqualified success and should open up this spot for additional bookings. His opening, a Monday night and traditionally a cold one in Frisco, was considered better than good. Rafe.

Hotel Muehlebach, K. C.

Kansas City, May 16.

Nick Lucas, Bredice & Olson, Tommy Reed Orch (8); $1-$1.50 cover.

Rep built up over the years singing in vaude, cafes, films, radio and tv registers solidly for Nick Lucas, back in town after a five-year lapse, and this time at a different stand, the deluxe Terrace Grill of Hotel Muehlebach.

Tommy Reed takes care of the m.c. chores in his usual handy fashion, bringing on Tom Bredice and his accordion (electrical) to get things under way. He's adept at the squeezebox, pumping out a wide variety of tunes and rhythms from boogie to pop and back to standards, with partner Joan Olson throwing in some looks as her principal contribution.

As it has been for over 30 years, Lucas' contribution is good singing backed by his guitar plucking. His 30 minutes is pretty much a rundown of the numbers linked to him over the years—"Painting the Clouds with Sunshine," "Tiptoe Through the Tulips," "Four Leaf Clover," "I'll Get By," "My Blue Heaven" and half dozen more. To these are added a current pop or two, a newcomer, "Pasta Cheech," and "Come Back to Sorrento," especially well done. It's the nostalgic that the customers go for, being generous with respone to the old faves and begging Lucas for more. It's all on a chummy level and builds to a virtual begoff for the vet singer. Quinn.

Chez Paree, Montreal

Montreal, May 15.

Ricky Layne & Velvel, Libby Dean, The Padgets (2), Black & Dundee, Dino Vale, Nick Martin Orch (6), Michel Sauro's Quartet; no cover or minimum.

Ventro Ricky Layne brings his dummy Velvel back to the Fontaine Bleau Room of Chez Paree for the third time and between them offer one of the better acts of this type ever to play Montreal. Several guest appearances on the Ed Sullivan teleshow (carried in Montreal) have also helped boost this talented lads' popularity. And judging from the biz and reception he attracts he could repeat in this room every three months.

Layne's quiet, almost withdrawn manner contracts neatly with the brassy gabbing of his wooden friend and the dialect Layne his injected slays 'em at this spot. Act throughout is reasonably casual, with most of the material directed to people and situations in the room. Layne has the good taste not to go overboard (via Velvel) as a wiseacre.

Songstress Libby Dean, another repeater, belies her demure appearance as she belts out a collection of torchants and rhythm tunes that pick up solid mitting. Lew Black & Pat Dundee restore the old vaude touches with patter that makes up in delivery what it lacks in originality. Duo have a tendency to milk to a fare-thee-well on some routines, but their reprise of the bit with Black playing a sentimental violin while statuesque Pat Dundee does a strip behind him scores handily with ringsiders.

Dancers in current layout are the Padgets, a small agile couple who mix the Latin tempos with their taps neatly and do well in the opening slot. Dino Vale, the house emcee, keeps show moving as well as taking a solo song stint. Orch under Nick Martin gives entire showcase good backing. Michel Sauro's combo spells Martin between productions. Newt.

Statler-Hilton, Dallas

Dallas, May 17.

The Sportsmen (4), Rima Rudina, Bob Cross Orch (12); $2-$2.50 cover.

The Sportsmen, touring on a hiatus from sponsor plugs on the Jack Benny tv show, hit paydirt all the way in an animated 40-minute songfest. Not riding a hit record, an innovation for male quartets here, guys get off strong with "Shadrach," follow with "Me and My Shadow," "Memories Are Made of This" and 'Love Is Many Splendored Thing." Inserts, Bob Garsen's whistle bit, "Flight of Bumblebee" and his teamwork with Marty Sperzel on a Gallagher & Shean takeoff, get tablers' mitting. "Tearbucket Jim" and "No, No, Roulette" by the four—latter with taped voicing inserts by Sheldon Leonard—are solid sellers.

Foursome mime "Three Rhythm Boys" (Bing Crosby, Al Rinker, Harry Barris) with "Mississippi Mud." Begoff medley winds with "Adobe Hacienda" and "Cielito Lindo."

Rima Rudina, opener, has fun with her fiddle—from pops to hillbilly—but registers big with a Gershwin tune sesh, starting and ending with "Rhapsody in Blue" for a fine score. Johnny Rarig, pianist-accomp for the Sportsmen, does a neat job with the Bob Cross orch. Latter, per usual, keeps the floor filled for terp sessions. Bark.

Black Orchid, Chi

(FOLLOWUP)

Chicago, May 17.

Current layout at the Orchid intimery has three weeks to run; replacement of thrush Jean Stanley with chirper Meg Myles has the vocal spot moving up to headline. Addition of Miss Myles makes for a powerful card. Jimmy Ames continues to elicit yocks with his comedy in the second spot and Day, Dawn & Dusk round it out with their well-choreographed harmonies.

A new addition to the Capitol diskery's roster, Miss Myles was recently seen in "Phenix City Story" (AA). Here she puts up a good front, and handles the torchy tunes with a velvety, gravel-voiced sultriness. Miss Myles sells a song with lots of spice, but sometimes the diet gets a little rich. She concntrates on the oldtime faves; they lend themselves well to her kind of treatment. Such as "St. Louis Blues." "You Made Me Love You" and "Melancholy Baby" are the backbone of her rep.

Miss Myles needs a little more variety in programming and should occasionally essay a light tune to avoid the monotony of a performance without a climax, or a contrast. For the rest, she is well equipped to please patrons of the cafe circuit. Gabe.

Lecture Loop

Leigh Bureau is currently attempting to enlarge the list of the entertaining personalities.

Fresh Names

This year the Leigh outfit has added Rudy Vallee, Ruth Chatterton, Edith Atwater & Albert Dekker, Jarmila Novotna. In addition, its catalog includes Henry Hull, Arthur Treacher, Mr. and Mrs. Meredith Willson, songwriter J. Fred Coots, monologists Mary Leader, Cornelia Stabler, Margaret Ruth Adams, Dorothy Crawford, puppeteer Hans Schmidt. Staples in the spiel centres include Emily Kimbrough, magico Fred Keating, Ogden Nash, Will Rogers Jr., Virgilia Peterson, Guthrie McClintic, David Ross, Marion Mill Preminger, Bill Leonard, Ivan T. Sanderson and George V. Denny Jr.

The Leigh organization feels that it could utilize a lot of vacant time of many performers in all fields by slotting them behind a lectern. Show bizites are a spieling staple in many ways inasmuch as many are presold by appearances in other media, command fairly good fees, and frequently create a good impression on audiences.

The major trouble in this respect is the necessity of bookings up to 18 months in advance in some situations, and not too many care to make commitments that far ahead. However, spokesmen for Leigh feel that steadiness of the loot and comparable earnings make it sufficiently safe to count on a fairly sizable batch of entertainers. Other lecture bureaus similarly count on a fair amount of entertainers to fill the gaps on the lecture platforms.

An indication of that direction is seen by the fact that even some of the indie percenters are looking in on the oratory outlets, Herman Tialkoff, for example, recently started a lecture bureau.

The greater frequency of showmen on the lecture platforms may not be an indication of the rising IQ of entertainers, but it does accent that a lot of performers have a wider horizon than the circuits handled by the orthodox talent agencies.

Hersholt Salute

try 44 years ago I had $20 in my pocket. The good heart of the picture industry was immediately manifested to a virtual stranger when I hadn't the money to pay for hospitalization. This was the basis for my interest in people who needed help. You have made for me the most memorable evening of my life." Pale and wan, he was helped off the dais by John K. West, NBC Coast v.p., and Y. Frank Freeman, head of the Paramount studio, who served as co-chairmen.

Tone of the dinner was serious because of Hersholt's health but occasional wisps of humor floated over the Crystal Room. Jerry Lewis, as toastmaster, maintained a dignified mien.

Louis B. Mayer, chatting betimes with Mary Pickford at his side perhaps of the early days of pictures, said he was in favor of doubling the quota "so we can get more Danes into this country like Jean."

Red Skelton cracked "The new wing at Mt. Sinai is really for Oscar Levant." Introducing Walt Disney, Lewis jerried, "you can have a wonderful time at Disneyland for $600 if you leave your mother at home." Art Linkletter stood by to relieve Lewis as emcee but despite the late hour of break-up he was still going strong, by declaring he deals in science and not magic, the hypnotic consummation is magical in its immediacy and lack of apparent means. The sense of magic is furthered by the house being plunged into absolute pitch blackness for a couple of moments before he begins. Why? To put out six chairs?

As an act in the act-less State, Slater works in front of drapes pulled over the screen. Carpeted steps lead up to the stage and Slater's first task, which means a slow start, is to recruit six subjects. There is the usual "on your word of honor, you never saw me before?" routine. This is probably a necessity but is not altogether a convincer since radio and television stooges must have made the public pretty wise these days to the ethics of stooging. What price "word of honor" in audience participation 1956?

Slater was doing 40 minutes in 1946. This week he's down for 55 minutes each time, four performances daily. At the Sunday matinee when caught he invited the audience to move down front, the better to watch. It was bright and sunny outside and Loew's had the $1.80 sign up on the pay window. Maybe there were 350 people on the main floor. "30 Paces to Baker Street" (20th-Fox) with Van Johnson was on the screen.

Although the performance seems slow it holds interest fairly well. Indeed, Slater's ability to proceed with apparent nonchalance (he comes on stage smoking a cigaret, wearing sports garb, the very picture of hypnotic informality) says much as to his "authority." It is this rather than personality that gets him over.

Slater had trouble in 1946 with hecklers and did not shine brightly when then undertaking a Lambs Club-like "squelch." He does not command comedy, although he has an effective if non-colorful gift of gab. This time he was having difficulties with candid camera bugs down front and at one point a guy with a bag of photography gear in a shoulder sack raced up the aisle with one of Loew's ushers on his tail. He returned later—whether with or without the negatives, not clear.

Slater's worries about unauthorized photography were vaguely interesting and considerably distractive. A professional critic necessarily speculated: is it some legal angle, raising a nice question of "consent" in subjects under hypnosis, or does it simply relate to author's royalties, since Slater puts on a heavy sell from the stage for his own illustrated ($1) book in the lobby? Incidentaly, that buy-my-book spiel does not mesh too well, other points apart, with Slater's claim for "scientific" standing.

Of the six who went up from the audience, Slater put three into a trance. Two he dismissed fairly soon and another proved not under the spell when he should have been. In one of the many explanatory pauses which pad out the running time, Slater acknowledged that some people cannot be hypnotized rapidly enough for vaudeville and others cannot be mesmerized at all. His own average, he said (who can prove or disprove his claims?), is seven out of 10. He also asserts—again it's his unsupported word—that he's hypnotized over 1,000,000 people.

Most amusing aspect of the "demonstration" is when the subjects act out post-hypnotic suggestions—behavior responses to given stimuli planted while in a trance.

Slater's contact with Ruth Simmons of Colorado being telegraphic at this point rather than mesmeratic, the showman is not able to make much capital in performance, of the supposed former existence in Ireland of that now nationally-discussed "subject." He is doing his standard act. Only the publicity has been updated. The parlay of hypnotism and reincarnation may contain the makings of a big once-around for Slater if, as and when he perfects a gimmick.

In the end he leaves the impression of being an experienced worker in a remote vineyard of entertainment. His ability to hold interest despite a certain molasses-slow tempo cannot be discounted. He is a showman whose showmanship may be greater than realized because there is no way a critic can "control" Slater while Slater is controlling his subjects.

Unit Review

Rocking the Town

(PALLADIUM, LONDON)

London, May 18.

Val Parnell and Bernard Delfont presentation of a revue in two acts. Staged by Robert Nesbitt; comedy directed by Charles Henry; choreography, George Carden; costumes, R. St. John Roper; decor, Tod Kingman, Edward Delany; sketches, Phil Park, Danny & Neil Simon, David Croft & Cyril Ornadel. With Harry Secombe, Winifred Atwell, Alma Cogan, Beryl Reid, Marquis & Family, Les Cinq Peres, Holger & Dolores, Rudy Horn, Frediani Trio, Diane Holland, Gwen Harriss, Jeanne Deal, Colin Stowe, Max Russell, Osborne Whittaker, Joe Cornelius, Angela Bracewell, David Howard, Antonia Palmer, George Mitchell Singers (9), George Carden Dancers (30). At London Palladium May 17, '56; $2.10 top.

The well tried Palladium formula for revue works again, and the opulent staging, for which Robert Nesbitt is noted on either side of the Atlantic, insures that nothing is left to chance. "Rocking the Town," which features top local talent, together with a handpicked selection of specialty acts, is a safe bet for unqualified b.o. results.

This is a typical no-expense-spared presentation. Extravagant costuming, lavish decor and an overall sparkling impression are coupled with slick staging, attractive routines and a nonstop flow of humor, rhythmic pianistics, comedy sketches and vivacious vocalizing.

In the starring slot, Harry Secombe makes his West End bow, although he has behind him a record of achievement on radio, tv and vaudeville. A natural comedian whose facial contortions add to the impact, he's also quite an accomplished tenor and devotes the main part of his final solo spot to classy renditions of operatic arias. He rarely misses an opportunity in his comedy sketches and effectively laughs off a recent accident which resulted in a broken arm. As he makes his bow he points to the plaster casing and comments, "I have always wanted to work with a big supporting cast."

Winifred Atwell, who headlined in a recent Palladium vaudeville show, is in top form with her accomplished pianistics. After a quartet of numbers played straight on the Steinway, she sets a new pace with "Black and White Rag" on her honkytonk upright before seguing into a production number of "Poor People of Paris." Alma Cogan, top local pop singer, who was prominently billed in the recent Palladium disk-star show, sets a lively and vigorous pace with a strong rock 'n' roll emphasis. She has a bright entry with "Hey Willie" but there's a slight sense of audience embarrassment in her special Palladium tribute number. The gal knows how to deliver her songs forcefully without obvious belting and has a firstclass dress sense which emphasizes a naturally lush appearance. Beryl Reid, on hand for the comedy sketches, excels in a monolog and makes a smash hit in a pairing with Secombe which has a "Marty" flavor.

In the very nature of this type of show, specialty acts have a major role to fill and for this presentation they've been chosen with obvious care. The comedy antics of Marquis & Family, as presented by Gene Detroy, are surefire; the Cinq Peres, holdovers from the last Palladium bill, again make a smash impact with their vocal orchestral impressions; Holger & Dolores have a spectacular specialty dance routine, featuring unusual spins and throws; Rudy Horn again gets top reaction, particularly for the climax of his juggling act in which he propels six cups and saucers from toe to head while balancing on a unicycle; and the Frediani Trio never miss with their lively and agile tumbling.

In addition to the principals and the acts, there is a reliable supporting cast used in sketches and production numbers and a well drilled line of male and female dancers.

Legit Down Under Hitting a Peak; Costs Up One-Third Since 1945

By JESSE GROSS

Legit in Australia and New Zealand is having its biggest boom since World War II.

That's reported by Frank S. Tait, managing director of J. C. Williamson Theatres, Ltd., top theatrical production-theatre operating firm Down Under. Tait, who had been in New York for three weeks eyeing the Broadway product, left yesterday (Tues.) for a three-week looksee at London legit. He's then scheduled to return to the U. S. for a one-week Coast visit.

Production costs, according to Tait, are up about a third in Australia since 1945. The tab on mounting a musical is around $75,000, while the nut on a straight play is about $22,000. (The comparative Broadway production costs are $250,000-$350,000 for a tuner and $75,000-$100,000 for a straight play.

The Williamson operation usually tours three musicals and four or five plays each year. The former are permanently Broadway originals, while the straight offerings are principally a mixture of British and U.S. imports. Current productions include "Can-Can" and "Boy Friend" in the musical vein and "Teahouse of the August Moon," "Sailor Beware" and the Googie Withers company parlay of "Simon and Laura" and "Deep Blue Sea" in the straight play category.

Of those presentations, "Can-Can" and "Teahouse" were initially presented on Broadway, while the others are British originals. "Boy," though, had a successful Broadway reproduction and has been mopping up on a U.S. tour. Another British import, "Reluctant Debutant," is preeming this week, with Roger Livesey and his wife, Ursula Jeans, co-starred. The current Broadway musical, "Pajama Game," and "Chalk Garden," which recently closed in New York and is now running in London, are

Anne Marie Alberghetti Set to Repeat TV Role In Legit Tuner 'Adano'

Anna Maria Alberghetti is slated to make her Broadway debut next fall in a musical version of "A Bell for Adano," a legit edition of the tv show being produced by Arthur Schwartz for presentation June 2 as the season finale of "Ford Star Jubilee" on CBS. She's starring in the video edition.

Schwartz and Howard Dietz, who have written four songs for the tele stanza, plan to add six more for the stage treatment, which Schwartz will produce. Barry Sullivan will costar with Miss Alberghetti on the telecast, but will not do the legit edition. He's set to star in another Broadway entry, Mary K. Frank's scheduled production of "Too Late the Phalarope," Robert Yale Libott's dramatization of Alan Paton's novel.

The musical "Adano" is being adapted from Paul Osborn's dramatization of the John Hersey novel, which Leland Hayward produced on Broadway successfully in 1944-45, with Fredric March as star. It was subsequently filmed by 20th-Fox, with the late John Hodiak, Gene Tierney and William Bendix costarred.

SET 'WHAT'S THE RUSH' FOR CITRONELLA TOUR

"What's the Rush," new revue current at the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Playhouse, will be sent on the strawhat circuit this summer as a package production. It'll be dispatched by Hillard Elkins, who manages the show's writers, Lee Adams, Mike Stewart and Charles Strouse. The production will star Robert Q. Lewis, while Judy Johnson and Don Liberto, who appear with him on his tv show, will be featured.

Elkins is also teaming with Oscar Olesen to send out two packages of "Bus Stop." Olesen was company manager on the Broadway production of the William Inge play.

Rebecca Brownstein Denies Role in Equity

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

In the May 16 issue of VARIETY there was an article linking my name with the Equity elections. Except for the fact that I have served Equity for many years and now receive a pension, I unequivocally deny all statements, suggestions, implications and innuendoes contained in the article in so far as they refer to me.

I want you to know that I am not involved in the Equity elections one way or the other; that no one has consulted me as to who should or should not run on either ticket; that no one has consulted me on how to take over control of Equity or any other branch of the entertainment industry; and that, furthermore, I have no interest in these matters.

Drama Festival So (Hic) Sorry

Toronto, May 22.

The Domjnion Drama Festival, annual little theatre contest of Canada, has a bad hangover. The outfit was in the middle of a dispute over a proposal that its supporters should boost the sale of Calvert whiskey (and presumably consume some of same) in appreciation of the distiller's financial backing of the yearly stage sweepstakes.

The uproar, sparked when a DDF official wrote a letter urging playgoer-members to help boost Calvert sales, has aroused the United Churches of Canada, which headquarters here. It even involved Vincent Massey, Governor-General of the Dominion. However, a "disavowal" was offered, so the furore is apparently over, if not forgotten.

The controversial letter, on DDF stationery and written by the organization's attorney-president David Ongley, is "definitely illegal," according to Charles Woodrow, legal adviser of the Ontario Liquor Control Board here. The appeal was sent to 3,000 members of the DDF, and pointed out that Calvert had paid off the organization's past deficit and is contributing $25,000 a year to support the outfit.

The letter, citing the whiskey firm's assistance to the DDF, added, "I have asked Calverts if they are happy in our joint association. They tell me they are; but frankly I am not. So much has been and is being done by Calverts for us—but what are we doing or what can we do for Calverts in a tangible and practical way?

"Each and every friend of the DDF—and their friends—when the occasion arises can remember and support Calverts. Increased Calverts sales mean increased Calverts budgets for DDF, to be used in our plans for the development and growth of theatres across Canada. I hope you will agree with me that this bears thinking about — and simple action."

In a letter of protest to Angley, the United Churches spokesmen wrote; "It is not good that such a worthy cause as the Dominion Drama Festival should be put in the position of dependence upon such means for securing the neces-

Musical Flops, Critics Blamed, Even in London

London, May 22.

John Waller's new British musical "Wild Grows the Heather," adapted from Sir James Barrie's "Little Minister," which opened May 3 at the London Hippodrome, is being withdrawn next Saturday (26). It is already set for two nabe stands in London, but its future beyond that remains uncertain.

The tuner involved an investment of close on $80,000, most of which will have to be written off unless the production can successfully be kept on the road for a considerable period. Costuming alone for the show involved an outlay of some $28,000.

On its tryout tour, "Heather" collared rave press notices and did healthy biz, but tepid London reviews have had an adverse effect on the boxoffice. Waller, who has a major straight play hit at the Strand Theatre with "Sailor Beware," described the London critical reaction to "Heather" as "downright brutal." The show music has been published by Chappell, who acquired the rights prior to production and one of the numbers, "Walking to the Kirk," is climbing to hit status.

"Heather" will be followed at the Hippodrome by "The Vanishing Island," a musical originally staged in America by Moral Rearmament. It's slated for a two-week run, after which "Caine Mutiny Court Martial," with Lloyd Nolan as star and stager is expected to move in.

Gorlinsky is due back here June 12.

It was recently reported that Joseph Kipness was in line to do the show on Broadway in partnership with Hylton.

While aboard the United States, Davis will inspect the three bands he has on the ship. He's also contracted the orch for "New Faces of 1956," skedded to open June 14 at the Ethel Barrymore Theatre, N. Y.

Pinza and Slezak also call it quits June 30, with Lawrence Tibbett and Billy Gilbert taking over their respective roles. Plan New Tuner House; Bid for St. James, N.Y.

A syndicate, headed by Harry Fromkes, owner of the Playhouse, N.Y., has announced plans to erect a new 1,600-seat musical theatre in the Broadway area. The estimated cost is $2,000,000.

Another group, headed by Jerome S. Jennings and represented by the law firm of Roth & Reisman, has offered the Shuberts $2,100,000 for the 1,615-seat St. James Theatre, one of the several New York houses the theatre clan has to dispose of under the terms of a Government consent decree signed last February. According to Fromkes, the Shuberts have been asking $2,500,000 for the St. James.

Incidentally, New York hasn't had a new legit showcase since the Center Theatre was built in Rockefeller Center in 1932. It was torn down in 1954.

Andre Charlot's Death Ends Remarkable Career; Launched Intime Revues

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Andre Charlot's death last Sunday (20) on the Coast following surgery, closed out a career remarkable for its run of great fortune in earlier decades and the ill-fortune which dogged it for the final 20 years.

At 74, the Paris-born Charlot was planning another comeback try (they had been many) via "Four Dolls on a Dime," for which Rowland Leigh, an old associate, was in Manhattan in connection with the financing. Beatrice Lillie only last week recorded one of the tunes from the prospective score as an auld lange syne gesture to the veteran.

A spotter of talent, he leaves behind an unpublished book, "Tips to Budding Actors." Ironically, because of the time lapse since the heyday of his renown, Charlot in death rated only a bare two sticks of type in the N. Y. Times. Actually, his niche in show business should be a considerable one.

To start with, he was an enormously prolific producer in London before and well after World War I. He may have produced 50 or more musicals. Among them was "London Calling" in which Noel Coward, then a youngster, launched the musical writing-performing side of his career.

Charlot learned show business in France, but from 1912 to 1915 as managing director of London's Alhambra, he began developing a

'ROMANOFF & JULIET' A NEW WEST END SMASH

London, May 22.

Peter Ustinov's new comedy, "Romanoff & Juliet," is a new smash hit in the West End. Opening last Thursday night (17) at the Piccadilly Theatre, it is witty political satire superbly acted and directed.

The author costars with Frederick Valk in the Linnit & Dunfee production, staged by Denis Carey. The supporting cast includes Michael David and Katy Vail in the title roles, with John Phillips, David Hurst and Delphi Lawrence.

Among the actor-author's previous plays are "The Indifferent Shepherd" and "The Love of Four Colonels," the latter also a politi-cal satire.

Shows Out of Town

Thieves' Paradise

Washington, May 20.

Bruce Fagan presentation of melodrama in three acts (four scenes), by Myron C. Fagan. Staged by the author; sets and lighting, Louis Kennel. At National Theatre, Washington, D. C., May 20, 1956; $3.30 top.

Marya Mazek ..... Zolya Talma
Jan Bulov ..... Carleton Young
Toni Mazek ..... Kay Kendall
Paul ..... Peter Dawson
Stefan Bulov ..... Frederic Tozere
Rita Bulov ..... Ethel Britton
Capt. Barsky ..... Noel Cravat
Gorkl ..... John O'Brien
Mme. Savoroff ..... Maida Reade

"Thieves' Paradise" is a combination of old-fashioned 10-20-30 melodrama and a propaganda tract designed to convince Americans that the United Nations is a secret Russian weapon, to turn the U. S. Communist.

The propaganda is laid on in steam shovel scoop portions, with such dialogue as, "Then all those American boys who were killed in Korea were really murdered by the UN," and long dissertations on the danger of treaties making this country subservient to international Communism.

Highlight of the action, in act three, has (1) a Commy stooge murdering his wife offstage with a butcher knife; (2) two Russian soldiers hacked to death offstage by a female Bulgarian patriot, (3) the stooge having a fingernail torn bleeding from his finger onstage; (4) the Russian officer who did the fingernail job being shot in the belly and slain onstage; (5) a woman agreeing to betray her brother-in-law to the Russians for $100,000 in American money.

Scene of all this is a town in Bulgaria, with Bulgarian patriots trying to smuggle strips of microfilm and sound tape to the U.S. to convince Americans that the "great betrayal" at Yalta included a deal to plant the UN in this country as a Communist Trojan horse.

"Thieves' Paradise," which has leased the Shubert Theatre for a fortnight on a four-wall deal, is another of Myron C. Fagan's exhortations about the dangers of internationalism and Communism, which he apparently regards as synonymous. The meller has all the subtlety of a kick in the pants, and if the Communists were such as those portrayed, even the stupidest Americans could hardly fail to be violently anti-Red.

Zolya Talma, Carleton Young, Ethel Britton and Frederic Tozere struggle manfully with the impossible roles, but fail to breathe anything approaching life into them.

The Third Best Sport

Dallas, May 14.

Ramsey Burch production of comedy in two acts (four scenes), by Eleanor and Leo Bayer. Staged by Burch; technical direction, James Pringle. Features Louise Latham, Ray MacDonnell. At Margo Jones Theatre '56, Dallas, May 14, '56; $3 top.

Arthur Underhill ..... Edward Cullen
Douglas Sayre ..... Ray MacDonnell
Chuck Robbins ..... Bob Mullen
Prof. Lockwood ..... Arthur Nations
Michael Tully ..... Joe Nash
Helen Sayre ..... Louise Latham
John Wagner ..... Edwin Whitner
Marge Robbins ..... Joan Delehaunty
Amy Underhill ..... Ruth Amos
Spencer McHenry ..... Ramsey Burch
Myra McHenry ..... Sadie French

Theatre '56, ending its 12th season, eschews the usual three weeks of repertory in favor of an eighth tryout, and comes up with a big winner. "Third Best Sport" (big biz) is a nifty script by wife-and-husband collaborators Eleanor and Leo Bayer.

Their contemporary piece deals with top executives who bring their wives to the annual sales convention in Palm Beach. Tightly written play gets running laughs and plenty yocks, as apple-polishing "corporation" wives help their spouses in lathering top echelon bosses and customers.

New bride of a general manager defies the femme hypocrites and verbally battles the best customer's wife to a draw in the top scene. Prexy's demand that the g.m. get rid of his wife is prefaced by her willingness to depart and secure her husband's future. Instead, he resigns, sets up his own biz and the weak closing scene has the rebellious wife promoting a big loan to launch the new firm.

Louise Latham scores as the adamant wife, with Ray MacDonnell playing his best role this season as the husband who scorns his boss to keep his wife. Edwin Whitner is properly haughty as the top brass, and Edward Cullen makes a humorous sales manager. Sadie French, Ruth Amos and Joan Delehaunty are capable "corporation" wives. Ramsey Burch, aside from his top staging, adds an expert acting stint as the "top customer."

The Indifferent Shepherd

Toronto, May 9.

Davis Bros. presentation of drama in three acts, by Peter Ustinov. Stars Murray Davis, Barbara Chilcott, Alan Nunn. Director, Brian Maller; setting, John Wilson; costumes, Margaret Smyth. At Crest Theatre, Toronto, May 9, '56; $3 top.

Nellie ..... Sylvia Gillespie
Melanie Aspen ..... Barbara Chilcott
Hugh Wigmore ..... Alan Nunn
Henry Aspen ..... Murray Davis
Walter Godwall ..... John Hardinge
Robert ..... Eric Donkin
Hilary ..... Janet Reid

The conflicting philosophies of two Church of England ministers, one a tolerant vicar in a small British town and the other an Army padre who relies on machine-assembly dogma, form the theme of "The Indifferent Shepherd," an obscure title for any b.o. lure except on future word-of-mouth. The play was originally done in London in February, 1948.

Much of the playwright's premise is sophomoric and far below his "Love of Four Colonels." His plot is also often clumsily inept in its dropping into place of past and present pieces that tip off approaching events. This is particularly glaring in the third-act denouement, when the up-to-now gentle minister's confession to his wife reveals that he may be the father of his armoral sister-in-law's daughter.

However, the chief conflict involves the somewhat Shavian arguments of the gentle vicar and his vicarious interests in the problems of the fallen, versus the theory of the hearty padre whose streamlined brand of religion has always worked in Army boot camps. The theological beliefs of both collide when the heroine—wife of the gentle vicar and sister of the rambunctious prelate—admit to an affair with a retired squadron-leader, this coming into the open when he is transferred to Kenya.

Donald Davis wins audience sympathy for his spiritual and marital problems, plus his understanding treatment of human foibles and lapses, and Alan Nunn is sufficiently professional as to be increasingly detested for a self-assessed holy attitude based on mass formula rather than individual cases.

Barbara Chilcott plays the shrewish, love-tormented wife who finds her husband's original viewpoints incomprehensible in either the pulpit or private life and builds to a compelling performance on passion for the "other man." Good work is also done by John Hardinge as the casual lover who flies away.

Other creditable performances are given by Eric Donkin as a frustrated son who gives up the Church to join the Army, Janet Reid in a free-and-easy heroine role and Sylvia Gillespie as the pregnant maid who causes much of the household trouble.

Brian Maller has commendably directed with underplayed skill, and John Wilson's interior set, overlooking a garden, adds authenticity. McStay.

"The Magic Amulet" is in the "Blithe Spirit" vein with what author Roy King presumably hopes is a surprise twist that the audience is asked not to reveal. There's little likelihood that anyone would stay around long enough to find out what it is.

Under David Bond's bumbling direction, a cast of eight postures its way through eight interminable scenes. Kap.

The Spring Affair

Dallas, May 12.

Ramsey Burch production of comedy in three acts, by Violet Welles. Staged by Burch; technical direction, James Pringle. Features Edward Cullen, Freddie Packer. At Margo Jones Theatre '56, Dallas, April 23, '56; $3 top.

Stanley Edgar ..... Edwin Whitner
Louise ..... Joan Delehaunty
Mr. Trilling ..... Edward Cullen
David Peak ..... Ray MacDonnell
Mr. Marchman ..... William Smithart
Mrs. Valentine ..... Louise Latham
Asa Spring ..... Gilbert Milton
Curtis French ..... Bob Mullen
Daniel Valentine ..... Henry Holloway
Miss Ethel Harper ..... Ruth Amos
Plato Pappas ..... Freddie Packer
Susan Bennett ..... Harriet Slaughter
Stock ..... Charlie West

Violet Welles' lightweight comedy has appeal for the teenagers, but scant promise for larger boards or film fare. The weak plot has a 25-year veteran schoolteacher fired as a result of students' essays on great Americans, Plato Pappas' tome on Asa Spring, local goat herder, is the top essay, but conflicts with plans of the small town's bigwig to grab the goat herder's land for a new school site. There is an uprising of school students, headed by the local editor, and of course all ends salubriously.

The large cast is aided by Ramsey Burch's top direction. Edward Cullen makes more of the VIP than the script demands, while Ray MacDonnell turns a potential heel role into a hero windup. Freddie Packer scores as a teenage upriser, Ruth Amos does the aged teacher persuasively, and Edwin Whitner amply fills the prolog bits and makes the editor's role believable.

James Pringle's solo set suffices as both mayor's office and reception room. Bark.

GUARANTORS' BANQUET

St. Louis Players To Divert Those Who Pledge.

St. Louis, May 22.

President Albert M. Keller has revived, after a lapse of 13 years, the old annual Municipal Opera Guarantors' Banquet. It'll be at the Hotel Chase on June 4 with the cast from "Annie Get Your Gun," the opener at the Forest Park open-air playhouse, whipping up a special revue to beguile the 1,500 civic personages who sign up to pay the season's losses, if any.

The annual underwite is $150,000 but only twice have the guarantors failed to get their money back undrawn-upon.

Andre Charlot

series of revues which gave him the reputation, still intact in Britain, of sire to the modern intime form, which continues there. The American equivalent to the Charlot revues of yesteryear was probably the Guy Bolton - P. G. Wodehouse string at the old LaSalle in Chicago. Charlot moved his revues from the Alhambra to the Vaudeville.

It was in 1924 that New York saw and loved "Andre Charlot's Revue," which made theatrical history beeause it introduced three stars, Beatrice Lillie, Gertrude Lawrence and Jack Buchanan, plus a lot of music destined to become "standard," including "Lime House Blues" and "March with Me." Coward and Ivor Novello were among the song writers.

At this period J. C. Potter was Charlot's company manager, the start of his long association as Gertrude Lawrence's favorite theatre administrator. Potter, who also produced (Potter & Haight), like Rowland Leigh, has also remained close to Beatrice Lillie. In the second Charlot Revue on this side Jessie Matthews understudied Miss Lawrence, later became a musical comedy star on her own.

Charlot continued to produce revues in London until 1936. "Wonder Bar," with Carl Brisson, was one of his biggest smashes. But the old magic was playing out. A gag of British show business at the time had much truth, "Charlot giveth, and Cochran stealeth away."

That had reference to Charlot's undoubted penchant for discovering talent and giving it a break and Charles Cochran's penchant for cashing in. Cochran ended knighted and a millionaire. Charlot ended under the auspices of the Actors' Fund.

Once he tranferred to Hollywood in 1937, the idiosyncrisies of film society defeated Charlot. His credits were numerous enough, but he had no hits. For a while he ran a school. He was much honored by old associates, but nothing materialized. Always popular with theatrical folk, and many tried to help him. They may not have tried hard enough, or perhaps the time of his tide was over.

Oddly enough, he turned film actor and played bishops and foreign diplomats with modest success. Meanwhile, back in London he was frequently reprised on the BBC radio programs, which go extensively for nostalgia.

Death followed a cancer operation at the Woodland Hills Hospital. His wife survives, as do Phillip Charlot and Joan Midwinter, neither child a pro.

British Vs. U.S. Operating Costs

Illustrating the relative operating costs of the British and Broadway theatre are the following excerpts from audits of the English and U. S. productions of "Tiger at the Gates." The Christopher Fry adaptation of Jean Giraudoux' original was presented in Britain by Robert L. Joseph and Stephen Mitchell, and imported for Broadway production by the Playwrights Co., in association with Henry M. Margolis:

Shows Abroad

Albertine by Moonlight

London, May 17.

James P. Sherwood presentation of a comedy in two acts (four scenes), by D. G. Bellini. Features Marcia Ashton, Helen Christie, Desmond Walter-Ellis, Bill Fraser and Gordon Whiting. Staged by Joan Kamp-Welch; decor, Henry Graveney. At Westminster Theatre, London, May 16, '56; $2.20 top.

Mme. Urwig ..... Hattie Jacques
Dr. Gallery ..... Philip Holles
Antioche ..... Jon Rollason
Timoleon ..... Anthony Bateman
Gabrielle ..... Pat Sandys
Mac ..... Emrys Jones
Albertine ..... Marcia Ashton
Oriane ..... Helen Christie
Count Mogador ..... Desmond Walter-Ellis

Alain of Montcornet ..... Gordon Whiting
Balthazar ..... Henry Longhurst
Chess Players ..... Michael Elton, Mackenzie Robertson
Chauffeur ..... Geoffrey Palmer
Court Clerk ..... Henry Butterworth

An odd and unsatisfying mixture of fantasy and broad French farce, "Albertine By Moonlight" is a dim commercial prospect. With the West End theatre in the throes of a summer slump, it has only remotest hopes of surviving.

Whimsy has always been a difficult commodity to sell in the theatre, but becomes almost impossible when it is wedded to a subsidiary conventional farce. The two just don't blend, despite the gallant efforts of the cast participating in both schools of the entertainment.

The title character is an airy-fairy dreamy girl who falls in love with a ghost who has haunted the ancestral mansion for five centuries. She is finally prosecuted for enticing him away because the chateau in which he normally appears relied on the spectre for a profitable tourist influx. Alongside the main plot there are the frivolous amours of a marquise and the outsize Hattie Jacques talking about her youthful love life.

Joan Kemp-Welch has tried to infuse some unity into the theme, but generally her staging is on the slack side. The cast has an uphill struggle all the way and seasoned performers like Desmond Walter-Ellis, Helen Christie, Emrys Jones, Bill Fraser, Gordon Whiting and Miss Jacques do their best in difficult circumstances. Marcia Ashton, a promising West End newcomer is clearly miscast in the title role. Henry Graveney's single set is a little fussy, but attractive enough. Myro.

(Closed last Saturday night (19) after five performances).

Don Juan and the Death of Satan

London, May 17.

English Stage Co. presentation of two sequential playlets in four acts (13 scenes), by Ronald Duncan. Staged by George Devine; settings, John Minton. Richard Negri. At Royal Court Theatre, London, May 16, '56; $1.75.

Don Juan Tenorlo ..... Keith Michell
Capt. Avellenena, Oscar Wilde ..... Christopher Fettes
Dona Ana ..... Rosalie Crutchley
Don Gonzalo, Bernard Shaw ..... John Welsh
Satan ..... Michael Gwynn
Catallon ..... Stephen Dartnell
Lionel ..... John Osborne
Evelyn ..... Rachel Kempson
Lord Byron ..... Robert Stephens
Anthony Lissenden ..... Nigel Davenport

If these two pieces could have been telescoped, much dullness would be obviated, and a more cohesive drama presented. As it is, the tedium almost outweighs the writer's skill as a satirist, and the result is limited audience appeal. It is included in the current English Stage Co. repertoire at the Royal Court Theatre, and may attract some longhair trade.

Don Juan's wager with a fellow libertine that within a year he will outcount the other in the number of his conquests is the theme of the opening verse play. Subsequently he finds himself in hell with a benign Satan, who allows him to return to earth. He is disgusted with mortals, however, and gladly returns to hell. A scene where an archbishop plays poker with Bernard Shaw, Lord Byron and Oscar Wilde in the nether regions provides one of the worthwhile scenes.

Australian actor Keith Michell makes a dashing, robust Don Juan and Rosalie Crutchley is appealing as his one true love. Michael Gwynn is impressive as Satan and the three pillars of the literary world are excellently played by John Welsh, Christopher Fettes and Robert Stephens. The production is superbly directed by George Devine. Clem.

The Man With the Golden Arm

Contemporary Theatre Inc. production of dramatization by Jack Kirkland of Nelson Algren's novel. Staged by Louis MacMillan; settings, lighting and costumes, Paul Morrison. At Cherry Lane, N.Y., May 21, '56; $3 top.

Cast: Frederick O'Neal, Harry Gresham, Sidney Kay, Robert J. Loggia, Virginia Downing, Peggy Feury, Dolores Sutton, Gene Miller, Vincent Gardenia, Robert Bernard, Louis Guss, Wayne Wilson, Metro Welles, Bob Wiensko, Al Spartic, Maggie Davis, Dick Campbell, Maurice Brenner, Terry Carter, Diana Sands.

In "The Man With the Golden Arm," author Nelson Algren is telling of Frankie Machine, small-time grifter, card sharp and dope addict. Via the prize-winning novel, Frankie's sordid tale has gotten around, and Hollywood's somewhat warped version is also presently available. Now Jack Kirkland's legit adaptation has arrived at Cherry Lane, and though hardly typical summer fare, it's punchy theatre of husky off-Broadway potential.

Kirkland's version of "Golden Arm" is said to have been drafted before the film mills started grinding, but Contemporary Theatre, Inc.'s production is its stage debut. It's apparently never too late for anything off-Broadway, which should be a boon to playgoers prepared to be diverted by Frankie's depressing saga. Abetted by the flexible staging provided by designer Paul Morrison, Kirkland gets at the guts of Algren's novel, being faithful almost to a fault in his unsparing depiction of the decline and fall of one particular American.

That so much has been physically accomplished with Cherry Lane's diminutive facilities is a mutual credit to adapter, director and designer. In freely episodic fashion, there is almost complete mobility as the action moves from jail to dingy walk-up flat, from back-room card game to hall bedroom, from police line-up to night club. Not even Frankie's remorselessly tragic end is spared.

In his staging, Louis Macmillan italicizes the painful exactitude of Kirkland's adaptation. From the beginning, there is such stridency, tension and drive that the play's second half rather suffers from inability to top the early strenuousness consistently. There is, however, the sardonic humor of the line-up, a vignette of much pungency, and the harrowing vision of Frankie's ultimate personal resolution of his problem. After the latter, the two short scenes that close the legend are anti-climactic, despite their acrid truths.

Robert J. Loggia has the tough role of Francis Machinek, alias Frankie Machine, and he manages a compulsively driven performance complete to the addict's twitch of a foot as his craving is satisfied. As the wife he has brutally disabled, Peggy Feury has a number of moments of revelation, while Sidney Kay is alternately amusing or affecting as his friend.

Frederick O'Neal vigorously plays the hard-driving police captain who implacably dogs Frankie to his doom (in manner reminiscent of "Les Miserables"), Vince Gardenia has coarse menace as a blind man, Gene Miller creates some tense moments as a dope pusher, while Dolores Sutton is lushly handsome as Frankie's faithful mistress.

From flashing colored light opening to sombre close, the pressure is unremitting. This is theatre for the robust. Geor.

Legit Down Under

scheduled for Williamson production later this year.

Long Runs

Musicals usually play the Williamson 10-theatre Australian-New Zealand circuit for about two years, while straight plays run for approximately a year to a year-and-a-half. Top longrun entries of recent years include "Annie Get Your Gun," "Oklahoma" and "South Pacific," all U.S. tuners. The Williamson operation not only functions as producer and theatre-owner, but also has its own workshops to take care of the physical requirements of a show.

Leads for the musical and straight play offering are usually recruited from the U. S. and Britain, with Australian performers padding out the balance of the cast. There's no definite stipulation or the number of alien performers who may be employed, but it's generally limited to not more than a third of the cast.

According to Tait, the minimum salary for principals is about $45 weekly, while chorusers get around $55. The tab for musicians, with about 25-30 tooters to a show, is approximately $45 per frame. Incidentally, directors and choreographers are also usually imported for the turners.

The weekly operating tab on a musical, Tait notes, is around $11,000, while a straight play usually runs at around $5,000 per frame. The musical houses, averaging 1,700-1,800 seats, can gross around $15,000 weekly at capacity. The straight play showcases, with about 1,250 seats, can take in around $8,000 weekly at capacity.

Traveling costs rate as one of the top expenses because of the lengthy hikes between cities. There are no short hauls similar to the road situation in the U.S. Musicals are usually scaled to a $3 b.o. top, while the general high on straight plays is $2.

Besides touring legit shows, the Williamson firm also sends out ballet and opera companies. In the former category, the Borevansky Ballet has been touring for the past two years. An opera company, with 30 Italian artists, just finished touring. Tait is working on the possibility of Australian-New Zealand trek for the international touring production of "Porgy and Bess."

He's also trying to get the Danny Kaye unit for a tour. However, a major stumbling block is that a performer is only permitted to take out $7,500 per year from Australia and New Zealand for a combined total of $15,000.

The Williamson operation is also moving into tv, which is expected to get rolling in Australia by the end of this year. The firm has an interest in two commercial stations, one in Melbourne and the other in Sydney. Both cities will also have national stations, which will operate non-commercially.

Williamson theatres in Australia, include the Comedy and His Majesty's, Melbourne; Empire and Theatre Royal, Sydney; His Majesty's, Brisbane; Theatre Royal, Adelaide, and His Majesty's, Perth. Houses in New Zealand include His Majesty's Auckland; Opera House, Wellington, and Theatre Royal, Christchurch.

Tait's daughter, Peggy Tait, is the firm's U.S. representative, headquartering in New York.

'Pajama' Sporty $40,200 For 4th Week, Detroit

Detroit, May 22.

The fourth stanza of the touring "Pajama Game" grossed almost $40,200 at the 2,050-seat Shubert last week. Potential capacity is $53,000 at the $4 top.

They drew $35,300 the first week, $43,200 the second and $44,100 the third. It continues here this week and next.

'Teahouse' $45,632; $181,726 Total 4 Weeks, Philly

Philadelphia, May 22.

"Teahouse of the August Moon" wound up its smash four-week stand at the Forrest, setting successive new house records the first three stanzas and easing only a trifle on the finale.

The theatre remains dark until tomorrow night (Wed.), when "Shangri-La," revamped after its Boston run and with new principals, begins a two-and-a-half week tryout run. Dennis King and Shirley Yamaguchi are added starters in the musical edition of the late James Hilton's best-seller "Lost Horizon."

Estimate for Last Week

Teahouse of August Moon, Forrest (4th wk) ($5.40; 1,760; $45,700) (Eli Wallach, Gene Blakeley). The John Patrick-Vern Sneider comedy proved one of the most successful straight play offerings ever presented here, and could have stayed several weeks longer. Final week grossed $45,632, bringing the four-week total to a fabulous $181,726.

'Anastasia' 19G, 'Silk' $46,900, S.F.

San Francisco, May 22.

"Anastasia," in its second Geary round, stepped up its take last week, while "Anniversary Waltz," in its 27th Alcazar week, slipped a bit.

"Silk Stockings" remained close to a sellout in its fourth week at the Curran.

Estimates for Last Week

Anastasia, Geary (2d wk) ($4.40; 1,550; $37,000) (Viveca Lindfors, Eugenie Leontovich). Neat $19,000; previous week, $16,500.

Silk Stockings, Curran (4th wk) ($5.40; 1,752; $52,000) (Don Ameche). Nifty $46,900, previous week, same. Allan Jones replaces Ameche July 9 in Dallas, Tex.

Anniversary Waltz, Alcazar (27th wk) ($3.85; 1,147; $27,341) (Richard Eastham, Marjorie Lord). Passable $11,200; previous week, $12,000.

Drama (Hic) Fest

sary financial support necessary for its continuance.

"It is shocking that such sales propaganda should be issued in the name of the Dominion Drama Festival. Such a letter as yours will serve rather to discredit the Festival and the purpose it is intended to serve. Support of the Dominion Drama Festival by such means will be self-defeating."

A spokesman for Calverts Distillers Corp. asked that he be not quoted by name but said that the company was anxious to promote the arts in Canada and the only thing asked in return was attachment of the firm's name to the Festival's various awards.

Ongley said, "We were in the hole and had tried all sorts of financial campaigns when Calverts stepped in. If we mention their name in press releases, the press cuts it out. We wanted to show our gratitude and we are not ashamed of our sponsor." He subsequently expressed regret over the incident.

The governor-general, the brother of Broadway and Hollywood actor Raymond Massey, was involved in the fuss as a patron of the DDF.

Gerald Hiken, who won Clarence Derwent Award for his performance in "Uncle Vanya" at the 4th Street Theatre, N. Y., returned to the cast yesterday (Tues.) after a brief run in "The Lovers."

B'way Uneven; 'Night' 35G, 'Wind' 27G, 'Game' 38½G, 'Pipe' $34,600, 'Kate' 33G, 'Diary' $28,700, 'Sebastians' $20,100

Business was spotty last week. Moderate to substantial hikes were scored by 11 shows, while similarly fluctuating drops were registered by 10 others. The capacity lineup included "Most Happy Fella," "My Fair Lady" and "No Time for Sergeants."

There were no openings or closings. Sole preem this stanza is 'The Littlest Revue" at the Phoenix Theatre.

3D 'TEAHOUSE' $41,434 FOR FULL WEEK, MPLS.

Minneapolis, May 22.

The third company of "Teahouse of August Moon," starring Larry Parks, garnered hurrahs on every hand and grossed a smash $41,434 for six nights and two matinees last week at $4.40 top at the 1,850-seat Lyceum. Potential gross at the scale was about $49,000. The bulging trade was in the face of Metropolitan Opera opposition at the 4,550-seat Northrop Auditorium.

"Teahouse" went clean for the three performances Friday-Saturday (18-19). Show, the Theatre Guild-ATS fifth and final subscription season offering, continues here for four more performances this Sunday through Wednesday (20-23), then goes to the St. Paul Auditorium for three nights and a matinee Thursday-Saturday (24-26).

Legit season winds up at the Lyceum with a 10-day engagement of "Damn Yankees," June 4-12.

'Yankees' Rally to 39½G For Holdover in Pitt

Pittsburgh, May 22.

Second and final week of "Damn Yankees" jumped more than $7,000 over the opening stanza at the 1,700-seat Nixon, getting $39,500 to send the musical out of town with a profit on the fortnight. Top was $6.60 for Friday and Saturday nights, as against $5.40 weeknights, above normal for here. Potential capacity gross at the upped scale was around $50,000.

This winds up local legit season, but the Nixon relights June 14 with the film "Oklahoma."

'Boy Friend' Weak $16,500 In 7-Performance Split

Winnipeg, May 22.

"Boy Friend" grossed a meagre $16,500 in a seven-performance, three-way split last week. The musical picked up $1,400 in a performance Sunday (13) at the Lyceum Theatre, Minneapolis. Another $5,300 was added in two performances Monday-Tuesday (14-15) at the Auditorium, St. Paul. Tuner finished the frame with a $9,800 take for four performances Thursday-Saturday (17-19) at the Auditorium here.

The Cy Feuer-Ernest H. Martin production is current at the Grand Theatre, Calgary, Alberta.

Shows Out of Town

Thieves' Paradise

Washington, May 20.

Bruce Fagan presentation of melodrama in three acts (four scenes), by Myron C. Fagan. Staged by the author; sets and lighting, Louis Kennel. At National Theatre, Washington, D. C., May 20, 1956; $3.30 top.

Marya Mazek ..... Zolya Talma
Jan Bulov ..... Carleton Young
Toni Mazek ..... Kay Kendall
Paul ..... Peter Dawson
Stefan Bulov ..... Frederic Tozere
Rita Bulov ..... Ethel Britton
Capt. Barsky ..... Noel Cravat
Gorkl ..... John O'Brien
Mme. Savoroff ..... Maida Reade

"Thieves' Paradise" is a combination of old-fashioned 10-20-30 melodrama and a propaganda tract designed to convince Americans that the United Nations is a secret Russian weapon, to turn the U. S. Communist.

The propaganda is laid on in steam shovel scoop portions, with such dialogue as, "Then all those American boys who were killed in Korea were really murdered by the UN," and long dissertations on the danger of treaties making this country subservient to international Communism.

Highlight of the action, in act three, has (1) a Commy stooge murdering his wife offstage with a butcher knife; (2) two Russian soldiers hacked to death offstage by a female Bulgarian patriot, (3) the stooge having a fingernail torn bleeding from his finger onstage; (4) the Russian officer who did the fingernail job being shot in the belly and slain onstage; (5) a woman agreeing to betray her brother-in-law to the Russians for $100,000 in American money.

Scene of all this is a town in Bulgaria, with Bulgarian patriots trying to smuggle strips of microfilm and sound tape to the U.S. to convince Americans that the "great betrayal" at Yalta included a deal to plant the UN in this country as a Communist Trojan horse.

"Thieves' Paradise," which has leased the Shubert Theatre for a fortnight on a four-wall deal, is another of Myron C. Fagan's exhortations about the dangers of internationalism and Communism, which he apparently regards as synonymous. The meller has all the subtlety of a kick in the pants, and if the Communists were such as those portrayed, even the stupidest Americans could hardly fail to be violently anti-Red.

Zolya Talma, Carleton Young, Ethel Britton and Frederic Tozere struggle manfully with the impossible roles, but fail to breathe anything approaching life into them.

The Third Best Sport

Dallas, May 14.

Ramsey Burch production of comedy in two acts (four scenes), by Eleanor and Leo Bayer. Staged by Burch; technical direction, James Pringle. Features Louise Latham, Ray MacDonnell. At Margo Jones Theatre '56, Dallas, May 14, '56; $3 top.

Arthur Underhill ..... Edward Cullen
Douglas Sayre ..... Ray MacDonnell
Chuck Robbins ..... Bob Mullen
Prof. Lockwood ..... Arthur Nations
Michael Tully ..... Joe Nash
Helen Sayre ..... Louise Latham
John Wagner ..... Edwin Whitner
Marge Robbins ..... Joan Delehaunty
Amy Underhill ..... Ruth Amos
Spencer McHenry ..... Ramsey Burch
Myra McHenry ..... Sadie French

Theatre '56, ending its 12th season, eschews the usual three weeks of repertory in favor of an eighth tryout, and comes up with a big winner. "Third Best Sport" (big biz) is a nifty script by wife-and-husband collaborators Eleanor and Leo Bayer.

Their contemporary piece deals with top executives who bring their wives to the annual sales convention in Palm Beach. Tightly written play gets running laughs and plenty yocks, as apple-polishing "corporation" wives help their spouses in lathering top echelon bosses and customers.

New bride of a general manager defies the femme hypocrites and verbally battles the best customer's wife to a draw in the top scene. Prexy's demand that the g.m. get rid of his wife is prefaced by her willingness to depart and secure her husband's future. Instead, he resigns, sets up his own biz and the weak closing scene has the rebellious wife promoting a big loan to launch the new firm.

Louise Latham scores as the adamant wife, with Ray MacDonnell playing his best role this season as the husband who scorns his boss to keep his wife. Edwin Whitner is properly haughty as the top brass, and Edward Cullen makes a humorous sales manager. Sadie French, Ruth Amos and Joan Delehaunty are capable "corporation" wives. Ramsey Burch, aside from his top staging, adds an expert acting stint as the "top customer."

The Indifferent Shepherd

Toronto, May 9.

Davis Bros. presentation of drama in three acts, by Peter Ustinov. Stars Murray Davis, Barbara Chilcott. Alan Nunn. Director, Brias Maller; setting, John Wilson; costumes, Margaret Smyth. At Crest Theatre, Toronto, May 9, '56; $3 top.

Nellie ..... Sylvia Gillespie
Melanie Aspen ..... Barbara Chilcott
Hugh Wigmore ..... Alan Nunn
Henry Aspen ..... Murray Davis
Walter Godwall ..... John Hardinge
Robert ..... Eric Donkin
Hilary ..... Janet Reid

The conflicting philosophies of two Church of England ministers, one a tolerant vicar in a small British town and the other an Army padre who relies on machine-assembly dogma, form the theme of "The Indifferent Shepherd," an obscure title for any b.o. lure except on future word-of-mouth. The play was originally done in London in February, 1948.

Much of the playwright's premise is sophomoric and far below his "Love of Four Colonels." His plot is also often clumsily inept in its dropping into place of past and present pieces that tip off approaching events. This is particularly glaring in the third-act denouement, when the up-to-now gentle minister's confession to his wife reveals that he may be the father of his armoral sister-in-law's daughter.

However, the chief conflict involves the somewhat Shavian arguments of the gentle vicar and his vicarious interests in the problems of the fallen, versus the theory of the hearty padre whose streamlined brand of religion has always worked in Army boot camps. The theological beliefs of both collide when the heroine—wife of the gentle vicar and sister of the rambunctious prelate—admit to an affair with a retired squadron-leader, this coming into the open when he is transferred to Kenya.

Donald Davis wins audience sympathy for his spiritual and marital problems, plus his understanding treatment of human foibles and lapses, and Alan Nunn is sufficiently professional as to be increasingly detested for a self-assessed holy attitude based on mass formula rather than individual cases.

Barbara Chilcott plays the shrewish, love-tormented wife who finds her husband's original viewpoints incomprehensible in either the pulpit or private life and builds to a compelling performance on passion for the "other man." Good work is also done by John Hardinge as the casual lover who flies away.

Other creditable performances are given by Eric Donkin as a frustrated son who gives up the Church to join the Army, Janet Reid in a free-and-easy heroine role and Sylvia Gillespie as the pregnant maid who causes much of the household trouble.

Brian Maller has commendably directed with underplayed skill, and John Wilson's interior set, overlooking a garden, adds authenticity. McStay.

The Magic Amulet

Hollywood, May 16.

Theatre Universal production of a new comedy in three acts (eight scenes), by Roy King. Directed by David Bond; setting, Jon Angelo. At Hollywood Repertory Theatre, May 16, '55; $2.20 top.

Delilah ..... Euni Wright
Jessica Teal ..... Kathy Marlowe
Niel Raymond ..... Zachary Berger
Mona Raymond ..... Gere Craft
Jeffrey Carl ..... Jim Ellis
Jin Singh ..... Ronald Kadell
Ned Foley ..... Theodore Fox
Doorman ..... Jon Angelo

"The Magic Amulet" is in the "Blithe Spirit" vein with what author Roy King presumably hopes is a surprise twist that the audience is asked not to reveal. There's little likelihood that anyone would stay around long enough to find out what it is.

Under David Bond's bumbling direction, a cast of eight postures its way through eight interminable scenes. Kap.

The Spring Affair

Dallas, May 12.

Ramsey Burch production of comedy in three acts, by Violet Welles. Staged by Burch; technical direction, James Pringle. Features Edward Cullen, Freddie Packer. At Margo Jones Theatre '56, Dallas, April 23, '56; $3 top.

Stanley Edgar ..... Edwin Whitner
Louise ..... Joan Delehaunty
Mr. Trilling ..... Edward Cullen
David Peale ..... Ray MacDonnell
Mr. Marchman ..... William Smithart
Mrs. Valentine ..... Louise Latham
Asa Spring ..... Gilbert Milton
Curtis Fyench ..... Bob Mullen
Daniel Valentine ..... Henry Holloway
Miss Ethel Harper ..... Ruth Amos
Plato Pappas ..... Freddie Packer
Susan Bennett ..... Harriet Slaughter
Stock ..... Charlie West

Violet Welles' lightweight comedy has appeal for the teenagers, but scant promise for larger boards or film fare. The weak plot has a 25-year veteran schoolteacher fired as a result of students' essays on great Americans. Plato Pappas' tome on Asa Spring, local goat herder, is the top essay, but conflicts with plans of the small town's bigwig to grab the goat herder's land for a new school site. There is an uprising of school students, headed by the local editor, and of course all ends salubriously.

The large cast is aided by Ramsey Burch's top direction. Edward Cullen makes more of the VIP than the script demands, while Ray MacDonnell turns a potential heel role into a hero windup. Freddie Packer scores as a teenage upriser, Ruth Amos does the aged teacher persuasively, and Edwin Whitner amply fills the prolog bits and makes the editor's role believable.

James Pringle's solo set suffices as both mayor's office and reception room. Bark.

GUARANTORS' BANQUET

St. Louis Players To Divert Those Who Pledge.

St. Louis, May 22.

President Albert M. Keller has revived, after a lapse of 13 years, the old annual Municipal Opera Guarantors' Banquet. It'll be at the Hotel Chase on June 4 with the cast from "Annie Get Your Gun," the opener at the Forest Park open-air playhouse, whipping up a special revue to beguile the 1,500 civic personages who sign up to pay the season's losses, if any.

The annual underwite is $150,000 but only twice have the guarantors failed to get their money back undrawn-upon.

series of revues which gave him the reputation, still intact in Britain, of sire to the modern intime form, which continues there. The American equivalent to the Charlot revues of yesteryear was probably the Guy Bolton-P. G. Wodehouse string at the old LaSalle in Chicago. Charlot moved his revues from the Alhambra to the Vaudeville.

It was in 1924 that New York saw and loved "Andre Charlot's Revue," which made theatrical history beeause it introduced three stars, Beatrice Lillie, Gertrude Lawrence and Jack Buchanan, plus a lot of music destined to become "standard," including "Lime House Blues" and "March with Me." Coward and Ivor Novello were among the song writers.

At this period J. C. Potter was Charlot's company manager, the start of his long association as Gertrude Lawrence's favorite theatre administrator. Potter, who also produced (Potter & Haight), like Rowland Leigh, has also remained close to Beatrice Lillie. In the second Charlot Revue on this side Jessie Mathews understudied Miss Lawrence, later became a musical comedy star on her own.

Charlot continued to produce revues in London until 1936. "Wonder Bar," with Carl Brisson, was one of his biggest smashes. But the old magic was playing out. A gag of British show business at the time had much truth, "Charlot giveth, and Cochran stealeth away."

That had reference to Charlot's undoubted penchant for discovering talent and giving it a break and Charles Cochran's penchant for cashing in. Cochran ended knighted and a millionaire. Charlot ended under the auspices of the Actors' Fund.

Once he tranferred to Hollywood in 1937, the idiosyncrisies of film society defeated Charlot. His credits were numerous enough, but he had no hits. For a while he ran a school. He was much honored by old associates, but nothing materialized. Always popular with theatrical folk, and many tried to help him. They may not have tried hard enough, or perhaps the time of his tide was over.

Oddly enough, he turned film actor and played bishops and foreign diplomats with modest success. Meanwhile, back in London he was frequently reprised on the BBC radio programs, which go extensively for nostalgia.

Death followed a cancer operation at the Woodland Hills Hospital. His wife survives, as do Phillip Charlot and Joan Midwinter, neither child a pro.

British Vs. U.S. Operating Costs

Illustrating the relative operating costs of the British and Broadway theatre are the following excerpts from audits of the English and U. S. productions of "Tiger at the Gates." The Christopher Fry adaptation of Jean Giraudoux' original was presented in Britain by Robert L. Joseph and Stephen Mitchell, and imported for Broadway production by the Playwrights Co., in association with Henry M. Margolis.

Shows Abroad

Albertine by Moonlight

London, May 17.

James P. Sherwood presentation of a comedy in two acts (four scenes), by D. G. Bellini. Features Marcia Ashton, Helen Christie, Desmond Walter-Ellis, Bill Fraser and Gordon Whiting. Staged by Joan Kemp-Welch; decor, Henry Graveney. At Westminster Theatre, London, May 16, '56; $2.20 top.

Mme. Urwig ..... Hattie Jacques
Dr. Gallery ..... Philip Holles
Antioche ..... Jon Rollason
Timoleon ..... Anthony Bateman
Gabrielle ..... Pat Sandys
Mac ..... Emrys Jones
Albertine ..... Marcia Ashton
Oriane ..... Helen Christie
Count Mogador ..... Desmond Walter-Ellis
Palamede ..... Bill Fraser
Alain of Montcornet ..... Gordon Whiting
Balthazar ..... Henry Longhurst
Chess Players ..... Michael Bilton, Mackenzie Robertson
Chauffeur ..... Geoffrey Palmer
Court Clerk ..... Henry Butterworth

An odd and unsatisfying mixture of fantasy and broad French farce, "Albertine By Moonlight" is a dim commercial prospect. With the West End theatre in the throes of a summer slump, it has only remotest hopes of surviving.

Whimsy has always been a difficult commodity to sell in the theatre, but becomes almost impossible when it is wedded to a subsidiary conventional farce. The two just don't blend, despite the gallant efforts of the cast participating in both schools of the entertainment.

The title character is an airy-fairy dreamy girl who falls in love with a ghost who has haunted the ancestral mansion for five centuries. She is finally prosecuted for enticing him away because the chateau in which he normally appears relied on the spectre for a profitable tourist influx. Alongside the main plot there are the frivolous amours of a marquise and the outsize Hattie Jacques talking about her youthful love life.

Joan Kemp-Welch has tried to infuse some unity into the theme, but generally her staging is on the slack side. The cast has an uphill struggle all the way and seasoned performers like Desmond Walter-Ellis, Helen Christie, Emrys Jones, Bill Fraser, Gordon Whiting and Miss Jacques do their best in difficult circumstances. Marcia Ashton, a promising West End newcomer is clearly miscast in the title role. Henry Graveney's single set is a little fussy, but attractive enough. Myro.

(Closed last Saturday night (19) after five performances).

Don Juan and the Death of Satan

London, May 17.

English Stage Co. presentation of two sequential playlets in four acts (13 scenes), by Ronald Duncan. Staged by George Devine; settings, John Minton. Richard Negri. At Royal Court Theatre, London, May 16, '56; $1.75.

Don Juan Tenorio ..... Keith Michell
Capt. Avellenena, Oscar Wilde ..... Christopher Fettes
Dona Ana ..... Rosalie Crutchley
Don Gonzalo, Bernard Shaw ..... John Welsh
Satan ..... Michael Gwynn
Catalion ..... Stephen Dartnell
Lionel ..... John Osborne
Evelyn ..... Rachel Kempson
Lord Byron ..... Robert Stephens
Anthony Lissenden ..... Nigel Davenport

If these two pieces could have been telescoped, much dullness would be obviated, and a more cohesive drama presented. As it is, the tedium almost outweighs the writer's skill as a satirist, and the result is limited audience appeal. It is included in the current English Stage Co. repertoire at the Royal Court Theatre, and may attract some longhair trade.

Don Juan's wager with a fellow libertine that within a year he will outcount the other in the number of his conquests is the theme of the opening verse play. Subsequently he finds himself in hell with a benign Satan, who allows him to return to earth. He is disgusted with mortals, however, and gladly returns to hell. A scene where an archbishop plays poker with Bernard Shaw, Lord Byron and Oscar Wilde in the nether regions provides one of the worthwhile scenes.

Australian actor Keith Michell makes a dashing, robust Don Juan and Rosalie Crutchley is appealing as his one true love. Michael Gwynn is impressive as Satan and the three pillars of the literary world are excellently played by John Welsh, Christopher Fettes and Robert Stephens. The production is superbly directed by George Devine. Clem.

The Man With the Golden Arm

Contemporary Theatre Inc. production of dramatization by Jack Kirkland of Nelson Algren's novel. Staged by Louis MacMillan; settings, lighting and costumes, Paul Morrison. At Cherry Lane, N.Y., May 21, '56; $3 top.

Cast: Frederick O'Neal, Harry Gresham, Sidney Kay, Robert J. Loggia, Virginia Downing, Peggy Feury, Dolores Sutton, Gene Miller, Vincent Gardenia, Robert Bernard, Louis Guss, Wayne Wilson, Metro Welles, Bob Wiensko, Al Spartic, Maggie Davis, Dick Campbell, Maurice Brenner, Terry Carter, Diana Sands.

In "The Man With the Golden Arm," author Nelson Algren is telling of Frankie Machine, small-time grifter, card sharp and dope addict. Via the prize-winning novel, Frankie's sordid tale has gotten around, and Hollywood's somewhat warped version is also presently available. Now Jack Kirkland's legit adaptation has arrived at Cherry Lane, and though hardly typical summer fare, it's punchy theatre of husky off-Broadway potential.

Kirkland's version of "Golden Arm" is said to have been drafted before the film mills started grinding, but Contemporary Theatre, Inc.'s production is its stage debut. It's apparently never too late for anything off-Broadway, which should be a boon to playgoers prepared to be diverted by Frankie's depressing saga. Abetted by the flexible staging provided by designer Paul Morrison, Kirkland gets at the guts of Algren's novel, being faithful almost to a fault in his unsparing depiction of the decline and fall of one particular American.

That so much has been physically accomplished with Cherry Lane's diminutive facilities is a mutual credit to adapter, director and designer. In freely episodic fashion, there is almost complete mobility as the action moves from jail to dingy walk-up flat, from back-room card game to hall bedroom, from police line-up to night club. Not even Frankie's remorselessly tragic end is spared.

In his staging, Louis Macmillan italicizes the painful exactitude of Kirkland's adaptation. From the beginning, there is such stridency, tension and drive that the play's second half rather suffers from inability to top the early strenuousness consistently. There is, however, the sardonic humor of the line-up, a vignette of much pungency, and the harrowing vision of Frankie's ultimate personal resolution of his problem. After the latter, the two short scenes that close the legend are anti-climactic, despite their acrid truths.

Robert J. Loggia has the tough role of Francis Machinek, alias Frankie Machine, and he manages a compulsively driven performance complete to the addict's twitch of a foot as his craving is satisfied. As the wife he has brutally disabled, Peggy Feury has a number of moments of revelation, while Sidney Kay is alternately amusing or affecting as his friend.

Frederick O'Neal vigorously plays the hard-driving police captain who implacably dogs Frankie to his doom (in manner reminiscent of "Les Miserables"), Vince Gardenia has coarse menace as a blind man, Gene Miller creates some tense moments as a dope pusher, while Dolores Sutton is lushly handsome as Frankie's faithful mistress.

From flashing colored light opening to sombre close, the pressure is unremitting. This is theatre for the robust. Geor.

scheduled for Williamson production later this year.

Long Runs

Musicals usually play the Williamson 10-theatre Australian-New Zealand circuit for about two years, while straight plays run for approximately a year to a year-and-a-half. Top longrun entries of recent years include "Annie Get Your Gun," "Oklahoma" and "South Pacific," all U.S. tuners. The Williamson operation not only functions as producer and theatre-owner, but also has its own workshops to take care of the physical requirements of a show.

Leads for the musical and straight play offering are usually recruited from the U. S. and Britain, with Australian performers padding out the balance of the cast. There's no definite stipulation on the number of alien performers who may be employed, but it's generally limited to not more than a third of the cast.

According to Tait, the minimum salary for principals is about $45 weekly, while chorusers get around $55. The tab for musicians, with about 25-30 tooters to a show, is approximately $45 per frame. Incidentally, directors and choreographers are also usually imported for the turners.

The weekly operating tab on a musical, Tait notes, is around $11,000, while a straight play usually runs at around $5,000 per frame. The musical houses, averaging 1,700-1,800 seats, can gross around $15,000 weekly at capacity. The straight play showcases, with about 1,250 seats, can take in around $8,000 weekly at capacity.

Traveling costs rate as one of the top expenses because of the lengthy hikes between cities. There are no short hauls similar to the road situation in the U.S. Musicals are usually scaled to a $3 b.o. top, while the general high on straight plays is $2.

Besides touring legit shows, the Williamson firm also sends out ballet and opera companies. In the former category, the Borevansky Ballet has been touring for the past two years. An opera company, with 30 Italian artists, just finished touring. Tait is working on the possibility of Australian-New Zealand trek for the international touring production of "Porgy and Bess."

He's also trying to get the Danny Kaye unit for a tour. However, a major stumbling block is that a performer is only permitted to take out $7,500 per year from Australia and New Zealand for a combined total of $15,000.

The Williamson operation is also moving into tv, which is expected to get rolling in Australia by the end of this year. The firm has an interest in two commercial stations, one in Melbourne and the other in Sydney. Both cities will also have national stations, which will operate non-commercially.

Williamson theatres in Australia, include the Comedy and His Majesty's, Melbourne; Empire and Theatre Royal, Sydney; His Majesty's, Brisbane; Theatre Royal, Adelaide, and His Majesty's, Perth. Houses in New Zealand include His Majesty's Auckland; Opera House, Wellington, and Theatre Royal, Christchurch.

Tait's daughter, Peggy Tait, is the firm's U.S. representative, headquartering in New York.

'Teahouse' $45,632; $181,726 Total 4 Weeks, Philly

Philadelphia, May 22.

"Teahouse of the August Moon" wound up its smash four-week stand at the Forrest, setting successive new house records the first three stanzas and easing only a trifle on the finale.

The theatre remains dark until tomorrow night (Wed.), when "Shangri-La," revamped after its Boston run and with new principals, begins a two-and-a-half week tryout run. Dennis King and Shirley Yamaguchi are added starters in the musical edition of the late James Hilton's best-seller "Lost Horizon."

sary financial support necessary for its continuance.

"It is shocking that such sales propaganda should be issued in the name of the Dominion Drama Festival. Such a letter as yours will serve rather to discredit the Festival and the purpose it is intended to serve. Support of the Dominion Drama Festival by such means will be self-defeating."

A spokesman for Calverts Distillers Corp. asked that he be not quoted by name but said that the company was anxious to promote the arts in Canada and the only thing asked in return was attachment of the firm's name to the Festival's various awards.

Ongley said, "We were in the hole and had tried all sorts of financial campaigns when Calverts stepped in. If we mention their name in press releases, the press cuts it out. We wanted to show our gratitude and we are not ashamed of our sponsor." He subsequently expressed regret over the incident.

The governor-general, the brother of Broadway and Hollywood actor Raymond Massey, was involved in the fuss as a patron of the DDF.

Gerald Hiken, who won Clarence Derwent Award for his performance in "Uncle Vanya" at the 4th Street Theatre, N. Y., returned to the cast yesterday (Tues.) after a brief run in "The Lovers."

B'way Uneven; 'Night' 35G, 'Wind' 27G, 'Game' 38½G, 'Pipe' $34,600, 'Kate' 33G, 'Diary' $28,700, 'Sebastians' $20,100

Business was spotty last week. Moderate to substantial hikes were scored by 11 shows, while similarly fluctuating drops were registered by 10 others. The capacity lineup included "Most Happy Fella," "My Fair Lady" and "No Time for Sergeants."

There were no openings or closings. Sole preem this stanza is "The Littlest Revue" at the Phoenix Theatre.

3D 'TEAHOUSE' $41,434 FOR FULL WEEK, MPLS.

Minneapolis, May 22.

The third company of "Teahouse of August Moon," starring Larry Parks, garnered hurrahs on every hand and grossed a smash $41,434 for six nights and two matinees last week at $4.40 top at the 1,850-seat Lyceum. Potential gross at the scale was about $49,000. The bulging trade was in the face of Metropolitan Opera opposition at the 4,550-seat Northrop Auditorium.

"Teahouse" went clean for the three performances Friday-Saturday (18-19). Show, the Theatre Guild-ATS fifth and final subscription season offering, continues here for four more performances this Sunday through Wednesday (20-23), then goes to the St. Paul Auditorium for three nights and a matinee Thursday-Saturday (24-26).

Legit season winds up at the Lyceum with a 10-day engagement of "Damn Yankees," June 4-12.

'Yankees' Rally to 39½G For Holdover in Pitt

Pittsburgh, May 22.

Second and final week of "Damn Yankees" jumped more than $7,000 over the opening stanza at the 1,700-seat Nixon, getting $39,500 to send the musical out of town with a profit on the fortnight. Top was $6.60 for Friday and Saturday nights, as against $5.40 weeknights, above normal for here. Potential capacity gross at the upped scale was around $50,000.

This winds up local legit season, but the Nixon relights June 14 with the film "Oklahoma."

'Boy Friend' Weak $16,500 In 7-Performance Split

Winnipeg, May 22.

"Boy Friend" grossed a meagre $16.500 in a seven-performance, three-way split last week. The musical picked up $1,400 in a performance Sunday (13) at the Lyceum Theatre, Minneapolis. Another $5,300 was added in two performances Monday-Tuesday (14-15) at the Auditorium, St. Paul. Tuner finished the frame with a $9,800 take for four performances Thursday-Saturday (17-19) at the Auditorium here.

The Cy Feuer-Ernest H. Martin production is current at the Grand Theatre, Calgary, Alberta.

Candid Harrison & Gehring

to help remedy the present high production cost situation and to put fresh vitality into pictures. They asked the exhibitors to lend support to its endeavor.

Refusing to take Gehring's slap at him lying down, Berger arose at the conclusion of the executive's talk to make clear that he, too, on principle is opposed to government intervention in the industry, but he's now urging it as a last resort because it has become clear needed film rental relief for small and subsequent run exhibitors will not be forthcoming voluntarily from the film companies.

Berger also had his say regarding the Hollywood production costs. Addressing Gehring, he said he's sympathetic with the film companies because of what's happening in that regard in Hollywood.

"But," said Berger, "the companies have brought much of this grief on themselves by their extravagances, inefficiency, unreasonable salaries and bonuses paid to executives, nepotism and under-the-table deals."

Gehring and Harrison admitted the seriousness of tv competition, but declared the film industry always will live and be great, "although there may be fewer theatres." They urged exhibitors to give personalized attention to their theatres, keep their showhouses physically perfect and to demonstrate the utmost in showmanship.

"We must have peace in the industry and I fervently hope that a single unified exhibitor body will eventuate," said Gehring. "Let's quit washing our dirty linen in public and settle our differences ourselves."

Gehring expressed the belief that production and distribution should be more flexible and that different accounts should be sold differently.

"The decline in theatre attendance that has occurred doesn't mean by a long shot that the industry is washed up," declared Gehring. "It'll always live because it's too important a part of the American economy and way of life to be permitted to perish."

Gehring pointed out that if it hadn't been for Fox's income from sources other than theatre film rentals it would have lost money in 1955. He asserted it was silly to claim, as Berger and some other exhibitor leaders are claiming, that the film companies wish to put the small exhibitors out of business.

"Film companies derive from 6 to 7% of their theatre film rental income from these small exhibitors and deprived of that important revenue none could keep out of the red," he asserted.

High Admissions

Jack Kirsch, Illinois Allied president, another speaker, wondered if exhibition isn't putting itself out of business with its high admissions, necessitated largely because of increased film rental costs. He pointed out that drive-ins, with lower admissions and admitting children free, are doing relatively better than most four-wall houses.

He blamed "destructive film rentals" for keeping exhibitors from sharing in the high degree of prosperity and asked "when am I supposed to make important money on pictures and on what kind of pictures?"

Kirsch said he considers tv "our greatest enemy" and declared it was foolishly to show pictures in theatres which previously in part or in whole have been shown for free on video.

". . . But without two exceptional soprano voices, "Rosalinda" could fizzle into oblivion. The production is blessed with LOIS HUNT . . . To the soubrette role of Adele the maid who wears her mistress' dress to the ball, Miss Hunt brings an abundance of vocal and acting talent."

PATTERSON GREENE
Los Angeles Examiner

"Fortunately Lois Hunt top soprano can act as well as sing."

RAYMOND KENDALL
Mirror-News Music Editor, Los Angeles

"Making a strong impression as the frolicking maid is Lois Hunt, a lassie with a sparkling personality which comes full force across the footlights."

GEORGE H. JACKSON
Los Angeles Herald & Express

"Lois Hunt, likewise of the Met, is a pert Adele, with a musetta-type voice that does not flinch at the coloratura roulades of the Laughing Song, or the waltz of the last act, and with a soubrette's flair for making a maid in her mistress' borrowed dress seem plausible."

Bliss Will Personally Address Demands-Making Metopera Troupe

President Anthony A. Bliss, of the Metropolitan Opera, has asked for and received an invitation to address the company and presumably will do so next Saturday (26) in Chicago, where the Met is playing. This is the one "break" in the situation of the demands of the American Guild of Musical Artists for higher hourly rehearsal rates for choristers and fewer unpaid hours of rehearsal, plus job security.

A dispute has developed between the Met claim that these demands amount to $125,000 added annual operating costs and the Guild's own estimates of $25,000. As to that, nobody seems to have the facts and the present situation has become to a considerable extent an emotional one.

Principle singers are apparently embarrassed either (a) to press the issue against the management due to considerable "social" pressure from friends on the Board or (b) alternately to let down the little people with whom they must get along backstage.

Just what Bliss will say to the company in Chicago is not known, of course, but a renewed plea to consider the Met's bad financial situation is anticipated. This was the burden of Bliss' (and Chairman Lauder Greenway's) joint press statement over the past weekend, which cited that deficits were mounting and the new Lincoln Square opera house made the outlook even worse.

AGMA president John Brownlee and attorney-executive secretary Mortimer Becker will be on hand when Bliss speaks. He will have carte blanche, but AGMA spokesmen may make immediate rebuttal. Brownlee's point is expected to be that the Metropolitan has never been free of deficit as far as memory runneth and that this is not an argument against wage increases but against the over-all fiscal situation.

Artur Rubinstein, currently touring Europe, upped from Officer to Commander in Legion of Honor after his concert at Bordeaux Festival.

MET BOFFS MINNEAPOLIS

Takes $99,857 In Four Performances—Big Mail Order

Minneapolis, May 22.

Grossing $99,857 for four (17-20) performances at $7.50 top at the 4,850-seat Northrop Auditorium, Metropolitan Opera enjoyed its best local engagement upon occasion of its 11 visits here.

Three of four operas, "Rigoletto," "Aida," and "Boris Goudinov," were sold out by mail orders well in advance. "Die Meistersinger" Sunday matinee (20) drew 4,260 customers.

Guarantors had subscribed $86,000, or $13,000 more than last season and the company's guarantee was substantially exceeded. Number of guarantors increased 27% over last year.

Des Moines Tops '55

Des Moines, May 22.

Attendance at the Metropolitan Opera "Tales of Hoffmann" performance at KRNT Theatre last night was 3,813—450 more than attended last year's Met performance of "Madame Butterfly." This is the seventh year the Met has come to Des Moines in May.

Richard Tucker and Roberta Peters, were top-billed but because of illness Miss Peters did not appear. Laurel Hurley did the Olympia role.

Bing's Biff-Bang Press; No Wreckage Picker, Says He, Rapping Guild

Rudolph Bing told Paul Flowers of the Memphis Commercial Appeal during the recent spring tour of the Metropolitan Opera that if the 1956-57 plans were upset he "will not pick up the wreckage." This followed newspaper reports anent the choristers demands for more pay (or, say some choristers, less rehearsing).

Bing insisted that he had abandoned all preparations for the upcoming season—to which the unionists countered with the question: "Why then, all the auditioning for new singers?" General manager contended that it was the American Guild of Musical Artists, not himself, which was author of the "threat" to close.

"This is not a management affair but a Board decision," said Bing, emphasizing, "The opera management is acting on board instructions; that is to cancel the season if there is no agreement by June 1."

The g.m. told the Memphis paper further:

"Personally I will urgently advise the board, once the season has been canceled, not to consider reopening for the 1956-57 season, as no doubt important artists will enter into other commitments and I will not be responsible for a 'pick-up' season.

"The preparation of a season is an immensely complex and complicated work which has been going on for months. If all this work is irresponsibly broken up, I will not pick up the wreckage."

And here was the snapper from the Met chieftain:

I do not like to conduct labor negotiations in the newspapers, but since one-sided and ill-informed stories have appeared in VARIETY, I must answer."

Another arresting commentary on the Metropolitan was printed in the Toledo Blade under Julian Seaman's byline. The writer declared that during the opera troupe date in Cleveland he found "an alarming state of dissension and discontent among the rank and file. . . . I spent three days talking with everybody—chorus and principals, musicians, conductors, young aspirants new to the company, seasoned veterans, even ushers (sic) and a stagehand or two. No one seemed reluctant to talk."

Continued the Toledo music editor: He found it charged that "excessive sums are spent in visual experiments, such as decor and costumes." at a time when economy is preached incessantly.

Judge Takes Battlers Into Chambers

Seeks Solution to Ego Clash Which Endangers Chicago's Lyric Opera

Chicago, May-22.

Thanks to Superior Court Judge Abraham Lincoln Marovitz, hopes for a fall Chicago opera season took on a somewhat more optimistic hue last week.

Jurist yesterday (Mon.) appointed a temporary receiver for the Lyric Theatre in an attempt to get the opera company off deadcenter.

More importantly, Judge Marovitz delivered to the contestants in the month-old Lyric frontoffice battle a lecture in his courtroom last week that was the best authoritative public statement to date on the hassle that has degenerated into comic proportions. Essence of the judge's remarks, directed collectively to Lyric prexy Carol Fox, secretary-treasurer Lawrence V. Kelly and artistic director Nicola Rescigno whose tiff has paralyzed the outfit's managerial setup, was that the Lyric in two seasons has become a civic institution whose importance far transcends the personal prestige and ambitions of the individuals involved.

He expressed the belief the tangled affairs of the debt-ridden company can be unsnarled in time for a '56 season if some "sound business judgment" were injected. Also it would require the "earnest, sincere and unselfish efforts" of the trio who got the Lyric going originally.

However, the judge laid it out cold that the three Lyric founders "don't have a monopoly" claim on the initial success of the company and reminded them of the public's support both at the boxoffice and by donations. (During the first '54 season the ticket sales totaled $216,438, plus contributions of $56,382, leaving a deficit of $13,958. Last season's boxoffice was $428,426, with contributions of $139,205 cutting the deficit to $58,503).

The request for the appointment of a received filed by Miss Fox was vigorously contested by lawyers repping Kelly. Judge Marovitz had spent several hours with the three in his chambers seeking a solution before he acted on the receivership petition. During the courtroom arguments he adroitly sidestepped efforts by the opposing attorneys to get him to pin the blame for the impasse on the other camp.

Catskills Culture Kick On Again

$75,000 Loss Last Season—But Hopes Run High—Line Up Novel Come-Ons

New York State's Catskill Mountain area, heretofore borscht circuit varieties country, will go in big for culture again this summer. Last season ended $75,000 in the red because of 1955's disastrous floods, plus mocking weekend rains. At one point all travel into the festival grounds at Ellenville, N. Y. was washed out.

Against the weather there were performances which drew over 4,000 people. Musical events are held in a big tent seating 2,000. Overflow sits on slope facing the canvas shrine.

Auspices had troubles this spring getting financed. Hotel men in Sullivan County led by Jerome Hershon and Harry Resnick are convinced that culture will expand the borscht area in a big way. Official tag is the Empire State Music Festival.

Frank Forest as general manager (Nat & Irving Dorfman handle the publicity) came up last week with the 1956 dope on a four-week season starting July 4. Top attraction (repeating) will be the ex-NBC Symphony. Leopold Stokowski will conduct when Carl Orff's scoring of "Midsummer Night's Dream" is rendered July 19. Basil Langton will stage the singing performance.

Catskill vacationists will also get a world premiere, Eugene O'Neill's "Emperor Jones" rendered into a ballet by Brazil's Heitor Villa-Lobos and danced by the Jose Limon troupe.

Igor Markevitch will also be one of the Festival conductors.

Erich Leinsdorf, former musical director and conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, now general manager of the New York City Opera Co., will return to conduct six concerts next season.

Set for the podium for the remaining nine concerts are Jose Iturbi, Victor Alessandro, Thomas Schippers, Max Rudolf, Fernando Previtali, Pierre Monteux, Guy Fraser Harrison and Josef Krips, who will bring along his own orchestra, the Buffalo Philharmonic.

Ray Walker's Book

Ray Walker, vet songwriter, pianist and piano-accordionist, who alternates between Brooklyn and Miami Beach, has buckled down to work on a book intended to tell the colorful story of his more than 50 years as cleffer and performer. Tentative title is "Don't Shoot the Piano Player," taken from famous sign that supposedly adorned bistros in ancient Far West. Walker, now in early 70s, probably has the longest continuous record of any tunesmith, although an even older lyricist, Al Bryan, equals or exceeds his song biz span.

One feature of book will be account of surprising number of times Walker's life has been in jeopardy by violence on part of employers, gangsters and other assorted sinister characters.

Gore Vidal's Threesome

Gore Vidal, just back from London where he completed the screenplay of "Capt. Dreyfus," his second for Metro (first was "A Catered Affair"), has three books in the hopper.

He's editing "Anthology of TV Plays" (Ballantine) for August issuance; compiling a volume of his short stories under title of "A Thirsty Evil" (Zero Press), with two yarns not hitherto published (Signet has the paperback rights); and "Vidal's TV Plays," on the Little Brown lists for October.

Criticism Between Covers

"Sights and Spectacles: Theatre Chronicles, 1937-56" by Mary McCarthy (Farrar, Straus & Cudahy; $3.50), is a collection of stage criticisms written principally for The Partisan Review. Author is sister of thesp Kevin McCarthy, but appears to disapprove the type of plays in which her brother has sometimes appeared: "The typical character of the so-called American realist school . . . is a member of some indeterminate lower order of primates."

Miss McCarthy also abrades "A Streetcar Called Success" (as she labels the well-known Tennessee Williams play). She looks with more favor on John van Druten's "Voice of the Turtle," and has varying reactions for Shaw, Chekhov, Ibsen, Shakespeare, Wilder, O'Neill, Saroyan and lesser lights of theatrical literature.

$100 or 100 LPs

Fawcett's roving European feature editor Michael Stern and Columbia Records' a&r topper Mitchell Miller are old friends, so when the writer did a guest-shot on the latter's CBS show he spurned the token $100 fee. Miller insisted, whereupon Stern said, "I'll take it out in LPs because my kids back in Rome are record-happy."

Miller said OK and shipped Estelle and Mike Stern's boy and girl, who are with their mother in Rome, 100 LPs in lieu of the $100 fee.

CHATTER

Antoni Gronowicz's "Modjeska: Her Life and Loves" hitting the stands June 8 under the Thomas Yoseloff Inc. imprint.

Martin Abramson, mag writer and profiler of show biz personalities, a patient in Veterans Administration hospital, Brooklyn.

Col. Serge Obolensky and Mrs. Alice Bouverie "poured" for their son, Ivan Obolensky, author of the just published first novel, "Rogues March."

New Ziff-Davis 35c monthly, Popular Boating, slated for fall, to be edited by William T. McKeown, former boating editor of Fawcett Publications.

Charles Samuels, who authored the Ethel Waters biog, "His Eye Is On the Sparrow," has signed with Doubleday to write the biography of late playwright Charles MacArthur.

Thomas Curran, United Press veep and assistant general manager here, shifts to Europe as general manager, replacing ailing A. L. Bradford, who gives up his stripe and active company status to stay on as UP overseas consultant.

Pageant Press Inc. bringing out Patrise Earle's "Al Plunkett, The Famous Dumbell" June 26. Tome tells reminiscences of Plumkett, star of The Dumbells, Canadian soldier entertainment troupe of World War I, in autobrographical form.

Frank ("The Robe") Ross has bought Joe David Brown's recently published novel, "Kings Go Forth" (Morrow), and will film it partly in France. Incidentally, Brown's 1947 book, "Stars In My Crown," is still a steady seller and has been over the past nine years.

Will Oakland's Show Biz Saga

Jolson hit the airwaves, he was accused in many quarters, mostly outside the trade, of copycatting the Richman style. This was predicated on the fact that Richman entered radio first and was therefore the originator of that type of chirping; that Jolson had been around for many years before Richman was lost in the "who was first" shuffle.)

The Richman incident was from the horse's mouth. Oakland (ne Herman Hinrichs), who had appeared on the Ed Sullivan show on CBS-TV, left a note to Sullivan and other columnists which was found on his body. It directed that they be notified in the event of his death, and presumably they had also been prepared in advance with "morgue" material.

Wrote Own 'Obit'

Some three years ago, Oakland sent his "obit" to VARIETY. Then 70, he said that "this may give you something to write about when I've crossed over." The competition with Richman was part of the material and is included above for that reason, with no intention to slam Richman since "printing votes" was almost par for the course in newspaper contests of those and prior days. It was part of the promotion buildup.

Oakland plied his checkered trade for nearly half a century in a festoon that covered minstrelsy, radio, vaudeville and cafes. In 1904 he received his honorable discharge from D Troop, 4th U. S. Cavalry, with status of vet of Spanish-American War. He did some singing in the Army with the cavalry band and the 9th Artillery. En route home, he stopped off at St. Louis to o.o. the exposition and particularly the Irish Village where "I was inspired by a man who later became one of the world's greatest singers." Reference was to John McCormack. It was the Irish tenor's voice that decided Oakland on a singing career. He joined the George Primrose Minstrels, staying for three years. One of the troupe was Eddie Leonard. Later he linked up with Lew Dockstader's Minstrels, for two years. While playing Little Rock, Ark., "I happened to hear a chap singing in one of the small theatres. I told Dockstader about him; he caught his act and signed him to open with his show the following year, 1907." The "chap" was Jolson.

Oakland left Dockstader in 1908, jumped to Frisco and was instrumental in having his new contractors sign Al Jolson. Both were in the first show to open in downtown Frisco on Market St., after the great fire. Oakland's contract was limited because he had already signed to go with Cohan & Harris minstrels, which was featuring Honey Boy Evans. But before leaving to join up, he played a few weeks for "Pop" Grauman, father of Sid Grauman (Chinese Theatre, Hollywood) for his first fling at vaude. After winding up with Cohan & Harris, he made vaude his fixture. In his first season he played with Charlie Chaplin before the latter's foray into pictures. Oakland tells the rest colorfully in his "autoblog" (but see Jim Walsh story for conflict in dates, etc.:

Wax Pioneer

"All during these years I was making recordings for Victor, Edison, Columbia and others. I started recording in 1905 and up to 1922. After two years as a single, I formed a quartet and with my voice on top made it a quintet. I had an act called 'A Night at the Club' which I played for four years on the big time. It was an all-singing act with not a word spoken, just a singing dialog. Then I did an Irish act for three years called 'Danny O'Gill, U.S.A.' Along came a Shubert contract for the Winter Garden called 'The Spice of 1922.' We had Valeska Suratt, Adele Rowland, Georgie Price. (The late) Jack Lait wrote some of the material and Will Oakland had some fine work in a half dozen or more scenes. When they went on the road I quit, for by this time I had had enough traveling under my belt.

"I became interested in a night club in uptown New York which was struggling along. I bought out the club at a small figure, assumed their obligations and in one year paid it all off, $28,000. Not knowing much about food business, I went to the best place in town, Tom Healy's at 68th St. and Broadway. I engaged his head waiter, his chef and his steward. Tom Farley, the head waiter, greeted my customers; Stewart Boyd, my chef, prepared the food, and Frank Foy bought the best food and I put on a bang-up show. That was at the Will Oakland Chateau (97th St.).

"The Keith office headlined me in all their metropolitan theatres at a nice sum, $2,500 per, and my club was in full swing at the same time and I appeared there nightly. I had written a song, 'Let's Grow Old Together,' which I used as my theme and which I still use."

Irked at Radio

In this period, Oakland and other singers of his day were thrown for a loss by the recording companies who had become incensed over "new fangled" radio taking over some of their best personalities. As result, they informed all artists who went on the air that they couldn't make any more records. Oakland reasoned that he had cut enough platters between 1905-1922 and threw in with radio. He continued to click and even grabbed a date at the Palladium in London in 1927.

In the early '30s, amid the depression, Oakland saw the handwriting on the nitery wall. Money was so tight that what he called a "cheap outfit" came into being on Broadway selling dollar dinners with no cover charge. "They ruined the business on the Great White Way," Oakland said in his quickie memoirs, "and eventually they went into bankruptcy because that cannot be done legitimately" (meaning those $1 dinners sans the couvert).

He quit the main stem in the hard-and-fast organic sense and opened a club at 11 East 53d St., across from where the Stork is now located. The Chateau International encased a snazzy layout consisting of different national accents on each floor—the top floor was Russian; underneath that, French, then Broadway, etc., for the levels down to the bottom, complete with elevators. There were five shows, five bands, five kitchens.

His opening night was SRO, but the date was March 4, 1933, when Franklin D. Roosevelt, taking over the Presidency, closed down the country's banks for 30 days as his first major act. Oakland didn't shutter. He waited for three months because three banks had his life's fortune. They never reopened. His loss was $300,000. The string had run out after his bonifacing of many spots, including the Terrace at 51st and Broadway; Hunter Island Inn in Pelham, Valley Stream on Long Island, Round Table in Greenwich Village, Elmwood Golf Club in East Paterson, N. J., and the Trocadero in Long Branch, N. J.

Wowed 'Em in Toronto

What prompted Oakland to hand in his lifestory to VARIETY was a review of an oldtimers layout at the Casino Theatre, Toronto, in October of 1952 in which he and tapster Harlan Dixon were raved. Oakland thought the notice might well have included his former eminence as "one of the phonograph's beloved singers—ask any of the old recording companies." The "obit" material was to make sure that fact was never omitted again. As a bow to the idiom of another era, this paper headlined the review, 'Oldtimers Don't Faw Down; They Go Boom in Toronto."

Oakland, whose Thanksgiving dinners for the poor for a period of 10 years almost out-Tammanyed Tammany Hall fetes, died broke. He lived on a pension and Spanish War Vets allowance in a Bloomfield rooming house. A far cry from the days when his Turkey Day dinners numbered around 500 consisting of 100 spreads for the Bowery Mission (probably Father Raftery), 100 for Father Duffy's church on West 42d St., 100 for the police station in his precinct and 200 for a picked number of his customers who distributed them "to the folks they knew worthy." Oakland also put on his regular show for the charity diners.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Hollywood, May 22.

Barring a decimated citrus grove that was replaced by some beautiful buildings along an inland lake in the far, far south and then went into the college degree biz, no university, at least up to the time I fell off following his highly civilized trail, has bogged down the most cultured gent in Hollywood with cerebral salad dressing. I refer, too obviously to hold any suspense, to Herr Dr. Jean Hersholt.

But a committee of 200 of his friends, headed by Y. Frank Freeman, a southern Republican who hopes to wean the you-all vote away from a still smouldering Confederacy, and John K. West, an easterner who went thataway to Smogville-near-the-sea to keep NBC from going the way of all radioactive dust, and exchequered by Sol Lesser, a subdivider near Indio, Calif., threw a party for Jean at the Biltmore Bowl last Wednesday (16).

Well, it wasn't exclusively for Jean. He was the invulnerable come-on. He split the billing with Mount Sinai Hospital, a worthy and hard pressed chophouse that has put up some new buildings and is filling them with newer troubles and treating them with newer drugs, which in the razzle-dazzle of modern medicine cost considerably more than champagne and still seem to leave the hosiptals staggeringly in the red.

This I understand, as a result of having taken a 40c tour through a modern pain penitentiary on Hospital Day, is due to the greed (after a Von Stroheim picture Hersholt starred in years ago) of the working stiffs. More than 70% of a hospital nut goes for labor, an executive in a gray flannel suit informed me. There are two hired hands on the payroll for every paying patient.

Dr. Christian and Hospital Nuts

It's too bad Jean Hersholt could not have got his hands on this problem earlier. I recall about 10 years ago, shortly after he took over running the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences from Walter Wanger, who had held the job for six years, Hersholt made a deal for the Academy with E. R. Squibb & Sons, a drug house, which would net the Academy more than $1,000,000 over a 15-year period. The drug house got title to the Academy Theatre and was to pay $1,500 a week for that alone. A series of half-hour programs starting with "Jezebel," starring Bette Davis, who won the 1938 Academy Award in that picture, and followed by Ginger Rogers in "Kitty Foyle," another Academy Award winner, started the series off with a bang.

Hersholt was driven with a social zeal in those days. He had been one of the prime movers to get aged and sick troupers out of the class of indigents and is still prez of the Motion Picture Country Home, the best monument Hollywood has built to itself to date.

To keep the Academy from going around with its hat in its hand he did most to get the various groups in the Academy to buy the old Marquis Theatre and then talked the picture companies into using it for their previews. Now the Academy Theatre, it also houses a modest museum of the talent side of the industry and I suppose has paid back the 100 bonds, par $1,000, and 100 bonds, par $500, which he raised among the talent groups to buy the house.

Now only two months from his 70th birthday, Hersholt has cut down on his activities, though I suspect he still smokes Country Doctor pipe tobacco. And why not? He gets 10c a pound for every pound sold, and the last time I talked to him on the subject had made $30,000 that year from the noxious weed.

Being married to a Scandinavian, I used to rate quite high on Hersholt's social list, but time and mileage have done a fine job of separating us.

On the committee selected to pay tribute to him I note, however, a few Scandinavians still hanging on, among them Hon. Henrik de Kauffmann, Ambassador of Denmark; Hon. Ryan A. Grut, (That Ryan, where did that come from?) Danish Consul, Celeste Holm, T. R. Knudsen, and Frederick Brisson.

Even some members of the press got billing, notably Army Archerd, Joe Schoenfeld, Aline Mosby, Cobina Wright, Norman Chandler, and of course Lolly, Hedda & Sheilah. Howard Strickling, long an old friend, and Jimmy Starr, who had known Hersholt from his first days at Metro, were also included.

So you see it's quite a list and it doesn't begin to touch the numbers who think of Jean Hersholt as a friend. This in itself calls for singular skill, because there isn't anybody in the world whose orbit of friends runs beyond a dozen.

For a man who started out in Hollywood on $15 a week in silent pictures, and despite his college education, possessed with an accent which was strictly from dialect comedians and who made his greatest reputation in sleazy character portrayals such as in "Greeda" "Tess of the Storm Country," with Mary Pickford; "Don Q," with Douglas Fairbanks; "Stella Dallas," with an all-star cast, and others too hideous to mention (for he played in at least 500 pictures in the eras of silence and sound), it's wonderful to see how his true character finally emerged, for in playing the "Country Doctor," for Hersholt, that was no character part.

Vaseline—The Old Ear Oil

It was lucky for him that Dr. Dafoe and the Dionne Quintuplets involved French Canadians whose English accents could hardly be distinguished from a Dane's. This part gave him a springboard into radio where he played the Country Doctor for so many years to so many millions of ears that the CPAs are still working on the figures. One time they had worked it out that he had a weekly audience of 14,000,000. That must have sold a lot of vaseline.

Though to many people it might be considered irrelevant, I consider it a great tribute to him that he still lives in the same house and with the same wife he started with. He and Via Andersen Hersholt, whom he married in 1914, could never have lasted if their roots didn't go deeper than the well-fertilized soil of Beverly Hills.

Their home is one of the few that can be rated as such in that land of magnificent mansions. The books that line his shelves have in the main been read by them, and I might add, as one author to another, for he has written several himself, been bought by them. The paintings are his selections. He started out in life to be a portrait painter, but he was smart enough to see with the onrush of Eastman Kodak, and notably color films, that portrait painting was soon doomed to be a dead art, so he switched to a live one. In fact, he made his debut before a camera in the first motion picture produced in Denmark. That was in 1906. By now, if the negative hasn't withered away, it should be a collector's item.

In the days when I used to see him a great deal, his closest friends were the late Hugh Walpole, Eric Von Stroheim, Eddie Robinson, Harry Lachmann and Joe Swerling. There were people who found surcease from their trade in older arts.

Sometimes Hersholt after dinner would show some color pictures of trips he had taken, notably to his home land. They were silent versions, but everybody was free to add his dialog as the reels unwound. Comment was not in the syndrome of "coons" and "ahs" but more of a ribald nature, and Hersholt smoking a pipe got more belly-laughs out of his critics than their comment would get if repeated here. But they were nice evenings and if the one at the Biltmore Bowl generated a fraction of the old Hersholt schmaltz, the chicken and peas set could not go home feeling anything but warm, affectionate and uplifted.

He has lived to see a freed Denmark and was knighted by King Christian X in 1946. The only thing I hold against him is that he had to pick July 12 as a day to be born. That's a black day in the lives of us Irishmen.

their approval to the tv-theatre project.

NBC also envisions peddling the "Beanstalk" post-tv legiter as a motion pic, which will mean that scenarist-lyricist Deutsch and songwriter Livingston will be making the complete cycle. Miss Deutsch is author of dozens of Hollywood pix for M-G including "Lili," "I'll Cry Tomorrow, "Glass Slipper" and "National Velvet," and Livingston is composer of all the Disney "Cinderella" music, some of the "Alice in Wonderland" score, all the songs in five Jerry Lewis-Dean Martin pix and the cleffer of the only song in Doris Day's upcoming "Julie" at Metro.

Miss Deutsch said last week that she and Livingston are bringing the original tv musical to NBC as a package, and that the network informed her it is giving the brace the highest price ever paid for creating a spec. Though she would not disclose the contract price, she nonetheless felt that it doesn't compare with motion pix. Yet "the ultimate rewards will be greater through television because we retain control," she said. Not only do she and Livingston own the rights but they will have complete sayso over the tv director and many of the other creative personnel on "Beanstalk."

NBC is dickering with Miss Deutsch and Livingston for two more specs after this, their first collaboration. All arrangements have been made on the first stanza, which might take either the now-regulation 90-minute format or be extended to two hours, with a network eye to repeating it annually as a Thanksgiving feature.

The annual repeat formula, said Miss Deutsch, is the only real resemblance "Beanstalk" bears to "Peter Pan." Otherwise, the 12-song "intimate" musical is more like her "Lili," she felt. Cast has not yet been chosen. Incidentally, "Beanstalk" was not a total collaboration. Livingston was brought in by Miss Deutsch after she had completed both lyrics and book.

TV Webs' Handling of Sponsored News May Become Part of 'Monopoly' Probe

The handling of news on radio and television may shortly make almost as big a noise as the forthcoming news out of Washington pegged on mid-June appearance of the network presidents and other brass before the Magnuson Committee on Interstate & Foreign Commerce.

Allegations concerning suppression and/or slanting of the news on sponsored programs—mostly in tv, it's charged—are shrouded in secrecy and even those not directly concerned are keeping mum for fear they would be linked with what may become a red hot subject. It's known, however, that one high source—so far unnamed—has presented certain charges which have been "corroborated" by a union, the latter also unnamed.

In this tricky "so you won't talk" labyrinth, it has been privately revealed to VARIETY that the union in question is not one normally associated with the radio-tv fields but happens to be the union which some time ago tried to organize the employees of a major U. S. corporation represented as a tv sponsor—but with what success, if any, is not known. Apparently the union met with no success whatever, and hence "took it out" on the company by "affirming" the charges originated by the aforementioned source. It is

Treasure—As Is

Minneapolis, May 29.

Both local daily newspapers, under single ownership, continue to clamp down. Alvin, burlesque house, wasn't permitted to call its star, Evelyn West, "the girl with the $50,000 chest" in ads. The word "chest" was censored out, so that Miss West was "the girl with the $50,000 treasure."

Recently, the papers refused to permit neighborhood Avalon to advertise the French picture "Intimate Relations" under right name, so that it was called "Strange Relations."

Hub Playing It Cool As Cradle for Jazz Bash In Bid for Switch From R. I.

Boston, May 29.

Big pitch for the American Jazz Festival, which makes its last stand at Newport, R. I., July 5-7, was made here this week by the Boston Chamber of Commerce. Discussions are underway between George Wein, director of the festival, and the BCC and a number of spots. Among the latter, Harvard Stadium in Cambridge, the Public Garden and the old Braves Field in Boston were mentioned.

Although loathe to leave Newport because of its international flavor, color and draw, and especially its appeal to the slick and pix mags, writers, critics and photographers, the directors and Louis Lorillard went on record after a succession of incidents that as far as Newport is concerned, they've had it.

The incidents included complaints from neighbors over contemplated use of Belcourt, necessitating playing in Freebody Park; wrangling over payment of extra police and firemen; clashes with the selectmen; and refusal of the R. I. legislature to appropriate $10,000 for the festival.

The board of directors this year changed the name of the bash from

Meantime, the Jefferson album, tagged "The Democratic Party," is being released this week. Set was produced by Marvin Frank, who is partnered with Edwy Lee in the operation of Jefferson. It gives a rundown of party's history in narration and song. Henry Fonda

CAREER OF JAMES DEAN AS ABC-TV FILM SPEC

An addendum to ABC-TV's fall spectacular plans is an hour-long film special reiterating the professional career of the late James Dean. Show will be offered either as an alternate to one of the 12 biggies in the works (for incidental slotting in the web sked) or as a supplement.

Network is figuring on Warner Bros. aid in developing the Dean history. Film company, which had Dean under contract before his fatal auto accident last year, will supply chunks from all his films, right from his screen test through his last feature, "Giant." Web also hopes to line up a kine of Dean's first tv show.

MANY ½-CENTURY CAREER SPANS

By GENE ARNEEL

With dramatic suddenness, in a matter of months, the founding fathers of Hollywood studio film production are calling it a day which, in many instances, means close to half-a-century. Of the original entrepreneurial names it now appears that only Harry and Jack Cohn of Columbia Pictures may remain in studio harness. Lonewolf Samuel Goldwyn at 70, has no intention of retiring. Neither has he set future plans, but he is currently occupying himself with global trips to "sell" his current musical, "Guys and Dolls."

Imminent withdrawal from active roles in the film production industry of Harry and Albert Warner (Jack Warner may continue) and the fade of those veteran film soldiers, Nicholas and Joseph M. Schenck thins the ranks of the pioneers. At Paramount Adolph Zukor is active but 83. Another Par veteran, Cecil B. DeMille is 75.

Harry M. Warner, president of the company that fostered sound (Vitaphone) who has held a major-league rating in the business through the years, and Maj. Albert Warner, top man at the eastern homeoffice, are setting a more leisurely pace for themselves via sale of their stock to the Serge Semenenko group that includes S. H. Fabian. Jack L. Murrow, Friendly Doing Feature Pic On Satchmo's Tour

Feature-length film of Louis Armstrong's just-concluded jazz tour of Europe and a side visit to Africa will be produced by Ed Murrow and Fred W. Friendly and released as a theatrical film in the fall through United Artists. Murrow and Friendly, who head up the CBS-TV "See It Now" unit, have been filming the Armstrong tour and also personally financed his visit of last week to the Gold Coast to the tune of $10,000.

Film will be narrated by Murrow or possibly a combination of Murrow and Armstrong himself. Tour included most western European countries, but the Gold Coast visit, almost an afterthought, came about when Murrow & Friendly offered to pay transportation costs and the musicians' salaries if the Government gave them an exclusive on film rights. Footage is all complete and now will go into the editing stage. Some of the earlier footage of the European portion

Crix Tap 2 Julies—Harris-Redgrave Top Drama, Andrews-Harrison Tuners

Michael Redgrave and Julie Harris have been voted best actor and actress of the 1955-56 Broadway season in VARIETY's 15th annual poll of the New York first-string drama critics.

Redgrave, starred in "Tiger at the Gates," beat out an eight-man field, while Miss Harris, costarring in "The Lark," topped six other choices.

Performer honors in the musical category go to Rex Harrison and Julie Andrews, costarring in "My Fair Lady." It was virtually a clean sweep for both leads. Miss Andrews was in a three-way tie as most promising actress last season.

"Lady" was also involved in four other winning selections. These include best director, Moss Hart; best composer, Frederick Loewe; best lyricist, Alan Jay Lerner, and best costume designer, Cecil Beaton.

Oliver Smith, who blueprinted the sets for "Lady," tied as best scene designer with Jo Mielziner, who was cited for "Lark" and "Most Happy Fella." Beaton, who also got the nod for his "Little Glass Clock" costumes, practically ran away with the votes in his category, while Loewe got in under the wire, nosing out Frank Loesser ("Fella"), who was also in the running as best lyricist. Hart won over four other stagers.

The critics made 10 selections for best supporting actor, with

This, Too, Is Show Biz

New Schenley Building on Park Ave. at 52d St. in New York, on which foundation work is now under way, is treating the passerby to some special sight and sound treatment.

Not only are there the customary peepholes for the inevitable sidewalk superintendents, but microphones are strategically spotted around the scaffolding for a transcribed blow-by-blow description of what's going on. First in English, then in French.

Paid Ad Chides Main St. Biz For Not Aiding Films

Le Roy, Minn., May 29.

When M. S. Orke shuttered his showhouse here, the only one in town, he took a farewell newspaper ad to give 62 of the community's 70 businessmen a verbal lambasting for their failure to cooperate with him in trying to keep the showhouse alive.

Declaring the theatre to have been "a business stimulator" and community asset, he told the businessmen they'll be "sorry."

Orke had operated the theatre for seven months and, he said, had continuously lost money. He recited the things he had done to improve the showhouse and put it on a profitable basis. Thanking the children and adults who had been patrons, he asserted what has happened "is too bad for you who did

$32,000 WINNER NOW A QUIZMASTER

. . . . . Hartford, May 29.

From quiz contestant to quizmaster is the saga of James N. Egan, local lawyer who with his lawyer-brother, walked off with a $32,000 prize on "$64,000 Question." Atty. Egan is the quizmaster of a competition for secondary students which is running Saturday afternoons over WKNB-TV, West Hartford.

The program "World Quiz" is sponsored jointly by the station and the Foreign Policy Association of Hartford. The prize is somewhat smaller than that which Egan won. It is an atlas for the winning school's library.

Political Aspirants Buy Stock Footage To Dress Up TV Pitches

Those television-conscious politicians are becoming more showwise in this Presidential election year. Apart from the straight speechmaking on television, they are planning to stage their pitches somewhat more subtly through the introduction of stock footage to raise their own stock or downgrade their rivals.

The NBC Film Library, comprising some 21,000,000 feet and including all the "March of Time" material, reports sales to the National Committees of both parties plus individual candidates ranging from state to local office-seekers. In the main, the footage purchased is of speeches of candidates in the 1954 and 1952 elections. Material will be used by the candidates and committees on television, integrated into their speeches.

Some candidates will use the footage for purposes of rebuttal, illustrating campaign promises that were unfulfilled by incumbents or showing policy switches by rivals. Other footage has been purchased for "coat-tail" purposes, however, with the officeseeker using a speech by President Eisenhower, for example, to confirm his own beliefs.

Moscow Refutes Todd's Optimism; Soviet Must Control 'War & Peace'

Irving R. Levine, NBC's man in Moscow, reports that the Russians are unlikely to agree to the conditions of Mike Todd concerning a coproduction of Tolstoy's "War and Peace" within the Soviet Union. Communist view is that the classic is to be scripted and produced under Russian judgment and emphasis, the very thing Todd said he didn't want.

Literary Gazette of Moscow, organ of the Soviet Union of Writers, tipped the true attitude. Apparently its the Todd-American Optical system that the Soviet's admire rather than Todd's ideas on story treatment.

Writes Levine: "The comment carried by Literary Gazette, obviously after a careful official weighing of words, indicated precisely

NEGATIVE SIDE OF LECTURE BUSINESS

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Your article on the attractions of the lecture platform should have presented a few negative facts pertaining to the artist-agent relationship.

First. The fees charged by the agents, such as Colston Leigh, are 50% of the take, out of which he pays the artist's transportation cost, but not the hotel, food and taxi bills, etc. Others charge 35-40% if the artist pays for his own transportation. The reason such exorbitant fees are charged is simple. The lecture bureaus can get away with it. Lecturers have no union, such as Equity, to license and supervise agents.

Second. A brochure must be printed at the artist's expense. Depending on the amount of art work, this costs several hundred dollars.

Third. In return for guaranteeing to keep open a large bloc of time for the agent, as long as a year and a half in advance, the artist is practically never promised anything whatever. If bookings come through, fine; if they don't, it's just tough.

Fourth. The majority of agents are only interested in name attractions which will sell themselves. Many agents do no more

Vaudcircus, Teleset Quiz For 26-Yr.-Old's UK Tenter

Glasgow, May 29.

John Herdmeyer, 26-year-old impresario, is mulling an ambitious plan to stage a new type of tent show in Britain on American and Continental lines.

He wants to present leading vaude comedians and circus performers. Gimmick will be a giveaway quiz contest, with tv sets for winners.

Herdmeyer, who also plans a mobile ice rink mounted on a lorry, will plane to Grenoble, France, to inspect a mobile ice rink there. He hopes to tour the smaller British towns which seldom get a chance to see leading shows.

L.V.'s Riviera and Sahara Want Carol in 'Blondes'

Las Vegas, May 29.

Riviera and Sahara Hotels are competing for the purchase of a tabloid "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," with musical's original star, Carol Channing, a part of the deal. Price bids were unavailable, but Miss Channing, who is presently awaiting a Nevada divorce here, confirmed that she has received offers to do the show from each of the two hotels.

Miss Channing also disclosed that once her divorce its final, in a fortnight, she will purchase a manse and make Las Vegas her permanent residence. She said a chronic sinus condition is her reason for forsaking Manhattan for the desert. She added she will commmute between Vegas and Hollywood to fulfill picture commitments under a contract she signed recently with RKO.

French Music In Global Upbeat

French music is on the upbeat all over the world. As a show biz export item, it's running a close second to the Gallic film industry.

Foreign sales of French-made records have increased 10 to 15 times in the past year and the country's pop tunes are winning greater global acceptance. According to Jacques Canetti, pop artists & repertoire chief for the Philips label in France, the new interest in "la chanson francaise," as he calls it, is pegged on the fact that it's different.

"There's too much of a sameness in the songs that are coming from England, Germany and America," he said. Expanding on the U. S. pop tune entries, he added that there's too much emphasis on romance in the lyric. The popular French songs of today, he explained, stress dramatic story lines. "Just plain love stories," he added, "don't work."

Canetti also gives Michel Legrand, French maestro, a lot of credit for making the French music style popular around the world. "Legrand," he said, "gives the French vocalists and songs the instrumental dressing that makes them acceptable to foreign countries."

Columbia Records, Philips' U. S. affiliate, is broadening its Gallic wax kick via Legrand. The young maestro is already the label's top pop album seller and Col is now planning to introduce the new Philip's vocalists in this country in albums with Legrand orch backing. Already on Col's new French line release are packages by Patachou, Juliette Greco, Henri Salvador and Jacqueline Francois.

According to Canetti, Philips is

Gallup Still in Turban

When the Presidential election pollsters were riding higher in the public estimation than they are today—their biggest setback postwar was in 1948 when most of 'em fell on their sliderules as Truman beat Dewey—the word was that "you'd have to get up early in the morning" to fool the samplers. One of the foremost of the polling fraternity, Dr. George Gallup, is pulling a switch on that old wheeze. NBC-TV has Dr. Gallup in tow in the a.m. from here in to supply the public with the latest in "voting trends" leading right up to election time.

Dr. Gallup launched into his punditting on "Today" yesterday (Tues.) and will be on every Tuesday until the finish in November.

Highest Civilian Award to Sarnoff

Washington, May 29.

The Army's exceptional service decoration—its highest civilian decoration—was bestowed on Brig. Gen. David Sarnoff, chairman of the board of RCA, by Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson last Wednesday (23). In only one other instance has it been given, in the case of K. T. Keller, former head of the Chrysler Corp., for his work on guided missiles. Ceremony took place at the Pentagon in the presence of General of the Army George C. Marshall and other top World War II brass.

Citation, read by Army Secretary Wilber M. Brucker, paid tribute to Sarnoff's "noteworthy" contributions to national defense and his "key role in marshalling public opinion and bringing about a better understanding of the reserve component program of the Army."

Sarnoff is chairman of the National Security Training Commission and was a member of the Nelson A. Rockefeller Committee which brought about a Pentagon reorganization at the start of the Eisenhower administration.

Gert Stein Would Have Had Some Picnic-Picnic With These Names-Names

Hollywood, May 29.

Latest brother feud in show biz has been settled on a first-name basis. As a result, there will no longer be any confusion about who is (or isn't) Gonzales-Gonzales.

Ruckus started when Pedro Gonzalez-Gonzalez, who has been working sans first name, discovered that his brother Jose had obtained a role in Sam Katzman's "Cha Cha Cha" film as merely Gonzales-Gonzales. The William Morris office, which handles Pedro, protested to the Alvarado Agency, which handles Jose, and the beef finally was settled.

Ironically, "Cha Cha Cha" has another performer involved in a beef with a brother over using the family name. Damaso Perez Prado, bandleader, better known as just Perez Prado, has filed a $500,000 lawsuit against his brother, Panteleone Perez Prado, for dropping his first name and billing himself on European dates as "King of the Mambo," the title claimed by the man who put the "ugh" in latune music.

Disneyland's $3,000,000

Hollywood, May 29.

Revenue from rides, attractions and concessions, plus daily attendance, are nearly matching early predictions.

Slezak to Film Father's Life

Frankfurt, May 22.

Film actor Walter Slezak is planning to make a film in Europe this summer, based on the life of his late father, Leo Slezak, actor and art collector. Gina Klaus, who wrote the Lilli Palmer film, "Devil in Silk," and Leo Lania, are coauthoring the script.

Title is "Es muss ein Wunderbares sein" (It Must Be a Wonder). Locations will be in Altaussee, Ischl and Rottach.

Mild as Emcee, But Warmly Praised By Ike: That Sums Up Cagney

By HERMAN LOWE

Washington, May 29.

James Cagney's debut as an emcee earned him an unusual tribute last Thursday night (24) from the President of the United States. It was the annual dinner of the White House- Correspondents Assn. to Dwight Eisenhower. At its conclusion, in thanking his hosts and the entertainers, Ike declared:

"In all show business, there is no finer character, no bigger or warmer heart than James Cagney."

The show itself, although sparkling with top names, failed to hit the high peak of some of its predecessors. Brilliant in spots, it didn't make the grade in others.

Standout of the evening was nitery comic Buddy Hackett. He had the audience of over 1,000 newsmen and their guests—mostly top figures in government, congress and the judiciary—in a happy state that ranged from chuckles to guffaws.

Pressing him closely for honors were Nat "King" Cole and Senor Wences.

Cole and his three-man combo were in fine, easy, swingy form. Wences, a veteran of several correspondents' dinners to Presidents, went big, as he always does at these affairs. Female vocalizing was handled by Patti Page, looking very svelte and pretty, and bouncing with jive.

Opened was fast moving—Georgie Tapps and his unit of two men and two girl tapsters. Act got the bill off to a nice start. What was intended as piece de resistence for the big finish was poorly chosen for this type of audience—Dizzy Gillespie and his Orch recently returned from a global tour for the State Department's cultural exchange program. The Gillespie unit, topheavy with brasses, turned out to be hardly what the doctor

Berlin Film on Juve Delinquents Hits Snag

Berlin, May 22.

The local film, "Die Halbstarken," currently in production by Interwest, has encountered unexpected difficulties with local authorities who don't want to back this film as first intended. Cultural officials claim that the pic's producers are not aiming at serving a good purpose but merely have in mind to make money. Producers deny this.

"Die Halbstarken" is the first local film which dedicates itself to the juvenile delinquency theme. Juve gangsterism is one of the big problems in postwar Germany, as it is in most European countries at present. Horst Buchholz, who played to controversial Russian soldier in Helmut Kaeutner's "Himmel Ohne Sterne" (German film withdrawn from the Cannes Festival upon Russian protest), has the leading role in this new film while most of the other roles are played by amateurs.

UNESCO Looksee At World Cinema

Paris, May 29.

Except for Russia, its satellites and Red China, over 70% of the yearly total of films shown in the countries of the world are American, according to a new 300-page publication by UNESCO called "Information on Press, Radio, Film, Television in the World." Compiled by the Dept. of Information of UNESCO, it graphically outlines the film production, attendance and numbers of theatres in over 108 countries. As such, it is a valuable book for members of all branches of the film industry.

Overall figures give worldwide film theatres at about 137,000,000 with an annual patronage of 12,000,000,000 and about 2,500 feature films produced every year. U. S. still leads in the number of films made, plus the yearly filmgoers, with 350 pix and over 2,500,000,000 tabtakers followed by Japan with 302 pix, India with 259 and Hong Kong with 200. Latter fall short in frequentation with Japan third with 820,000,000, India fifth with 750,000,000 and China seventh with 700,000,000.

Via continents, Asia is first in film production with 1,000 pix per year, Western Europe is next with 627, and North America comes in with 350. Top 10, in numbers of filmgoers, are the U. S., Great Britain, Japan, India, West Ger-

Eckstine May Go Thesp As Gob in Italo Film

Glasgow, May 21.

Billy Eckstine, headlining here in vaude at the Empire is mulling a film role in a new Italian pic. Part is that of a sailor aboard a cargo ship, and calls for two songs, but is largely an acting role. If deal is signed, Eckstine would do filming chores on location in the Mediterranean. Pic would also be dubbed in English for British and U. S. markets.

Plan to team Eckstine and Lena Horne in a screen version of "Porgy and Bess" is hanging fire meantime.

Singer has dates lined up at Liverpool, Brighton, Birmingham, Newcastle, Leeds and Cardiff, plus provisional gala bookings in France, Belgium and Holland. He is due to return to the States in late September.

Hollywood, May 29.

A Motion Picture Hall of Fame here and a counterpart museum in New York for the theatre and allied arts are in the drafting stage. Preliminaries were talked out at a meeting of a number of screen personalities and producers at Pickfair. George Murphy was named exec chairman and Jean Hersholt honorary chairman.

Also, a Hall of Fame committee was appointed to spearhead the campaign for the institute, which is designed to dramatize the development of the film industry. As part of the campaign a cavalcade of pic classics, capped by a ball, is set for June 21-24 in Westhampton, L. I., N. Y.

Among those sitting in at the Pickfair session were Mary Pickford and her husband, Charles (Buddy) Rogers, Cecil B. De Mille, George Murphy, Charles Brackett, Richard Barthelmess, Rosalind Russell and Irene Dunne. Earl Blackwell, prez of Celebrity Service, served as spokesman for the group.

Crazy Gang to Make 1st Pic in 16 Years

London, May 22.

The Crazy Gang is to make its first picture for more than 16 years. Outfit will go into production under the Jack Hylton banner shortly after their current revue, "Jokers Wild," winds at the Victoria Palace. It is due to fold June 2, after a run of 888 performances.

Gang's last British pic, "Gasbags," was made in 1940. Since then they have been in almost permanent residence at the Victoria Palace and three successive shows each topped 1,000 performances.

Gate Takes the Veil

Gate Frega, former bass fiddle player, will be ordained a Capuchin priest June 25. He had been studying for the priesthood for the past 10 years at the St. Lawrence Monastery, Beacon, N.Y.

His last pro job was with the Joe Mooney Quartet. He also was sideman with the Joe Haines and Les Brown brchs.

BARE STRIFE OF WARNER CLAN

'We Did and We're Glad'—Distribs

Although always wary of any official Washington investigation, for the professed reason they don't like to see intra-trade problems given a public airing, some production-distribution execs are now at ease over the outcome of the Senate committee hearings last week. They feel their positions concerning production and rentals have been made known to the trade, whereas in past they largely have been disinclined to answer charges made by Abram F. Myers and other exhib leaders. Now that—they've rebutted Myers, they're hopeful of a better understanding with all exhibitors, including the less vocal ones.

Regardless of the validity of this kind of reasoning, relief is generally felt in the trade over the absence of lay press spotlighting of the Senate small-business probe. Drawing public attention to exhib-distrib squabbles is not regarded as a benefit to anyone.

Tight-Lipped on String-Puller; Yates Buyer May Be Etcheverry

Hollywood, May 29.

Identity of the key figures in the move to acquire control of Republic Studios remained a closely guarded secret as the Beverly Hills investment firm of Cantor, Fitzgerald & Co., Inc., began a general examination of the firm's books and records. Step is the first move by the banking firm which has acquired an option to purchase prexy Herbert J. Yates' working control of the Valley lot.

However, B. Gerald Cantor, president of the banking firm, emphasized that although the firm holds the option this does not imply that it will exercise the option solely on its own behalf. Asked about various individuals mentioned as possible purchasers, including shipping magnate Rafael Etcheverry, the banker maintained a tight "no comment" attitude.

Examination of the books is a routine matter, it was understood, aimed at substantiating the $12.50 per share price. Deal's finalization depends upon the outcome of the audit but sources close to the the banking firm were optimistic that it would be completed at a figure around the $10,000,000 mark.

Irving Hoffstein, veepee of the banking firm, said that if outside sources join the deal, they will not be from showbiz. General plan, it's understood, is to build up the studio for both theatrical and tv production, adding stages to accommodate the expected production upsurge.

Boxoffice Marooned

Sal Mineo's lobby appearances at the Victoria, New York, attracted the blue jeans mob to the extent that a platoon of cops was needed to preserve the peace.

This was nifty spotlighting of Mineo's film, "Crime in the Streets" (Allied Artists), except that no one could crash through the crowds to buy tickets.

Sol Siegel Puts His Best Voice Forward on Biz

Sol C. Siegel, now operating on the Metro lot as an independent, has no fears about the film business. "The industry is going through a transitory stage and the turning point only comes with the public," the producer commented in New York last week. "All that is needed to turn the public is two or three good pictures and when they come along there is no problem," he added.

Film-maker believes that operation on the grand scale—top talent all around—is the way to reach that turning point. His new production, "High Society," has a new score by Cole Porter (the first original music for a film from Porter in 11 years), screenplay by John Patrick and for the lead roles Bing Crosby, Grace Kelly, Frank Sinatra and Celeste Holm. "'High Society' may be one of the pictures to help make the turn," Siegel commercialed.

The producer continued: "To me it is not enough to give them (the public) a good picture. You have got to add extra ingredients to attract the public. If you have this magnet—stars, production values, music, etc.—you will get the public to see and talk about your pictures."

What about the high cost of tal-

Jack Cohn Would Like To Step Down as Prez Of PP But That's Unlikely

Jack Cohn, executive vice-president of Columbia Pictures and founder-president of the Motion Pictures Pioneers and the Foundation of the Motion Picture Pioneers, called an emergency meeting of the board for yesterday (Tues.) noon.

On this, the 16th year of the PP, Cohn would like (1) to step down as president (he favors Ned Depinet as his successor, although it appears unlikely that the board will accept his resignation), and (2) likes the idea of possibly inviting the femmes this year, a la the Variety Club powwows.

SPYROS SKOURAS TO SO. AFRICA JUNE 13

Spyros Skouras, president of 20th-Fox, leaves for South Africa on June 13 to wind up the deal for 20th's takeover of the Schlesinger theatre interests.

Indications are that 20th's offer for the purchase of the entire capital stock of African Theatres Limited will be accepted by 100% of the stockholders of the company. Deal will add 140 additional theatres to 20th's holdings in South Africa, Europe, South America, Asia, Australia, and New Zealand. Company currently owns and operates 262 theatres abroad in addition to holding a 20% interest in British Gaumont Theatres.

Zanuck's 20th-Fox Deal Mildly Court-Snagged

Darryl F. Zanuck's new contract as independent producer aligned with 20th-Fox hit a snag in N. Y. Supreme Court yesterday (Tues.) when a group of minority stockholders of 20th raised objections to the pact. Justice Thomas Aurelio gave the dissidents to June 6 to file affidavits stating the specifics of their objections.

Court approval is necessary because of a stockholder action pending against 20th. Based on the merits of the complaints, Justice Aurelio will either okay the Zanuck agreement, which is regarded as likely, or order a full hearing.

Upon court approval, Zanuck is to go on an advisory basis with 20th for a 10-year period beginning July 1 and is to start his indie film-making by Dec. 1.

HARRY GOT $30; JACK MAY STAY

The mystery of what's-going to-be-what and who's-going-to-be-who within Warner Brothers continues without "official" illumination. First disclosed some weeks ago in this journal and since confirmed, though with more loose ends than a lady's permanent wave, the situation as of this week is about as follows:

(1) S. H. (Si) Fabian has been blocked by the Department of Justice from taking over the management helm.

(2) Jack L. Warner is now slated to continue as production head with Nat Lapkin, currently v.p. of Cinerama Productions, in line to run the business end of WB.

(3) The Warner brothers themselves had a falling out and the only way president H. M. Warner could be induced to sell his stock was via an offer exceeding that made to Jack L. and Maj. Albert Warner.

D. of J. was willing to permit Fabian to take over but with such restrictive conditions concerning the Fabian family's theatre holdings that the entire idea has been all but scuttled. Fabian is mulling the possibility of returning to the Federal men with a new set of proposals but his chances of making progress are regarded as slim.

The Serge Semenenko financial group that bought control right along has wanted Jack L. Warner to call the turns at the studio with Fabian as president. That the former will indeed hold the production reins is apparent. Differences among the Warner freres themselves, according to the grapevine, prompted Jack L. Warner to head for the exit sign but with Harry Warner out as president he'll stay on at the Burbank lot.

The Lapkin twist likely will raise some eyebrows for the reason he's a "Fabian man." He's been in on all kinds of deals involving Fabian, thus the scope of his operation far exceeds what's implied by his title of v.p. of C'rama Productions, which is, of course, a division of the Fabian-controlled Stanley Warner.

It was through the business relationships with Fabian that Semenenko, et al., became acquainted with Lapkin and now have sized him up as the man for the top administrative job at WB. Whether he's to be given the title of president hasn't been revealed.

Despite his identification as a

Odds Favor 'No-Decision' by Senate; Hearings Diagnose Film Biz Ills; Exhibs Shock at Personal Jabs

Says John Balaban

Chicago, May 29.

Balaban & Katz topper John Balaban revealed last week that the optimism he had expressed earlier this year regarding product to be released during the first six months of 1956 "has not been justified." "We have been sadly disappointed with three or four pictures everyone thought would be big boxoffice. We can always find reasons for flops after they happen, but the truth of the matter is the public just didn't buy them."

Adds the showman: "This happened even in the lush years when Hollywood was turning out many more pictures than today. But, of course, today, with fewer pictures, the flops hurt more."

No additional Government control or supervision is expected to emerge from the recent hearings in Washington on industry trade practices. On the basis of the opinion of observers, it's expected that the Senate Small Business Subcommittee will again urge the disputing factions of the film biz to make another effort to solve differences via voluntary agreements unhampered by the interference of Federal agencies.

With the testimony of the exhibitors and the distributors now completed, the Senate committee is now awaiting the written comments of the Dept. of Justice which has been blasted by the exhibs as being lax in its enforcement of the consent decrees. After the committee receives the Dept. of Justice's report, it will weigh the voluminous testimony given by all factions in an effort to arrive at a reasonable solution to the welter of charges and counter charges.

The distributor testimony, particularly the statements of Paramount general counsel Louis Phillips and Universal general counsel Adolph Schimel, noticeably upset exhibitor leaders. Allied States Assn. was especially perturbed by

Slow Par Studio Pending Playoff Of New Films

Paramount is considering a production slow-down because of the unusually hefty backlog of unreleased pictures in the vaults. Company has $50,000,000 tied up in new pictures which have yet to be released and the thought is to recoup some of these costs before investing additional money for a continuing full-scale filmmaking program.

There have been no final decisions on the extent of the new production stall, either in terms of number of pictures or time period. However, it's "logical to assume" there will be some cutting of the schedule in view of the strong backlog, according to savvy sources.

It's regarded as obvious that any kind of camera slow-down will mean a commensurate lopping of production personnel at the studio.

Par's releasing schedule is not to be changed, continuing at the rate of 20 to 22 new pictures per year.

Loew's Board Schedules Special Meeting to Mull Chesler's Backlog Bid

Loew's Inc. board of directors will hold a special meeting Monday (4) to reconsider the Lou Chesler-Eliot Hyman offer of $50,000,000 for the outright sale of Metro's pre-1948 backlog. Conclave, it's understood, was called at the instigation of board member Paul Manheim of the Lehman Bros. banking firm.

Biz Continues Spotty; 'Knew Too Much' Still No. 1, 'Searchers' 2d, 'Bhowani' 3d, 'Alexander' 4th

Current session will not reflect the anticipated Memorial Day holiday upbeat except with certain rare exceptions. In fact, many key cities find exhibitors just marking time awaiting the arrival of the holiday and launching of new, stronger product.

"Man Who Knew Too Much" (Par) again is finishing first, some additional new playdates enabling it to stay ahead of some new sock opposition. Close on its heels is "The Searchers" (WB), out for first time to any extent this stanza. This John Wayne starrer is registering plenty of boff to terrific sessions and likely will be heard from much in the future.

"Bhowani Junction" (M-G), another newcomer this stanza, is winding up third although not sock on all engagements. "Alexander the Great" (UA), third last week, still is showing enough to capture fourth money.

"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) is taking over fifth spot while "Oklahoma" (Magna) will be sixth. "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) is winding in seventh position after being high on list for many weeks. "Unidentified Flying Objects" (UA), a fresh entry, is landing eighth place.

"Ladykillers" (Cont) is finishing ninth while "Revolt of Mamie Stover" (20th) is in 10th place. "Tribute to Bad Man" (M-G) and "Gaby," another from same company, are the runner-up pix.

New product is rated spotty currently. "Crime in Streets" (AA) shapes as potentially big with a solid session at the N. Y. Victoria. "The Rack" (M-G) is disappointing this week, with the best stanza a modest one. Others are light to dull. "23 Paces To Baker St." (20th) is much the same category although shaping fair in Washington.

"Great Day in Morning" (RKO) looms drab in Indianapolis. "Forbidden Planet" (M-G) continues big in N. Y. in fourth Globe week. "Bold and Brave" (RKO), fast in Louisville, shapes rousing in N. Y. with vaude.

"Harder They Fall" (Col), torrid in N. Y., looks good in Toronto and fair in Omaha. "While City Sleeps" (RKO), mild in Minneapolis, is slow in N. Y. and Providence.

"Birds and Bees" (Par), good in Frisco, shapes okay in Cincy. "Invasion of Body Snatchers" (AA) is rated fancy in K. C. "Jubal" (Col), okay in Chi, is big in Cincy.

"Maverick Queen" (Rep), is good in K. C. "Man Who Never Was" (20th) looms stout in Chi.

REICH TECHNICALLY NOT EQUAL OF U.S.; WRITERS WORST PROBLEM--SCHWERIN

By HY HOLLINGER

From a technical standpoint the German film industry is "centuries behind" Hollywood, but is working feverishly to replace the equipment which the Russians carted away after the war. By next year, it is hoped, the "most necessary equipment will be available," largely through the efforts of UFA and Bavaria, western Germany's foremost production companies.

These observations were made by Dr. Hermann Schwerin, head of the indie Fonofilm of Berlin on his return to New York from a 17-day visit to Hollywood. Under the sponsorship of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, Dr. Schwerin toured the studios, studied U. S. production techniques, and observed the new developments in widescreen photography. He was most impressed, the German producer said, by the technical excellence of Hollywood motion picture production. A comparison between the U. S. equipment and that currently available in Germany led him to make the "centuries behind" comment relating to production facilities in his own country. He was most lavish in his praise of the courtesies extended to him by the studios and the MPAA.

Unlike many other German producers, Dr. Schwerin is pessimistic about the chances of German films crashing the U. S. market in the near future. While conceding that the breakthrough of one good film might conceivably open the U. S. market, Dr. Schwerin, however, feels that German films have a slim chance unless new writers and directors are developed. The lack of good German writers and directors, he said, is serious, and good scripts are at a premium.

He ruled out dual language coproductions because "finding a script for both mentalities is almost impossible." He emphasized that it's not easy to get into the U. S. market. "If we want to do a picture for the American market, we need the advice of people who know this market," he said. Dr. Schwerin said he had hopes of selling his most recent picture—"Devil in Silk," starring Lilli Palmer—to U. S. distribs, but that his agent, Paul Kohner, was negotiating with a number of American companies for the sale of the remake rights to the film. Dr. Schwerin, a lawyer turned producer, returned to Berlin over the weekend.

Paradise No Eden At B. O.; Chi House Ending 30-Year Run

Chicago, May 29.

Prexy John Balaban revealed that the 3,650-seat Balaban & Katz Paradise theatre, a $1,500,000 showcase when it opened in 1926, will close its doors May 31 and will be torn down to make room for some other project on what is almost an acre of valuable real estate. Balaban would not say what use the land would be put to, but said several possibilities were being considered.

The razing of the Paradise is in line with an ABC-Paramount and Balaban & Katz policy, in force for several years, of ridding the chains of uneconomical operations. Balaban also said: "There are a lot of other theatres in this town, and I mean ones that don't belong to us, that should be closed and

Oriental Couples Pair Of Easy-Term Films

Chicago, May 29.

Current double feature bill at the Loop firstrun Oriental Theatre here, represents an offtrack experiment for the house. The twin bill of "The Man Who Never Was" and "On the Threshold of Space" is the first combo to play here in five years.

The pair are cheaper than the usual major feature played here and house manager Dick Beck says "We think they're both good pictures, but haven't been pushed much. We'd like to see what we can do playing them together."

Perambulating Bob Hope

Having completed "That Certain Feeling" for Paramount, Bob Hope is to be on the hop, as follows:

June 7, m.c. White House Correspondents annual dinner in Washington; next few days, bally rounds for "Feeling;" June 17, NBC-TV spectacular; June 18-26, plugging "Feeling;" June 27, to London for following day's appearance on BBC to launch taped radio series; June 29-30, Berlin Film Festival.

Continuing, July 3-9, back in States for benefit (Cerebral Palsy) openings of "Feeling," including stage appearances with his three children; July 10, shooting New York sequences of "Beau James."

Jap Film Imports From U.S. as Was

Washington, May 29.

The 10 major U.S. film companies will share a quota of 102.09 films, while the 11 indies will whack up a total of 19.91 films in the Japanese import quotas for fiscal year ending March 31, 1957. The 122 total for all U.S. pix is exactly the same as the preceding year, according to Nathan Golden, chief of Motion Picture Products Division of Dept. of Commerce.

The entire world-wide film import quota for Japan is 164, also the same as the preceding year. However, the 42 pix allocated to the non-dollar areas was split up in '55-'56 with 16 for sterling countries and 26 for rest of world. This year entire 42 is allocated to non-dollar countries with no specifications.

In addition to the basic quota, there is a bonus total of 23 films, an increase over last year's 16. These include eight bonus films to be divided among companies importing the best quality films, while exporters of Japanese films will have an additional 15 foreign film allowance. Latter will be allocated on basis of foreign exchange earned. Quota for newsreels has been set at 260 and for short subjects at 100.

The remittance rate for film earnings has been increased. For U.S. pix imported under a percentage rental system, the remittance has been upped to a 25 percent limit as contrasted with last year's 19 percent, when the non-resident's share is not more than 60%. When more than 60%, limit has been raised from 14% to 22%. It is also understood that the Ministry of Finance is considering means by which yen profits presently blocked may be remitted.

YANK STARS DUE AT BERLIN FILM FEST

Berlin, May 29.

A contingent of American film stars, including Gary Cooper, Bob Hope, Dick Powell, June Allyson, and Ginger Rogers, will participate in the sixth international Berlin Film Festival, set for June 22 to July 3. Cables of acceptance have already been received.

Films from 32 nations have been entered in the fete, three more countries than participated last year. Entered as a British production is "The Iron Petticoat," starring Hope and Katherine Hepburn. The Betty Box indie production is scheduled for release by Metro.

The Italian in-person delegation will include Lea Padovani, Silva Pampanini, and Rossana Podesta. Sweden is sending Anita Bjork and Mai Zetterling. Strong representation of actors from France, England, Egypt, Japan, and India is also expected.

Maternati Back, Reveals French Promotion Plans; Gallic Stars Coming Over

The French film industry expects to release at least 12 top pictures in the United States during the next 12 months, according to Joseph Maternati, head of the French Film Office in New York. Promotion of these films, Maternati disclosed, would be backed by a stepped up program of visits to the U. S. by Gallic stars and directors. More stars will be coming over than ever before, Maternati said.

The French Film Office, whose main purpose is to provide information about French films and the French motion picture industry, is presently seeking the "best formula" for the introduction of French pix in the U. S. and to aid the distributors of the French product. Maternati, speaking mainly through his aide Donald LaBadie, said the "formula" would be ready in about a month.

The French Film Office topper, who recently returned to N. Y. from the Cannes Film Festival, said that "dubbing should not be overlooked as a means of promoting" the French films and that a careful study of the dubbing situation would be made. He indicated, however, that dubbing, in the main, would be confined to exploitation-type pix. He noted, too, that a new trend was starting in the French film industry in an effort to invade the U. S. market more fully—the shooting of pictures in both French and English versions. Among upcoming films following this pattern, he said, are "Marie Antoinette," "Notebooks of Major Thompson," "Folies Bergere," and "Hunchback of Notre Dame," the latter via Allied Artists.

At the Cannes Festival, Maternati reported, French industryites, including Jacques Flaud, Robert Cravenne and Raoul Ploquin, met with a number of American indie distributors — Walter Reade Jr., Richard Davis, Ilya Lopert and Ed Harrison—to discuss techniques for boosting Gallic offerings in the U. S. market. Talks were also held with representatives of the Motion Picture Export Assn.

BERTRAM BLOCK AS COLUMBIA ADVISOR

Bertram Block, until recently 20th-Fox's eastern story editor, has joined the Columbia eastern story department, which is headed by Albert Johnson, an advisory capacity. It's to be a part-time operation with Block tipping the company on potential screen material and offering suggestions concerning properties on hand.

Exec, in addition, is now at work writing a play with his wife, Edythe Latham.

William Fadiman, Col staff producer, recently was appointed the company's exec story editor, supervising both the Coast and New York departments.

International Pool Of Talent Needed—Reed

Hollywood, May 29.

An international talent pool to end the present shortage and provide bigger global boxoffice potential was suggested here by British director Sir Carol Reed, here to help spark the preem tonight (Tues.) of Hecht-Lancaster's "Trapeze," which he directed.

"Trapeze," he contended, is an example of the benefits of such a pool. Film stars Gina Lollobrigida, top European star, with Burt Lancaster and Tony Curtis. Reed predicted Miss Lollobrigida will be an important name in this country after the release of the film and thus an important new personality will have been created here. Additionally, the film will stimulate greater interest and returns abroad as a result of her appearance.

Warwick Productions (Chubby Broccoli and Irving Allen) are auditioning for an ad director to operate in Gotham.

The ubiquitous Canadian industrialist, Lou Chesler, has popped up again. His name is being mentioned in connection with option on Herbert J. According to Wall St. sources, Chesler may move into the Rep picture if his $50,000,000 offer for Metro's backlog is not accepted . . . As an economy measure, some theatres are experimenting with a one-show a night policy, starting at 7:30 p.m. or 8 p.m. Saves on help, electricity, it's said . . . Info Agency, rejoices in having killed "Ted Streibert's slow boat to China" (the Cinerama flat-top) plus Senator Johnson's promise of a full-dress investigation of USIA.

Milton Pickman, back from 10 days in London, reportedly has set up coproduction deals for Jerry Wald and himself, as and when the Columbia Pictures' exec veepee branches out on his own. In New York, Stanley Warner's exec veepee Sam Rosen states that "we have always wanted Jerry Wald to do a Cinerama production for us, with a story plot, long before any plans for the WB takeover by SW ever came up."

T'was James P. Clark, prez Nat'l Film Carriers, not Wm. Clark, as reported last week, who was in the forefront in the industry's dual victory in Pennsylvania last week—death of a censorship measure and exemption of film rentals from a new 3% sales tax . . . Arthur Silverstone, 20th's assistant general sales manager, out of Mt. Sinai Hospital and convalescing at home . . . Metro studio publicity topper Howard Strickling returned to the Coast after two weeks of homeoffice confabs . . . Helen Rose, Metro designer, due in N. Y. next week enroute to Europe . . . Sol Siegel returned to the Coast after the sneak preview of "High Society" . . . Abe Platt named coordinator for TOA's convention at the N. Y. Coliseum Sept. 20.

What will probably stand for some time as the longest continuous dolly shot in the history of film-making has been completed by director Jack Sher for "Four Bright Girls" at Universal. Filmed from a helicopter, the shot covers four and one half miles. Sher lensed Vine Street, from Santa Monica Boulevard to Hollywood Boulevard, and then moved along Hollywood to the Chinese Theatre before moving north along the Freeway to the U studio gates. Unusual view of Hollywood will serve as background for the main titles of the film which has a Hollywood setting.

RKO acquired distribution rights to the Charles Martin indie production, "Death of a Scoundrel," starring George Sanders, Yvonne De Carlo and Zsa Zsa Gabor.

Cine-Optics Inc. has been authorized to conduct an entertainment business in New York, with capital stock of 200 shares, no par value. Bilgrey & Levinson, were filing attorneys and Francis Lee Studios Inc. has been authorized to carry on an entertainment business, via the same attorneys.

'PRODUCERS NOT CREATORS'

Producers: Can They Beat Overhead?

[TODAY'S FLIGHT FROM "PLANT"]

A new filmaking concept, characterized by a production company unencumbered by "brick and mortar," appears to be emerging during the current era of the fluctuating film business. The rise of the independent producers, who rely on locations and studio rental space for their film projects, is causing a reappraisal of the general setup in Hollywood. The decrease in the annual film output of the major companies—from an average of 50 to 60 pictures each a year to the present-day 20—is resulting in empty sound stages. One major company, for example, with 30 sound stages, is presently using only four for pictures now in production.

Decrease in the use of Hollywood facilities is also caused by the global outlook in film production, with all the world a stage for American films. The new concept has also made New York City a more important production centre. As recent as five years ago, for example, Hollywood location filming in the N. Y. metropolitan area represented only 13% of the total film production in Gotham with the bulk of the eastern film production being spot commercials and industrial films.

According to statistics compiled by the eastern craft unions, as much as 63% of the total film production in N. Y. is now represented by feature film production. The entry of tv and stage personnel in the theatrical motion picture market is one of reasons for the hike in Gotham-based filmaking.

Such independent production firms as Elia Kazan's Newtown Productions, Hecht-Lancaster, Joseph Mankiewicz's Figaro Inc. and others own no real estate in the form of studio facilities. Newtown and Figaro, in addition, have no facilities on the Coast, basing their headquarters in New York.

For his pictures, Kazan works first on location, then moves to N. Y. for his interior filming. He followed this policy for Spiegel's "On the Waterfront" and is continuing it with "Baby Doll," "A Face in the Crowd" and his upcoming "Mud on the Stars." "Baby Doll" was filmed on location at Benoit, Miss. and completed at the Warner Bros. Brooklyn studio. "A Face in the Crowd" will be shot at Piggott, Ark. and then in N. Y.

Kazan prefers to do his interiors in N. Y. because it allows him to keep an eye on his legit activities. Kazan, too, shows a partiality to legit performers. He has used actors from the N. Y. stage and has gambled on promising newcomers developed at the Actors Studio. He has signed Andy Griffith, of "No Time for Sergeants," for three pictures, Carroll Baker, an Actors Studio product for two, and Eli Wallach, of the N. Y. stage, for two.

Figaro will film "Good Old Charley Faye" in N. Y. and will go to Saigon, Indo-China, for "The Quiet American." Hecht-Lancaster filmed "Trapeze" completely in Paris, and has plans for extensive location shooting on its upcoming films.

With schedules such as these, the indie firms find no reason to accumulate real estate although several, on the basis of their programs are inclined to believe they are approaching major company status.

General Suffering (From Jitters) Hits Shiftable Film Companies

An uneasiness and uncertainty reminiscent of the pre-CinemaScope days is beginning to pervade the offices of the major film companies as a result of recent corporate changes, rumors of others, the sale of pictures to television, and the all-too-general boxoffice slump. The staff layoffs by Warner Bros. and Republic on the Coast and reports of a general streamlining operation at 20th-Fox is arousing some jitters among film company employees. Concern is being particularly expressed by the lower and middle echelon staffers who feel they will be the first to go if the industry embarks on an economy trend.

A degree of uncertainty is present in all levels although, at present, it is tainted with bravado and ironic humor with comments such as "do you know of any jobs?" not being uncommon. Situation is most acute at Warners homeoffice where Coast rumors relating to elimination of the homeoffice and the exchanges is noticeably worrying many longtime employees. Lack of forthright assurance from the Serge Semenenko group, which recently gained control of the company via a buyout of the holdings of Harry, Jack and Albert Warner, is adding to the concern. Fear, too, that the new management, when it moves in, may make operational changes resulting in staff shifts is another factor leading to the general uneasiness.

Not Limited

The nervous feeling is not confined to the companies undergoing corporate upheavals. It is evident, too, in other shops where financial statements and a general appraisal of the industry's immediate future is causing the top brass to survey the manpower needs. At 20th-Fox, Clarence A. Hill, manager of branch operations, is said to be studying company's homeoffice and branch operations from top to bottom in an effort to effect some streamlining. The company has already com-

Superstitious Show Biz

Hollywood, May 29.

Hugh Brown, making his debut as a producer at Paramount with "Three Violent People," has good reason to believe he may be launching an auspicious career. He has lucky charm" director Rudy Mate on the film.

Mate co-directed his first picture, "It Had To Be You," with Don Hartman, who was also making his debut as a director. Latter became Paramount production chief and now heads his own indie firm. Then, Mate directed "The Dark Past," the first feature production venture of Buddy Adler, now 20th-Fox production chief. And Mate also directed "When World's Collide," which marked George Pal's debut at Paramount as a producer to launch a top career in the scientifiction field.

From All Sides Abram F. Myers Much Badgered

Abram F. Myers, general counsel and chairman of the board of Allied States Assn., is caught between two fires. He is one of the main targets of the distributors' attack and is generally regarded as the individual most responsible for bringing about the divorcement of the major film companies from their theatre holdings.

Not generally known, however, is that Myers has been facing some opposition from within the ranks of Allied, particularly among some of the younger exhibitors.

SO SAY AUTHORS AT PARIS MEET

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris, May 29.

Directors, screenwriters and composers are the true creators, not the producers. Films, as an art, need liberty to serve mankind. Too often commercial and other factors limit expression and a free market in ideas. These were some of the highsounding comments at the International Assn. of Film Authors here at the Palais De Chaillot.

Meeting was organized by the Assn. of French Film Authors and underwritten by Unifrance Film, the Gallic governmental organization to hypo French films abroad. Over 100 directors and screenwriters from 30 countries were present.

Though people now actively engaged in film-making in Hollywood were scarce, and the AFFA was "toned" by Leftist members, there was surprisingly little politicking at the meetings. However, some of the resolutions passed might bear on Yankee points of view. It was urged that the association throw its weight to facilitate global distribution of types of films which encountered orthodox distribution channel resistance. To this end encouragement should be accorded film clubs.

Protection of releases from local censorship was advocated, too, though the Leftists made no comment on how this could be accomplished in Communistic nations.

Another stressed objective: World screens should be standardized in size, as this operates to censor (i.e. shut out) many films.

Not dealt with was whether this meant that foreign countries should raise to U. S. screen dimensions or the U. S. cut back to foreign—in many lands, such as Turkey, Yugoslavia and Ireland, exhibition is 50% via 16m.

Gregory's 5-Pic RKO Deal

Hollywood, May 29.

Producer Paul Gregory will make five pictures in the next three years for RKO under terms of a deal wrapped up this week.

First is to be an adaptation of Norman Mailer's "Naked and the Dead." This is the property which was start of the Gregory-William Goldman-A. W. Schwalberg partnership last year but the project never got off the ground. As a result, Goldman and Schwalberg pulled out and have a damage suit pending against the producer.

Major Push on to Lop Costs, Up B.O.; MPAA Sets Special 'Urgency' Unit

Film industry is on the prowl for ways and means of overhauling itself.

The approaches are two: (1), more effective methods of drawing audiences to theatres and (2), expense lopping without reducing efficiency of operation. (Re the latter, the layoffs at various companies are regarded as minor in comparison with the drastic changes in physical makeup of the business being contemplated.)

Major dilemma centers on the fact that the public is still paying tall money for certain pictures and giving others the brush. Perhaps as significant a factor as any is that there's been no talk in the trade of trimming production budgets.

The fault is not on the production end, or, at least, is not thought to be. Films coming out of Hollywood for the most part are commercially satisfactory, according to homeoffice appraisals. Yet, some go into a deep sleep at the boxoffice, or barely reach the breakeven point. Reducing the distribution costs would convert those in the latter category into moneymakers.

Deepen the study further and it's found that precedent-breaking advertising expenditures are paying off; there's no hints of cutting down in this department which, in past times of economic pressure, is usually the first to feel retrenchment.

United Artists is coming out on top, fiscally, with "Alexander the Great." The reviews were far less than 100% flattering, consequently it's felt in the trade that the campaign, however costly (about $1,500,000), paid off. UA now has earmarked $2,000,000 for "Trapeze" bally and Paramount is setting its own house records with the ads for, first, "War and Peace" and later "Ten Commandments."

This mighty-money approach, though, simply can't be undertaken

Heavy on Paris

Hollywood, May 29.

Most concentrated use of foreign locations in Hollywood history will be employed in Paramount's "Funny Face." A total of 42 locations will be lensed in Paris — as backgrounds for a five minute song-and-dance sequence.

Producer Roger Edens, director Stanley Donen and a staff and troupe headed by Audrey Hepburn, Fred Astaire and Kay Thompson fly to Paris this week to lens the footage.

Probe Aftermath: Allied Names Par 'Squeeze' Leader

Washington, May 29.

Paramount Pictures has been singled out by the board of Allied States Assn. as the current leader in the alleged squeeze on small theatreowners. Allied execs did not specify whether this new charge was in retaliation for the rough testimony of Y. Frank Freeman and Louis Philips before the Senate Small Business Commitee last week.

Report of the emergency defense committee of Allied, issued during the three day board meeting here, was as follows:—

"Opinion crystallized to the effect that the most threatening development since the flood of 50% pictures in 1954 is Paramount's policy that all pictures beyond run-of-mill, shall be first exhibited on roadshow, prerelease, merchandising, or special engagements; that on pictures of lesser quality, the terms shall be in excess of those heretofore demanded for pictures of like grade and quality, notwithstanding the steadily declining attendance at the theatres.

"The statement by Louis Phillips, of Paramount, before the Senate Small Business Committee, foreshadows very clearly that the company plans special treatment for its forthcoming productions of 'War and Peace' and 'Ten Commandments.'

"The committee agreed that in its future efforts to inform exhibitors concerning the policies and

L. A.'s Security Bank Back Financing Theatre (& TV) Films After Some Years

Hollywood, May 29.

After several years of inactivity, the Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles is returning to active financing of independent motion picture and television film productions. George Yousling, in charge of the bank's financing department, reported there has been a steady increase in attractive business and the bank is now ready on any deal that looks "sound." Entertainment industry in general, he added, is regarded as "good."

While declining to specify any particular deals, Yousling reported that financing of tv films as well as features has been on the upsurge with even more activity indicated.

Dick Walsh's London Press Talk

Runaway Production Less Acute as Issue Due To Telepix—Sidesteps Todd's Soviet Deal Implications

London, May 29.

The growing trend in Hollywood towards offshore productions and the attitude of studio workers to such projects was discussed at a London press conference last week by Richard Walsh, president of America's International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, who is here as fraternal delegate to the biennial conference of the National Association of Theatrical and Kine Employees.

Walsh said he personally favored this international approach and would always give his blessing, provided there was no question of entering into commitments behind the iron curtain. On that score he declined to comment on the Mike Todd project for co-productions with Soviet Russia. He preferred to wait until he had more information on the Todd deal.

The Hollywood union topper recalled how, with Eric Johnston, he had explained to his members the official union policy on overseas filming and had persuaded them to accept his point of view. At that time there was some unemployment on the Coast and he argued successfully that even productions made overseas eventually provided a measure of employment for their members in America. Now any slack in labor had been more than taken up by the increased volume of telepix production and the employment angle was no longer an issue.

Prior to heading for Edinburgh, where the NATKE convention opens tomorrow (Wed.), Walsh is having a brief stopover at Blackpool where the annual CEA convention opened this week. He also hopes to take a quick look at Projectomatic, which is bringing automation to the projector booth. A demonstration of the system was held in Blackpool yesterday (Mon.)

OMENS FOR SUMMER DANDY: SINDLINGER

Minneapolis, May 29.

There's better cheer in local exhibition circles here since the visit of Al Sindlinger, industry statistician-analyst. Sindlinger was a dispenser of good news for theatreowners at the North Central Allied convention.

He said that the "trend curves" of his statistical service, which spends $865 a day in 39 states to interview people about their moviegoing and to delve into industry statistics, "leads us to the conclusion that this summer will be the greatest movie season in the nation's history."

For the first time in 30 weeks, he told the convention, the overall theatre attendance trend has started upwards, and other favorable signs are being observed.

"Our interviewing the past three weeks shows that there is ever-increasing interest in moviegoing," he said. "The seasonal upswing is here."

The Eddy Duchin Story
(COLOR—C'SCOPE—SONGS)

Tastefully handled film reprise of a real-life tragic show-business career. Good entertainment.

Columbia release of Jerry Wald production. Stars Tyrone Power; features Kim Novak, Rex Thompson, Victoria Shaw, James Whitmore, Shepperd Strudwick, Frieda Inescort, Gloria Holden, Larry Keating. Directed by George Sidney. Screenplay, Samuel Taylor, from Leo Katcher story; camera (Technicolor), Harry Stradling; editors, Viola Lawrence and Jack W. Ogilvie; music, Morris Stoloff; piano recordings, Carmen Cavallaro. Previewed May 23, '56. Running time, 123 MINS.

Eddie Duchin ..... Tyrone Power
Marjorie Oelrichs ..... Kim Novak
Chiquita ..... Victoria Shaw
Lou Sherwood ..... James Whitmore
Peter Duchin (12) ..... Rex Thompson
Peter Duchin (5) ..... Mickey Maga
Mr. Wadsworth ..... Shepperd Strudwick
Mrs. Wadsworth ..... Frieda Inescort
Mrs. Duchin ..... Gloria Holden
Leo Reisman ..... Larry Keating
Mr. Duchin ..... John Mylong
Philip ..... Gregory Gay
Native Boy ..... Warren Hsieh
Piano Tuner ..... Jack Albertson
Doctor ..... Carlyle Mitchell
1st Boy ..... Richard Sternberg
2nd Boy ..... Andy Smith
Nurse ..... Lois Kimbrell

The pitfalls have been averted; Jerry Wald's biopicturing of the career of "10 Magic Fingers" is not all the sorrow and woe that the story of Eddy Duchin might suggest. There's no escaping the fact that the pianist's first wife died shortly after childbirth. And that this was followed 12 years later by Duchin's own death, at the age of 41, as the result of leukemia. All sounds like "agony" material and therefor something of a "problem" entertainment-and money-wise.

But Samuel Taylor plays up humor and romance as well as the inherent hardship in his script and George Sidney's direction, sensitive for the most part, sustains a high dramatic tone with, of course, the abundance of pianistics recorded by Carmen Cavallaro) further lightening the plot matter.

"Duchin Story" falls off to schmaltziness in a few instances (as result of accent on sentimentality) but nonetheless it's a highly satisfactory offering all around.

Key asset is Tyrone Power, in the title role. Only a short memory is required to recall Duchin's affability and the high regard in which he was held by show business. The latter not only for the sympathy concerning the tragedies that befell him, but, as well, the courage he showed in War World II in insisting on combat duty in preference over the entertaining role that was offered him.

Power fits nicely. He's personable and eager as he hits Gotham from pharmaceutical school in Boston bent only on tapping out pop and pseudo-classical rhythms on the 88. He looks like he's genuinely thrilled with the splendors of New York (in color and CinemaScope) and confident that his letter of introduction will land him a job with Leo Reisman's orchestra at the old Central Park Casino.

It's through the intervention of Kim Novak, who shows more and more authority in her picture assignments, that the position in the band is his. The Novak-Power match builds tenderly—there's no hard courtin' or turbulent male-femme back and forth. Carefully established are the backgrounds, she as the high society type and he as the son of a tailor.

Sets and settings make for more plusses. Manhattan of a generation ago is colorfully reproduced and observers needn't be too vintage to go nostalgic over the Casino as it's shown here and the Waldorf's Empire Room at the time Duchin again took the spotlight upon returning from naval service.

Story is given well-rounded development. It has substance as it unreels from the passing of Miss Novak, which meant the end of an ecstatic marriage for Power, the latter's shunning of his surviving son, the war, Power's introduction to and animosity toward the British girl, incongruously named Chiquita, who cares for the boy. And then the friendship that builds between the latter, affectionately played by Rex Thompson, and Power, the second marriage, the shocking news about the leukemia affliction and, finally, Power's passing from the scene in a four-handkerchief climax.

James Whitmore, Shepperd Strudwick, Frieda Inescort, Gloria Holden and Larry Keating all register fine in subsidiary but important parts. Newcomer Victoria Shaw, Power's second wife, comes across with particular effectiveness, showing understanding of the role and executing it with proper feeling.

Sound track, as before noted, is heavy with Cavallaro and this makes for agreeable listening, plus exploitation possibilities via the obvious tieins with the album reprises already on the market. Music supervision, camera work and technical credits match the top-caliber quality of Wald's production. Gene.

Trapeze

Exciting circus drama with big earning potential, plus names of Burt Lancaster, Gina Lollobrigida, Tony Curtis.

Hollywood, May 25.

United Artists release of James Hill (Susan) production. Stars Burt Lancaster, Gina Lollobrigida, Tony Curtis, Katy Jurado, Thomas Gomez; features John Puleo, Minor Watson. Directed by Carol Reed. Screenplay, James R. Webb; adaptation, Liam O'Brien; based on "The Killing Frost" by Max Catto; camera (De Luxe Color), Robert Krasker; editor, Bert Bates; music, Malcolm Arnold, conducted by Muir Mathieson. Previewed May 23, '56. Running time, 106 MINS.

Mike Ribble ..... Burt Lancaster
Tino Orsini ..... Tony Curtis
Lola ..... Gina Lollobrigida
Rosa ..... Katy Jurado
Bouglione ..... Thomas Gomez
Max ..... John Puleo
John Ringling North ..... Minor Watson
Chicki ..... Gerard Landry
Otto ..... Jean-Pierre Kerien
Snake Charmer ..... Sidney James
Circus Family Children ..... Gimma Boys
Paul ..... Gamil Batib
Stefan ..... Pierre Tabard

"Trapeze" is high-flying screen entertainment equipped with everything necessary to attract a socko payoff at the boxoffice. Circus thrills and excitement, a well-handled romantic triangle, and a cast of potent marquee names make it a cinch winner. However, Hecht-Lancaster's Susan Productions and United Artists, the distributor, are insuring the wicket-whirling with a selling campaign designed to get additional dollars, so this release can be figured as one of the year's big money films.

There's an honest sawdust flavor achieved in the production by James Hill, which is exceptionally effective in heightening the entertainment. Cirque d'Hiver, Paris' famed, one-ring circus, provides the authentic, colorful, exciting setting, and nearly all scenes occur within its confines without losing any sense of bigness, so artfully does director Carol Reed stage his show and so expertly does Robert Krasker use his CinemaScope cameras for the De Luxe Color lensing.

The aerial footage literally causes the hair to stand on end as the high flyers go through their death-defying stunts. Reed's direction loads these scenes with story suspense for even more thrill effect, and male stars Burt Lancaster and Tony Curtis simulate the bigtop aristocrats so realistically the danger element reaches the nerve-snapping point.

Gina Lollobrigida, justly famed for her curves, proves she has them in the brief costumes she wears as an ambitious tumbler who tries to move in on the trapeze act being put together by the male leads. Also, she proves she can act, giving the necessary touch of flamboyance to her character without once going overboard, and yet handling the other facets of the role with a fine feel.

Lancaster and Curtis, too, register well in their acting chores. Katy Jurado, also starred, is not used to much story purpose, but lights up what scenes she has. Thomas Gomez, with the same billing, scores well as the circus proprietor, while John Puleo, from the Harmonica Rascals, clicks as a dwarfed circus handyman. Minor Watson gets off John Ringling North well.

The well-plotted James R. Webb script, from Liam O'Brien's adaptation of Max Catto's "The Killing Frost," tells how Curtis, son of an aerialist, comes to Paris to learn from Lancaster, one of the few fliers able to achieve the triple somersault, a feat which had left him crippled. Together, they start to work up an act when the tumbler moves in, using her wiles on the young man but loving the older. Ambition gives way to love at the finale after the thrill-laden climax in which Curtis achieves his "triple" goal.

The production design by Rino Mondellini, photographic effects by Walter Castle, special effects by R. J. Lannan, the sights and sounds of circus life, Faye Alexander's technical advising on the flying sequences, the Malcolm Arnold score conducted by Muir Mathieson, Colasanti's costumes and other behind-camera contributions play important parts in creating an atmosphere of high entertainment. Brog.

The Leather Saint
(V'VISION)

Boxing and religion mix it up in okay programmer.

Hollywood, May 29.

Paramount release of Norman Retchin production. Stars Paul Douglas, John Derek, Jody Lawrance, Cesar Romero; features Ernest Truex, Richard Shannon, Ricky Vera. Directed by Alvin Ganzer. Screenplay, Retchin and Ganzer; camera, Haskell B. Boggs; editor, Floyd Knudtson; music, Irvin Talbot. Previewed May 14, '56. Running time, 84 MINS.

Gus MacAuliffe ..... Paul Douglas
Father Gil Allen ..... John Derek
Pearl Gorman ..... Jody Lawrance
Tony Lorenzo ..... Cesar Romero
Tom Kelly ..... Richard Shannon
Father Ritchie ..... Ernest Truex
Pepito ..... Ricky Vera
Bishop Hardtke ..... Thomas B. Henry
Tiger ..... Lou Nova

Boxing and religion mix it up in "The Leather Saint" and the results can be scored as okay for the general runs. It has neither the quality nor the marquee names to rate top-of-the-bill playdates, but should prove an acceptable lowercase offering.

Film is a theatrical first for the production team of Norman Retchin and Alvin Ganzer, the former producing and the latter directing from their own screen story. They earn a fair rating for the dual functions, failing to go higher because of slow pacing and too much talk in the first half of the footage. However, the religioso theme is well-managed, and the trouping all it should be to get the picture by.

John Derek pleases in the title role, playing a young Episcopalian minister who, on Saturday nights, doffs his clergy robes for boxing gloves to raise money for a group of kid polio victims in his parish. Paul Douglas does well as the manager who little suspects his fighter's real profession. Scoring strongly is Jody Lawrance as a girl on the way to being a dipso who is straightened out by the leather saint. Cesar Romero, fight promoter, is okay, as are Ernest Truex, playing rather broadly a priest in Derek's parish, Richard Shannon, gymnasium director, Ricky Vera and others.

Production polish is not lavish, but values are adequate for the story and good use is made of assorted Southern California settings to help budget expenditures. Haskell B. Boggs' photography in black-and-white VistaVision didn't always show up well at the preview. Other technical assists come off acceptably. Brog.

With the 12th anniversary of the Normandy Invasion looming, "D-Day, the Sixth of June" will serve as a strong, and grim to some, reminder of that momentous World War II date. Along with the account of the significant historical event, the picture spins an extremely moving wartime love story, distinctively done by a finely performing cast. The key de luxers should find this an excellent entry, and there's mass appeal too, if well-exploited, with star names of marquee merit to help the overall grossing outlook.

While the atmosphere and threat of war are always present in the topnotch Charles Brackett production, it isn't until near the end that actual fighting is shown in all of its frightening detail. Footage opens with the sailing of the forerunners of the invasion fleet, then sets its characters and tells its story through the medium of two flashbacks, skillfully handled in the firstrate scripting by Ivan Moffat and Harry Brown from the Lionel Shapiro novel, before coming back to the June 6 date and the days immediately following. These battle sequences, as well as those of war-battered England, the setting for most of the story, are full of realism as lensed in CinemaScope and De Luxe Color by Lee Garmes.

Henry Koster's direction displays extreme understanding in bringing out the moving dramatic aspects of the story and characters. There are a number of fine masculine performances by such as Robert Taylor, Richard Todd and Edmond O'Brien, the male stars, all important contributions to the story-telling, but it remains for the sensitive, tremendously compelling, work by Dana Wynter to give the real point to the drama and make the love story a valid thing.

The plot, simply, tells of an English girl, virtually committed romantically to a British soldier, who meets and falls deeply in love with a married American officer, and how this triangle is worked out in the overwhelming upset of war. There's a bitterly ironic note to the ending, beautifully done by Miss Wynter and Taylor after Todd's tragic death on the beaches of Normandy.

Taylor is especially effective as the American officer and Todd is splendid as the British officer. O'Brien creates a sock portrayal of a rank-bucking American officer who eventually cracks under the force of his own drive and the strain of war. John Williams, an embittered oldline brigadier who resents being sidetracked in this war, as well as Jerry Paris, Robert Gist, Richard Stapely, Ross Elliott, Alex Finlayson, Dabbs Greer, Thomas B. Henry, Damien O'Flynn, Queenie Leonard, Chet Marshall and others add much to the footage, whether in featured spots or bits.

Special photographic effects by Ray Kellogg, the editing by William Mace, the sounds of war and romance as recorded by Eugene Grossman and Harry M. Leonard, the Lyn Murray music, conducted by Lionel Newman, the art direction by Lyle R. Wheeler and Lewis H. Creber are among the first line technical assists helping to put over the drama. Brog.

Wicked as They Come (BRITISH)

Entertaining yarn starring Arlene Dahl as ruthless adventuress, with Herbert Marshall as chief victim; average b.o.

London, May 22.

Columbia production and release. Stars Arlene Dahl, Phil Carey, Herbert Marshall. Directed by Ken Hughes. Screenplay, Ken Hughes, Robert Westerby and Sigmund Miller from novel, "Portrait in Smoke," by Bill Ballington; camera, Basil Emmott; editor, Max Benedict; music, Malcolm Arnold. At Leicester Square Theatre, London. Running time, 94 MINS.

Kathy Allen ..... Arlene Dahl
Tim O'Bannion ..... Phil Carey
Stephen Collins ..... Herbert Marshall
Larry Buckhan ..... Michael Goodliffe
Sam Lewis ..... David Kossoff
Mike Lewis ..... Marvin Kane
Frank Allen ..... Sidney James
Chuck ..... Gilbert Winfield
Willie ..... Patrick Allen
John Bowling ..... Ralph Truman

Good average entertainment value is provided by this Anglo-American story of a golddigger's rise to fortune. Ruthless ambition and an anti-social conscience are shown as achieving things up to a point.

Set against a background of New York, London and Paris, pic supplies sufficient variation to maintain interest, but its novelettish origin is responsible for many improbabilities, mainly the adaptability of a girl from the East Side attaining a post of importance in a big business organization despite lack of education.

Suffering from the aftermath of a sexual assault in adolescence, a factory girl hits back by making use of any male whom she can use as a ladder to improve her conditions. She immediately brushes off her first elderly victim after he has faked her winning of a beauty contest, and from then on during the ensuing prize winning European trip she exchanges one influential man after another until she weds the top executive and lands in the death cell of a Paris jail after shooting him.

Arlene Dahl looks sufficiently glamorous in an aloof manner to make her numerous conquests plausible. The stepping stones to her goal, in varying age groups, are all well depicted by Phil Carey, Herbert Marshall, David Kossoff, Ralph Truman and Michael Goodliffe. The only other femme role is played with quiet distinction by Faith Brook as the shrewd wife who bribes her rival.

Little stress is laid on the contrasting locales in the three capitals. Clem.

Sounds good—Deborah Kerr pitted against William Holden in romantic combat and conflict on New Calendonia Island against a background of World War II. As a Marine Corps colonel, he's arrogant and brutally forceful. It's only a matter of time before she, as a Red Cross worker, succumbs.

Holden and Miss Kerr have name weight which, together with the bally buildup, ought to assure good openings. But the story doesn't stand up. Taking spurious turns and inviting neither audience participation nor sympathy for any of its characters.

Entry is a shaky one for the long haul.

Locationed on the Virgin Islands, William Perlberg's production, as directed by Seaton, provides likely back-echelon war scenes. The hospitalized wounded, the R. C. gals at their chores, white crosses rising from the cemetery, the general activity between skirmishes with the enemy—these properly convey historical time and place.

But the script by Seaton, from the novel by Lucy Herndon Crockett, comes off as if authored by a soap opera practitioner trying for a follow-up to "From Here to Eternity." Seaton's a good man with the pen as attested by previous credits but this time out he seems to have lost some balance.

Miss Kerr, war widow, is in the fighting zone largely for the purpose of learning how her husband, who had been a lieutenant, had handled himself in battle. Comes the encounter with Holden, who's an illogical personality, and this leaves her pregnant. She figures on marriage but accidentally comes upon the news that Holden already is maritally tied up. His wife, though, who had been an alcoholic, subsequently dies. Miss Kerr loses the baby as her suicide attempt is thwarted by Holden. Latter goes off to battle, is wounded and, comatose, murmers "Forgive me, forgive me." Final fade.

In contrast with the false ring of the plot twists, some individual scenes have impact and intermittent stretches of dialog have true heart. Unfortunate that the basic structure wasn't architectured along more sincere lines.

Holden, Miss Kerr, Thelma Ritter as head of the Red Cross contingent, Dewey Martin as a marine who is killed in action and other members of the cast can't overcome the unconvincing script. Technical credits are good and Victor Young's music is a strong contribution. VistaVision photography is in black and white, which helps in achieving the appropriately grim atmosphere. Gene.

NORTH'S EXHIBS DESEGREGATE

Newsreels as Drive-In Stagewait

[Helps Sell Franks, Pop and Popcorn]

Chicago, May 29.

Other factors adverse to newsreels prosperity (see adjoining story in Indianapolis Speedway coverage) are these:

Circuits once had a "loyalty" to the reel of their parent company (hence Balaban & Katz favored Paramount News) but now there is neither parent company nor loyalty.

Significantly Metro News-of-The-Day and Fox Movietone have turned to the production of footage for television station use.

The one favorable omen the theatrical newsreelers qualifies as a left-handed compliment: drive-in operators like them because customers feel free to go out to the concession and re-stock on hotdogs, pop and popcorn.

Is Berger a Millionaire?

Bill Gehring's Crack Echoes In Minneapolis Film Circles

Minneapolis, May 29.

The boys around here are wondering if W. C. Gehring, 20th-Fox executive vice president, will be invited again to address a North Central Allied convention.

Mincing no words, Gehring in his address to the convention declared that Federal industry control, advocated by NCA president Bennie Berger, would be a "calamity" and prove ruinous to the industry.

Also, the 20th veepee, in his talk, pointed out that from the industry's start exhibitors have been squawking about film rentals being "too high" and that those who always cried the loudest and still are wailing "have become the richest." Berger recently refused to deny he's a millionaire.

Continuing to hit out from the shoulder, Gehring handed a verbal spanking to those exhibitors who are failing to give their theatres 'personalized attention" or to maintain their houses in the best possible physical shape, but who stay at home watching television, interrupting their video siestas only long enough to telephone the box-office for the grosses.

However, at the concluding session, the convention adopted a resolution thanking Gehring for coming to the meeting to speak. This despite the verbal scoldings.

Allied Artists Report Shows Gross Up 34% But Net Off 43%

Allied Artists increased its gross income for a 39-week period ended March 31, 1956, by 34% over corresponding period for last year, it is stated in report issued by prexy Steve Broidy. Net profit before Federal income taxes, however, was 43% down from last year.

Gross income amounted to $11,911,079, according to Broidy, as against last year's $9,134,458 for similar period. Company hit a net profit before taxes of $389,380 for the 39 weeks, compared to last year's $684,868.

Tax reserve for current 39-week period was $201,000, as against reserve of $244,000 for last year's corresponding period, Broidy reported. This gives company a net profit of $179,380 for the 1956 period, compared to $440,868 for last year.

Figures for 1955 period, Broidy said, included approximately $527,000 from sale of old negatives, while no income of this nature was received in 1956 period.

Reduced net this year, according to a studio spokesman, was due to increased expenses in building up a sales organization here and abroad and costs involved in higher budgetted pictures.

At directorate meeting yesterday, routine biz matters only were considered. Attending were chairman W. Ray Johnston, prexy Broidy, exec veepee - treasurer George D. Burrows, veepees G. Ralph Branton and Harold Mirisch; Howard Stebbins, all of L. A. Veepee Edward Morey, N. Y., and Herman Rifkin, Boston, also were present.

BRYNA (KIRK DOUGLAS) SET FOR 3 PRONTO

Hollywood, May 29.

Kirk Douglas' Bryna Productions has closed a second one-picture deal with Metro and borrowed Eleanor Parker to star in "Lizzie," based on Shirley Jackson's novel, "Bird's Nest." Rolls Aug. 1. Script was purchased from Ray Stark who previously had planned a legit version.

This is third Bryna property in as many months as "Spring Reunion," Betty Hutton-Dana Andrews starrer is set for June 4 for United Artists. "King Kelly," starring Douglas himself, starts July 23 for Metro.

Eye Buena Vista As Distribs' Way Of Future Life

Buena Vista Film Distributing Co., subsidiary of Walt Disney Productions headed by Leo Samuels as president-general manager and Irving Ludwig as sales chief, is being given a new onceover by major company execs as the possible key to the way of cutting film sales and distribution costs.

Formed five years ago, BV has since handled the release of all Disney feature product following the producer's split with RKO. While the industry generally figures on distribution as being a 30% cost factor—that's 30% of a film's domestic gross being charged to its sale and handling—BV has this item trimmed to an estimated 12½%.

NO FUSS AT ALL, BUT DIXIE AS IS

Knotty problem of desegregation still awaits solution on a political level in many U. S. communities, but show business in most cases has quietly met the issue in its stride without fanfare or disorder. Leading the way in recent years were Washington theatres, as well as houses in such cities as Wilmington, Columbus and Philadelphia.

Open door policy for Negroes in Washington film theatres was preceded by a battle between the legit National Theatre there and Actors Equity whether the color line should be abolished at that house. The National, which played legit roadshows, resisted Equity's demands for no restrictions on audiences.

But while the National-Equity controversy boiled, Washington film houses lowered the bars without any formal announcement. Since that precedent-making step no D. C. exhibitors can be found who will say that appearance of Negroes in their audiences has caused any economic or social friction. Patrons apparently were undisturbed by the change. However, "All-Negro" theatres are still operating—and doing well in Washington.

On the other hand, the "no color line" policy has not been entirely adopted in Baltimore which has several "first run" theatres exclusively for Negroes. The welcome sign for sepia customers isn't so prominently indicated in most other Baltimore houses.

Wilmington an Example

In contrast to the Maryland metropolis' attitude is the situation in nearby Wilmington, Del., which can be considered as a prime example of how desegregation works. When pressure was exerted to lower the "No Negro" bars in Wilmington film theatres—long before the U. S. Supreme Court decision

New writers and their assignments are: Herb Meadow, "The World and Little Willie"; Charles Hoffman, "Wind From Suva"; Jerome Ross, "Doll Face"; Paul Monash, "The Badge of Evil"; Lawrence Roman, "The Man Who Rocked the Boat," and George Zuckerman, "Pylon."

Newsreels Crowd Indianapolis; Marked Fear of TV Competition

Chicago, May 29.

Chicago theatrical newsreel crews from the five Chicago branches head for Indianapolis today (Tues.) to lens the 500-mile race to be held there tomorrow (Wed.), for them the major news event of the year. "Red" Febinger and "Shorty" Richards from Paramount News, Floyd Trayhnan, U-I; Tony Caputo, Pathe; Emil Montemurro and Fort Guerin, Fox Movietone, and Ronnie and Frank Koza, News of the Day, all from Chicago, will be at the annual auto classic.

Each crew will have approximately four cameras each, spotted at strategic vantage points at the Indianapolis track, vantage points being the start (and finish) line, and turns where most crackups occur. As one cameraman put it, "the editors in New York want blood." The sanguinity of the attraction still seems to be the major spectator draw, too, he said.

Like other newsmen, as well as distributors and exhibitors of theatrical pix, the newsreelers are facing ever stiffening competion from the teevee cameras. Although theatrical cameras get space priority at such events as the 500-mile race and the Kentucky Derby, they often have to struggle with the video newsmen on other assignments for position. To add insult to injury, the teevee men are geared for a daily newsreel operation, giving them a chance to "scoop" the theatrical competition, whereas the theatrical newsreels are only prepared twice weekly.

Another fact rubbing some of the lustre off the once-proud newsreelers is the decline of the newsreel's importance to local exhibs. In many cases, particularly in the outlying runs, the newsreel has been abandoned entirely because of increased running times of feature films (with double bills often as long as four hours), and the higher rentals demanded for features causing cost-conscious management to junk the newsreel.

The trade name Isodine is listed as copyrighted by the Isodine Pharmacal Corp., Dover, Del., apparently a division of International Latex.

The antiseptic, which will hit the market shortly, is the first of a new series of products by International Latex. SW's interest in the pharmaceutical field is pointed up by the presence on the board of directors of the theatre chain of Charles F. McKhann, specialist in medical research, pharmaceutical consultant, and chairman of the executive committee of Zonite Products Corp.

Academy Still Lacks Coin to Speed Saving Of Old Paper Prints

Hollywood, May 29.

Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences is facing time and money deadlines in its project to reclaim to celluloid the Library of Congress collection of paper print films, prexy George Seaton disclosed here. About 200,000 feet has been reclaimed thus far, but the balance of 2,000,000 feet must be completed within five years or it will disintegrate forever.

Footage, originally accepted as evidence of copyright, is stored in the vaults of the Library of Congress and consists of unprojectable paper prints of the first motion pictures, showing important events and personalities between the years 1894 and 1912. Reclamation process was developed by Komp N. Niver of Removare Productions, who has been transferring the original images from paper onto motion picture film that can be projected since 1953.

Seaton declared that the Academy, a non-profit outfit, financed the initial work but must now raise coin from outside sources to continue the reclamation project at the present speed.

Louis Pesce Wins Post

Albany, May 29.

The reshaping of supervisory personnel and administrative machinery within the State Education Dept. of Motion Picture took a further step Friday (25) when Louis M. Pesce was made assistant director as of June 7.

Pesce qualified for the No. 2 post in a recent competitive examination, confined to Division film reviewers. The top job, now open, is to be filled by a civil service examination set for July 7.

HOLLYWOOD CLERGY

(Reprinted From the Pilot, Boston Church Paper)

A recent headline in VARIETY, leading weekly newspaper for showpeople, announced that "Another Catholic in Film Becomes an Episcopalian." The story went on to point out that a new film, "The Leather Saint," began as the story of a priest who, to raise funds for his parish, returns incognito to the ring, where he had formerly been a boxer. A romantic note is struck when a girl, not knowing his identity, is attracted to him since, it appears, he reminds her of a lad she once knew. VARIETY went on to say that "Catholic authorities," when consulted, objected to the "romantic flashes" and as a result the Catholic priest was promptly made an Episcopalian.

For our part we could not help feeling that this was making a big stew out of some very small potatoes. Surely it would be possible, with all the brains in Hollywood, to treat this theme and its "romantic flashes" with restraint and dignity which no mature person would find offensive. Instead, a total switch is made which gives the impression of great Catholic pressure, supersensitivity, and injured innocence. This kind of publicity probably does more damage than the original problem it sets out to solve. Catholics are not asking Hollywood for special Catholic propaganda—the most we seek is an authentic representation of Catholic life and practice, without ridiculing religious values or making light of serious spiritual realities. We are not so thin-skinned that we cannot see some of our own foibles and we can even understand a sympathetic and realistic view of these.

Unhappily, we have had many cases similar to this one in the past where the movie people have gone to great lengths to point out that the clergy or the nuns involved in the picture were not Catholic. In most cases they turn out to be Episcopalians—and for some reason this seems to allow the film folk to ridicule them or make scoundrels of them. Is Episcopalian interest less effective than Catholic interest in Hollywood? Is it open season on Episcopalian religious when it is forbidden to take pot shots at Catholics?

Surely this business of substituting one religious group for another when the script gets rough is no answer to the problem. If the scenario is one that exposes to ridicule realities it needs to be rewritten or rejected; if it is of anti-religious flavor, in any way, it has no place in our motion picture houses. There are already too many forces at work breaking down the moral fibre of our society without encouraging films that make light of religion or are offensive to its organization.

Hollywood has interested itself in the life of clergy and of nuns many times in past years—recognizing perhaps more the dramatic than the religious values involved. The product has not always been notably impressive but it has seldom been offensive. This much is to the good, but it hardly scratches the surface. The young, handsome, ballad-singing priest, for example, may be pleasant to see in the films, but he simply doesn't exist—in those dimensions—in real life. There is room for realistic, authentic, and genuinely sympathetic portrayal of religious characters in Hollywood films and we can't help believing that the American public is mature enough to accept the real thing. The real thing, in the popular language, has had it!

'Never Was'-'Space' Big $29,000, Chi; 'Rock'-'Blood' Fair 9G, 'Searchers' Slow 31G, 'Knew Much' 20G, Both 2d

Chicago, May 29.

Boxoffice pace continues to lag, with few exceptions, and exhibitors blame spring, product and possibly the national economic slowdown.

However, "Man Who Never Was" plus "On Threshold of Space" looks nifty $29,000 or better in first week at the Oriental. Also new, "Rock Around Clock" and "Hot Blood" double bill shapes fair $9,000 at Grand. "Untouched" and "Fury in Paradise" dualer should do okay $5,000 at the Monroe.

"The Searchers" is holding well in second round at the Chicago. "The Man Who Knew Too Much" still is lusty in same week at United Artists. "Helen of Troy" is still disappointing in second at the State-Lake. "Tribute to Bad Man" and "Apache Ambush" duo continues dull in second Roosevelt frame. "Madame Butterfly" is hefty in second session at the World.

"Jubal" is rated okay in third stanza at the Woods. "Meet Me in Las Vegas" is still strong in the sixth frame at the Loop. "Oklahoma" stays solid in 22d week at McVickers. "Cinerama Holiday" gets a tourist-boosted lease on life in 50th week at the Palace.

Estimates For This Week

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 98-$1.25) —"Searchers" (WB) (2d wk). Sluggish $31,000. Last week, $48,000.

Grand (Indie) (1,200; 93-$1.25)— "Rock Around Clock" (Col) and "Hot Blood' (Col). Fair $9,000. Last week, "Slightly Scarlet" (RKO) and "Texas Lady" (RKO), $6,000.

Loop (Telem't) (606; 90-$1.25)— "Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G)

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

'Alex' Great 18G, Pitt; Stewart 13G

Pittsburgh, May 29.

Nothing up to expectations this week, and it may be because everybody around these parts is going nuts over the amazing Pirates baseball team. Holiday may lift the fog a bit but the team's home for a pair of games and that'll hurt the afternoon. "Alexander the Great" at Penn shapes great and doing enough to hold. "23 Paces to Baker Street" is going nowhere at Harris. Second stanza of "Man Who Knew Too Much" shapes steady at Stanley and "Ladykillers" continues to shape up as a long-runner at the Guild. "Seven Wonders of World" looms sock in sixth week at Warner.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea), (1,700; 65-$1)— "Tap Roots" (U) and "Kansas Raiders" (U) (reissues). Just in for 5 days and probably won't better $3,000 on abbreviated run. Last week, "Revolt Mamie Stover" (20th), $7,000.

Guild (Green) (500; 65-$1)— "Ladykillers" (Cont) (4th wk). Memorial Day should enable Alec Guinness starrer to hit virtually same as last week or sock $4,000. Holds, natch!

Harris (Harris) (2,165; 65-$1)— "23 Paces Baker Street" (20th). Crix all like it but nobody's going. Depressing $5,500. Last week, "Hilda Crane" (20th), $4,000.

Penn (UA) (3,300; 75-$1.25)— "Alexander the Great" (UA). This one was figured to do much better but $18,000, is still big for current session. Will try a second stanza. Last week, "Gaby" (M-G) and "Wedding at Monaco" (M-G), $8,500.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (900; 65-$1)— "Doctor at Sea" (Rep) (2d wk). Modest $2,000 on the windup. Last week, $2,500.

Stanley (SW) (3,800; 75-$1.25)— "Man Who Knew Too Much" (Par) (2d wk). Getting 9 days on h.o., through the holiday, and should top fancy $13,000 for this James Stewart pic. Last week, $15,500.

Warner (SW) (1,365; $1.25-$2.40) —"Seven Wonders of World" (Indie) (6th wk). Sock $21,000. Last week, $20,000.

D.C. Limps Along But 'Searchers' Great 20G, 'Bhowani' Rousing 28G

Washington, May 29.

Main stem b.o. continues to limp along in recent weeks. Even six new entries will not help. One standout of current session is "Bhowani Junction," which is lively, but not sock at Loew's Capitol. Other two Loew houses, Palace and Columbia, are less fortunate with two mild newcomers, "23 Paces to Baker Street" and "Day of Fury," respectively. "Gaby" at Loperts Playhouse is sluggish. However, "The Searchers" is smash in two houses. "Cinerama Holiday" continues fine as it enters the ninth month at the Warner.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (SW) (1,490; 75-$1.10)—"The Searchers" (WB). Heading for solid $7,000 or over. Last week, "Distant Drums" (WB) and "Dallas" (WB) (reissues), $4,000.

Capitol (Loew) (3,434; 85-$1.25) —"Bhowani Junction' (M-G). Lively $28,000, but not up to hopes. Stays on. Last week, "Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G) (3d wk), $11,000 in 6 days.

Columbia (Loew) (1,174; 70-95) —"Day of Fury" (UA). Weak $5,000. Last week, "Tribute To Bad Man" (M-G) plus "Wedding in Monaco" (M-G) (2d wk), $5,500 in 6 days.

Dupont (Lopert) (372; 90-$1.25) —"Richard III" (Indie) (2d run) (2d wk). Slow $3,500 after $4,000 last week.

Keith's (RKO) (1,939; 70-95)— "Please Murder Me" (Indie) and "Star in Dust" (U). Dull $5,000 or less. Last week, "Threshold of Space" (20th), $6,500.

Metropolitan (SW) (1,200; 75-$1.10) — "The Searchers" (WB). Great $13,000 or close. Last week, "Distant Drums" (WB) and "Dallas" (WB) (reissues), $7,000.

Palace (Loew) (2,360; 70-95)— "23 Paces to Baker Street' (20th). Mild $13,000, despite favorable press. Last week, "Revolt Mamie Stover" (20th) (2d wk), oke $9,000 in six days.

Playhouse (Lopert) (456; 75-$1.10)—"Gaby" (M-G). Fair $6,000. Holds. Last week, "Patterns" (UA) (2d wk), $3,000.

Warner (SW) (1,300; $1.20-$2.40) —"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (33d wk). Holiday upping this to fine $16,000 after $15,000 last week.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (600; 90-$1.25) —"Picnic" (Col) (15th wk). Nears end of fourth month with firm $6,000 after neat $7,000. Stays.

'KNEW TOO MUCH' BIG $11,000 PACES OMAHA

Omaha, May 29.

Biz remains in doldrums this week at downtown first runs and the horse races at Ak-Sar-Ben aren't helping matters. However, "Man Who Knew Too Much" is rated big at the Orpheum and looms as the first moneymaker there in a month. "Last Hunt" is solid at the State. "Harder They Fall" is fair at the Brandeis in second week.

Estimates for This Week

Brandeis (RKO) (1,000; 75-$1)— "Harder They Fall" (Col) and "Over-Exposed" (Col) (2d wk). Fair $2,000. Last week, $3,100.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,000; 50-75) — "Creature Walks Among Us" (U) and "Price of Fear" (U). Very modest $3,500. Last week, "Tribute to Bad Man" (M-G) and "Please Murder Me" (Indie), $4,500 in 6 days.

State (Goldberg) (860; 70-90) — "Last Hunt" (M-G). Lively $7,000. Last week, "Meet Me in Las Vegas" (M-G) (3d wk), $3,900.

WAYNE SMASH $13,000, PORT.; 'KNEW MUCH' 10G

Portland, Ore., May 29.

Biz is still sluggish but there are some bright spots. Several strong newcomers this round are topped by "The Searchers" socko at the Broadway. "The Man Who Knew Too Much" at Paramount shapes good. "Mamie Stover" continues stout for third stanza at the Fox.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (1,875; 90-$1.25)—"Searchers" (WB). Smash $13,000. Last week, "Great Day In Morning" (RKO) and "Cash On Delivery" (RKO), $4,600.

Fox (Evergreen) (1,836; $1-$1.25) —"Revolt Mamie Stover" (20th) and "Slightly Scarlet" (RKO) (3d wk). Stout $7,000. Last week, $7,800.

Guild (Indie) (400; $1)—"Doctor At Sea" (Rep) (3d wk). Up to $2,000. Last week, $1,200.

Liberty (Hamrick) (1,890; 90-$1.25)—"Foreign Intrigue" (UA) and "Killer's Kisses" (UA). Modest $5,000. Last week, "The Rack" (M-G) and "Price Of Fear" (U), $4,100.

Stewart-Day Hot $13,000 in Mpls.

Minneapolis, May 29.

Continuing general boxoffice slump threatens to prevent such a top entry as "Man Who Knew Too Much" from cashing in to full extent here this session. This James Stewart-Doris Day thriller stacks up head and shoulders above other entries. "Patterns" and "The Rack" both are mild. Only holdovers are "Cinerama Holiday," "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" and "Alexander the Great," in 44th, fifth and second weeks respectively. This week's weather helped outdoor theatres more than hardtops.

Estimates for This Week

Century (S-W) (1,150; $1.75-$2.65) — "Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (44th wk). Okay $10,000. Last week, $10,500.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; 85-$1) —"The Rack" (M-G) and "Wedding in Monaco" (M-G). Poor $2,000. Last week, "Forbidden Planet" (M-G) (2d wk), $2,800.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; 85-$1)—"Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th) (5th wk). Fair $3,500 after big longrun. Last week, $4,000.

Radio City (Par) (4,100; 85-$1)— "Alexander the Great" (UA) (2d wk). Has won considerable praise but not up to expectations in second round especially in view of its terrific advance bally. Slender $6,000. Last week, $10,500.

RKO Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 75-$1) — "While City Sleeps" (RKO). Modest $7,000. Last week, "Cockleshell Heroes" (Col), $8,300.

RKO Pan (RKO) (1,650; 65-85)— "Frontier Scout" (UA) and "Crime Against Joe" (UA). Light $3,500. Last week, "Blackjack Ketchum" (Col) and "Frenzy at Gunsight Pass" (Col), $3,000.

State (Par) (2,300; 85-$1)—"Man Who Knew Too Much" (Par). Plenty of praise for this one. Economic fates are against it at this moment. Hotsy $13,000 but could have been more. Last week, "The Come On" (AA), $4,300.

World (Mann) (400; 75-$1.20)— "Patterns" (M-G). Poor $2,500. Last week, "Naked Night" (Indie), $3,300.

'Searchers' Giant 27G, Denver; 'Knew Much' 14G

Denver, May 29.

Only a few theatres are garnering much business here this week as most theatres wait for Memorial Day and new product.

Standouts this frame are "Man Who Knew Too Much," fancy $22,000 in first round at the Hollywood Paramount, and "Picnic," nifty $28,000 in three regular-run situations.

"Hilda Crane" is slim $16,000 in four sites while "Rack" pairing with "Gaby" is rated dull $10,000 in two spots. Reissue of "Citizen Kane" looks snappy $5,500 in first frame at the El Rey. Other oldies loom dull.

'Searchers' Huge $25,000, Philly

Philadelphia, May 29.

Exhibitors are inclined to blame the weather for current sluggish boxoffice, since a rainy Sunday hurt weekend take. Matinee trade has been dismal. Lack of newcomers and some overly-extended longruns also is hurting. Despite this, "The Searchers" is landing a smash total at the Randolph while "Jubal" looms solid at the Stanton. "Ladykillers," too, still is torrid in fourth frame at the Green Hill. "Seven Wonders of World" is mighty in fifth stanza at the Boyd.

St. Loo Offish; Stewart Lusty 12G, 'Searchers' 12½G, 'Wonders' 20G

St. Louis, May 29.

Memorial Day holiday doesn't figure to help the spotty trade at mainstem houses here this session, with holdovers continuing to grab the best coin. "The Searchers" shapes good in second week at the Fox while "Man Who Knew Too Much" still is sock in second round at the St. Louis. "Unidentified Flying Objects" is doing only passable fair trade at Loew's. Out-of-town patrons are maintaining the lusty gross for "Seven Wonders of World" at Ambassador.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (Indie) (1,400; $1.20-$2.40)—"Seven Wonders Of World" (Indie) (5th wk). Lusty $20,000 after $21,000 in fourth.

Simonelli: You Guys Talk Too Much

Charles Simonelli, Universal's eastern ad-pub chief, this week resigned from the ad-pub committee of the Motion Picture Assn. of America for the stated reason that his colleagues on the committee just couldn't keep a secret. He revealed his bowout in letters to the ad-pub directors of the MPAA member companies.

Simonelli's beef has its origin in a private MPAA meeting in N. Y. last week wherein the ad-pub chiefs discussed ways and means of steaming up more interest in films. What went on was to have been kept from public view.

But blow-by-blow accounts of the session were immediately available from many quarters. Seems that the ad-pub element of the picture business just can't be kept from talking. Excepting Simonelli who said he "studiously and conscientiously" ducked calls from the press.

Whether his letter of resignation was to be a secret wasn't stated. There was no announcement.

British Actor's Views on U.S. Taxes

Ronald Howard Discourses on 'Deductions' and On A Sherlock Holmes Who Ogles Dames

By GEORGE GILBERT

Taxes may be a problem for the Zanucks and other top industryites, but the foreign player who comes to the U. S. for a role has his financial problems, too, according to British actor Ronald Howard (son of Leslie Howard, a big fave in his day this side). En route to the Coast from London for a stint in Earlmar's upcoming "Drango," he noted that "after the U. S. Government exacts its 30%, my agent takes his 10% and Equity deducts its 5%—less other assorted imposts, that leaves me with about half."

But Howard, who planed to the Coast Saturday (26), takes a philosophical view towards taxes. "That's life," he said, "and besides, the trip to America along with the change in scenery in itself has its rewarding aspects." A veteran British film, legit and tv actor, he'll be making his first appearance in a Hollywood picture when "Drango" goes before the cameras June 4 in St. Francisville, La.

Howard, who'll portray a former Confederate Army officer in "Drango," just completed "Hide Up" for J. Arthur Rank and is mulling a return to the London theatre next fall following completion of the Earlmar production. Earlmar, incidentally, was recently formed by Jeff Chandler to turn out several pictures for United Artists release. Its initial venture, produced by Hall Bartlett, stars Chandler and Linda Darnell in a story of the South's reconstruction following the Civil War.

Aside from his varied film and legit work, Howard perhaps is best known to American audiences as the star of the "Sherlock Holmes" telepix series. "There are 39 'Holmes' films," he recalled, "and all were made in 1954 by producer Sheldon Reynolds as a matter of economics in Paris much to the chagrin of the English press which protested it wasn't cricket to make so British a character as Holmes in the French capital."

For those loyal Britons who may lament that "Holmes" has been done practically everywhere except in Britain, Howard indicated that the series may resume shooting in England under the Reynolds auspices, "economic matters" permitting. In an amusing use of the third person he reflected "I think that fellow Howard plays Holmes too broadly (winking at the girls, etc.). It should be done in the traditional manner — severe and strictly business."

'RIFIFI' FIXED POLICY: START-AT-BEGINNING

Success of the "closed door" policy instituted by the Fine Arts Theatre, N. Y., for "Diabolique" has induced the management to present "Rififi," new French entry, under the same conditions. Since "Rififi," like "Diabolique," is a suspense thriller, the theatre will have specially scheduled performances and will not seat patrons once the feature has started.

"Rififi" has its American premiere at the eastside art house on June 5. It won first prize at the Cannes Film Festival in 1955 for its director, Jules Dassin. In addition to directing and collaborating on the screenplay, Dassin, an American, plays one of the major roles in the film, based on a novel by Auguste le Breton, "the French Mickey Spillane."

Fishman's Demise Brings Loew Publicists Shuffle

As a result of the death of Carl Fishman, assistant advertising manager of Loew's Theatres, the theatre company has realigned the responsibilities of the homeoffice pub-ad staff.

James Shanahan has been named assistant to ad chief Ernie Emerling. Ted Arnow will supervise promotional activities for Loew's Theatres in New York, including contacts with the metropolitan press and other duties formerly handled by Fishman. Russ Grant will be in charge of all publicity and advertising for Loew's Theatres outside of New York.

Paula Gould, Capitol Theatre publicist, will also handle publicity for Loew's New Jersey theatres and the Metropolitan, Brooklyn. Ann Bontempo will continue as radio-tv contact as well as executing special assignments. Robert Zanger will handle special promotions for the N. Y. neighborhood theatres.

Ozoner Balks At Nearby Carny Op

Philadelphia, May 29.

The owner of the South City Drive- in Theatre and Amusement Center, Charles Goldfine, protested the permit issued to James E. Strates Carnival for a two-week stand (May 28-June 9) on a lot adjacent to his property.

Goldfine, who claims an investment of $450,000 in the ozoner, and annual taxes in excess of $20,000, charges the carny's light and music systems would not only drive away customers but would keep them away forever.

The attorney for the VFW post sponsoring the affair tried to prove that the theatre operator not only knew about the carnival booking prior to commiting himself for two expensive pix, but had in the past leased his land for other fairs and parking facilities.

The allegations were denied by Goldfine.

Ready K.C. Cinerama

Kansas City, May 29.

Advent of Cinerama, due to open to the public here June 14 in the Missouri Theatre, marks one of the biggest changes in the downtown entertainment scene in several years.

Deal whereby Cinerama takes over the Missouri from RKO was confirmed last week in New York, and Cinerama hands already are on the scene beginning the conversion. RKO returned Matt Plunkett, formerly manager here for a considerable term, to close out its operation, which ended Sun. (27) with "Bold and Brave" winding a two-week run. Plunkett later returns to Des Moines, where he has been for several weeks.

Plans call for the house to emerge as a 1,050-seater at $2 top, converted from its present capacity of 2,585. There will be main floor, loge and balcony seats in the new plan. Frank Upton, Division Manager of Theatre Operations, and William H. Green, Midwestern ad-pub manager, both are here from Detroit offices getting things started.

Metro's Busy-Bee Rythm

Hollywood, May 29.

With 14 films slated for release in the next six months, Metro is setting a near record for releases while racking up its biggest production effort in five years. Outgoing product includes all but one —"Raintree County"—of the pix on the "active" list, that is, in the can, currently in production or on the boards for early production.

"County," the $5,500,000 Montgomery Clift starrer which is the firm's biggest domestic production in history, is sidelined pending Clift's recovery from recent auto accident injuries.

Five films currently shooting, "Tea and Sympathy," "The Teahouse of the August Moon," "The Power and the Prize," "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" and "The Opposite Sex," will be included in the release list. Others include "The Fastest Gun Alive," "High Society," "Somebody Up There Likes Me" and "Somewhere I'll Find Him," all completed; "Lust for Life," now being edited; and the indie films "The Living Idol," "Julie," "The Iron Petticoat" and "A Man is 10 Feet Tall."

3,381 Ozoners C'Scope Geared

Drive-in possibilities for CinemaScope pictures have increased 69.5% since last spring, according to a 20th-Fox survey. Total number of drive-ins in the domestic market, U. S. and Canada, now equipped with CinemaScope is 3,381, representing a gain of 1,387.

As of last May, there were 1,994 ozoners with C'Scope installations, 1,976 in the U. S. and 18 in Canada. At present there are 3,321 in the U. S. and 60 in Canada, representing a gain of 1,345 and 42, respectively.

Despite the increase, 20th's revenue gain from the outdoor theatres in the first 18 weeks of this year was only 5.2% over the same period of 1955. Gain in the first quarter of this year over the same three-month period of 1955 was 2.75%.

The bad weather, particularly in the northeast during the early part of the drive-in season; hurt drive-in business hard. However, a strong pickup is expected in subsequent months. Based on 20th's 1955 statistics, the second quarter income from ozoners was 1.55% higher than the first, third quarter produced 80.6% more than the second and 360.5% above the first three months.

Second and third quarter periods, extending from April to September, represent the key outdoor months. Last year, for example, 20th derived 69.6% of its overall income from ozoners. Since the drive-in market for C'Scope pix has expanded considerably, 20th is hopeful of a hefty boost in revenue from this source during 1956.

6th Term for George Sidney

Hollywood, May 29.

George Sidney has been re-elected prexy of Screen Directors' Guild for a sixth consecutive term. Other officers voted in at annual election are Rouben Mamoulian, first v.p.; George Stevens, second v.p.; H. C. Potter, secretary; Lesley Selander, treasurer.

A paid-up mortgage to SDG headquarters, which opened June 5, 1955 and cost $300,000 was presented Sidney upon his reelection. A $20,000 check, from Screen Directors Playhouse tv show, was turned over to Guild's Educational and Benevolent Foundation.

'Thrillerama,' 2-Strip (70m) Pkge., Ready to Go; 25 Technicolor Prints

"Thrillarama Adventure," film made in a new dual-strip process, will be released by a newly organized Texas corporation, Thrillarama Releasing Corp. New company is headed by Albert H. Reynolds, president, and Dowlen Russell, v.p., both of whom are officers of Thrillarama Productions, the company which produced the film. Under the releasing policy established by the new company, the distrib arm will provide exhibitors with the special screen and booth attachments necessary for the presentation of Thrillarama, the name of the process, too. Combining of two 35m prints is said to provide effect equal to 70m film.

Thrillarama project was fuly developed and organized by a group of Texans whose headquarters are in Dallas. The process, as yet, has not been demonstrated to the trade or general press and, as a result, little is known of its quality in comparison to Cinerama, Todd-AO or other widescreen processes. The majority of information relating to Thrillarama has emanated from Dallas via press releases from the production company.

According to a most recent report, the company has completed 25 units of equipment for the presentation of Thrillarama. It has also appointed J. C. Skinner, chief engineer of Sterling Sales & Service Co., a subsidiary of Interstate Circuit, to head a staff of engineers assigned to "Thrillarama Adventure." Skinner and J. H. Davis, another Sterling engineer, have been responsible for all technical developments apart from the special cameras, which were designed by R. G. Wolff Productions of Hollywood.

The new picture and process will have its world premiere in Houston shortly. A complete equipment package, accompanying each date of the picture, consists of a screen frame, screen, traveler tracks and curtain, 5,000 ft. magazines, interlocks, lenses, and a specially patented device which mates the two pictures at the center of the screen. The equipment, it's said, can be assembled and dismantled in a few hours. The distribution company expects the delivery of 25 prints from Technicolor within a month.

Pat R. Notaro Succeeds Late Ben Wallerstein

Pat R. Notaro has been appointed west coast zone manager of Stanley Warner Theatres. He succeeds the late Ben H. Wallerstein whose assistant he had been since February of this year.

Notaro started his career in the Warner organization, predecessor of Stanley Warner, as an usher at the Warner Theatre in Pittsburgh. He left SW in 1952 to become v.p. of the Roth Circuit of Washington and returned to SW in February, 1956 as Coast district manager and aide to Wallerstein.

Ducats on Credit Idea Pends Anew

Film company officials are now giving active consideration to the idea of selling theatre tickets on a "charge it" basis. This type of operation was suggested as a possibility by Eric A. Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, at an MPAA board meeting several months ago at which time, it was agreed, the thought might be looked into.

Distribution v.p.'s of the film outfits at a New York meeting last Friday (25) gave it a verbal going-over and left the strong impression that it will be pursued further.

It's uniform opinion that ticket sales should be pegged to the convenience of the public and the "bill me later" plan for theatres could be made workable in a manner similar to the Diners Club operation.

Problem is the necessity of putting this on a national basis with, as an obvious necessity, the participation of exhibitors. Much organization work will be required.

Consumer subscribers to the Diners Club are issued identification cards which they show to restaurants, hotels, etc., which also are members. The consumer signs the check and DC guarantees payment less commission.

Plan is expected to be attractive particularly to first-run theatres which draw heavily on passers-by. Latter, mainly among the younger element, might not have the required cash for admission but could still attend by flashing the "charge it" card.

Revamp Tower, Dallas, For Todd-AO Projection

Dallas, May 29.

Interstate Circuit will spend over $50,000 to convert its midtown Tower for showing of all 55 or 65m films. First film will be "Oklahoma," Todd-AO release to come in June 14, and "80 Days Around the World" will follow in September.

R. J. O'Donnell, circuit chief, has set a reserved-seat policy, with two shows on most days. Tower is next door to the Melba where Cinerama "Seven Wonders of the World" debuted May 3.

(Shirley Jones, of "Oklahoma," plays Magnolia in "Show Boat," Aug. 20-Sept. 2, at State Fair here.)

Schwartz to Europe

Sol A. Schwartz, RKO Theatres prexy, takes off for Europe Friday (1) for a month's vacation. He's being accomped by Mrs. Schwartz.

On the itinerary are visits to France, Austria and Germany.

FILM SERIES ADJUNCT TO THE BARD'S TOWN

Stratford, Ont., May 29.

A program of films, featuring pictures from different countries, will be offered here during the fourth annual season of drama at the Stratford Shakespeare Festival. Fourteen film programs, each made up of a feature film accompanied by shorts and featurettes, will be presented from July 23 to Aug. 16 at the Avon Theatre here.

The pictures will include revivals as well as current films which have not had general distribution in Canada.

Rhoden Weeks' Activity

Kansas City, May 29.

Fox Midwest theatres are a beehive of activity as circuit swings into its annual Rhoden Weeks, top drive of the year. First of the two weeks opens May 30, with four houses here opening with "The Proud Ones" and personal appearance by Jeff Hunter sparking the event which honors Elmer C. Rhoden.

Player is in town Tuesday and Wednesday (30) for round of radio-tv-press interviews and series of autograph parties in lobbies of the theatres, Tower, Uptown, Fairway and Granada. Appearances here are part of a tour Hunter is making with the film, coming here from St. Louis and going on to Wichita Thursday.

Managers here, Roy Hill, Harold Guyett, Jess Spain and Charles Barnes, have lined up a special event every day for the two weeks, including midnight teen age shows, cartoon matinees, ladies days, and sneak previews. "D Day, Sixth of June" opens June 6 as the second week attraction.

Oscar No Help to a Short?

An Academy Award for a feature picture frequently results in as much as $1,000,000 in additional bookings. The Oscar nod, however, apparently adds little, if anything, to the revenue chances of a short subject. The experience of 20th-Fox with "Survival City," the single-reel CinemaScope featurette which copped an Oscar for the best short subject of the year, is disappointing.

As of last week, the film played off in only 12% of its 13,603 CinemaScope-equipped possibilities in the U. S. and Canada, a playoff of less than 2,000 bookings. Most discouraging to 20th, which is needling its sales staff to push the short, is the fact that the film has been bookable since last July. Anticipating heavy bookings for the film, the company made 325 prints available.

French Film Biz Sees Urgency Of More Foreign Trade; Looks to U.S.

Paris, May 22.

The French film industry has its eye on the U. S. market because it feels that there a better penetration may prove a real future source of French film income. Rising production costs and the general stability of the home market gross makes the export aspect more essential than ever. Combined foreign income for 1955 was $9,600,000 or $1,200,000 better than 1954. But the U. S. gave only $171,000 of this for 28 films and ranked seventh after West Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, Great Britain, Canada and Japan as a source of pix income.

Most French successes on the foreign markets have come from the appeal of the subject matter and treatment, with the name values of Gallic stars quite limited. This is especially true in the U. S. where Fernandel is one of the few stars to have developed a boxoffice name. Film sources here feel that most U. S. successes have been on audacity of theme or unusual mounting of story. Such moneymakers as "Diabolique," "Hulot's Holiday," "Letters From My Windmill," "Game of Love" and "French Cancan" have not leaned on name appeal.

Work of the Office Du Cinéma Francais, headed by Joseph Maternati, in N. Y. is being watched by film circles here in its development of new facets about the American market. Dubbing is felt to be an important thing but it is understood this will take a long while to adopt. Use of American tele to hypo Gallic pix is also being considered plus making Gallic pic names known.

An analysis of the foreign film income around the world denotes eight male and female players showing up in many top grossing films. This info shows the femmes to be Martine Carol, Marina Vlady, Francoise Arnoul, Brigitte Bardot, Michele Morgan, Dany Robin, Etchika Choreau and Danielle Darrieux with Fernandel, Gerard Philipe, Daniel Gelin, Claude Pascal, Jean Gabin, Jean-Pierre Aumont, Eddie Constantine and Jean Marais as the male names best known. Of the above, Misses Morgan, Darrieux, Robin and Bardot have been seen in American films.

Fernandel has become known in America via his sucessful "Sheep Has Five Legs" and video apppearances. Gabin, Philipe and Marais are known by the art house set. Gelin is in "The Man Who Knew Too Much" (Par). Constantine is that unknown American who made good here playing gangster types and Pascal is still an unknown quantity. The use of French name players in American films being made abroad is also encouraged to get Americans acquainted with them.

NATKE Asks Halt To Sale of British Studios And Cinema Tax Slash

London, May 29.

An appeal to the union's executive to take the initiative and halt the sale of film studios will be made at the bi-ennial conference of the National Assn. of Theatrical and Kine Employees, which opens in Edinburgh tomorrow (Wed.). The request will come from the Shepperton branch of the union, which has tabled a six-point action resolution.

In order to prevent a further deterioration in the studio situation, the motion urges a drastic reduction in admission tax and a higher percentage of the coin to go to film production. It advocates continuance of the National Film Finance Corp. and suggests a larger sum be made available to British producers.

In a bid to get a better deal for British pix abroad, the motion urges the executive to inaugurate high level talks with American and other interests. It also proposes that a conference should be convened of all interested bodies with a view to concerted action.

Another resolution, in the name of West End members, urges an amalgamation of all the existing unions in the entertainment industry and several motions have been tabled dealing with admission tax.

Hemingway Back With Big Fish for 'Old Man'

Havana, May 29.

Ernest Hemingway returned from his fishing expedition off the coast of Peru for "Old Man and the Sea." Hemingway went down to try to catch a big marlin for fishing scenes in the pic. His trip was a success, hooking one fish weighing 1,030 pounds and two others weighing about 750 pounds each. Previously, a special unit had unsuccessfully tried to catch the "big one" off Cuba and then off Peru before Hemingway went down to try himself.

Meanwhile, Warner Bros., producers of the film, announced that Santiago Puig, the fisherman who is credited with being the real-life fisherman of the book, has been enlisted as a "technical adviser" during production. Puig's home is in Cojimar, actual site of the novel where much of the filming is being done.

Upbeat in Aussie Film Prod. Looms

Sydney, May 22.

Between now and the end of the year, Aussie picture production is seen going on a major upbeat via British and U. S. activity. Ealing-Metro will be the first to get underway with the filming of local yarn "Shiralee," starring Peter Finch.

This will be followed by the Columbia-Warwick production setup of "The Broad Arrow," adapted from the bestseller, "Wards of the Outer Marsh."

"Robbery Under Arms," famed cops-and-robbers yarn, also will go before the cameras near the year's end via Ealing-Metro.

The Rank organization also will send a production unit here to do local scenes for an as yet untitled pic.

British Union Wants Nationalized Pix Biz

London, May 22.

The Communist-led Electrical Trades Union, at its annual conference last week, unanimously demanded the nationalization of the British film industry and the immediate restoration of renters' quota. The resolution adopted by the meeting was moved on behalf of the executive by Herbert Batchelor, who called the Quo'a Act an absolute mockery and the most dishonest piece of legislation ever perpetrated. When it came into operation, he noted, studio after studio closed down.

Both British and American film interests came in for harsh criticism in Batchelor's opening speech. J. Arthur Rank, he said, had been publicized as a great patron saint of British pix for falling over himself to close down studios. The Denham lot, the largest in Europe, had been turned into a depot for the American Army of Occupation.

27 Films Entered In S.E. Asia Pix Festival

Tokyo, May 22.

Nineteen features and eight shorts will be entered by the eight member countries of the Motion Picture Producers Federation of Southeast Asia in the third Film Festival in Southeast Asia to be held in Hong Kong June 12-18.

Masaichi Nagata, Daiei Motion Picture Co. of Japan prexy who also is federation chairman, also announced that special films will be shown at the festival by five non-member countries. Member companies of the federation are Japan, the Philippines, Free China, Thailand, Malaya, Indonesia, Hong Kong and Macao. Non-member countries participating will be India, Ceylon, South Vietnam, South Korea and Italy.

Japan will enter five features, two of them in color, plus four documentaries.

Cancel Locarno Pix Fest

Zurich, May 22.

Present boycott of Switzerland by film producers of Italy, France and Germany is blamed by the committee of the Locarno Film Festival for cancelling this year's festival (traditionally held in July) until 1957. Boycott arose from the Swiss distribs' decision to pay no more than a certain minimum guarantee. So far, no solution to the problem has been reached as yet.

U. S. distributors are untouched by the hassle, these having their own setups in this country.

'Marty' May Still Enter Czech Picture Festival; State Dept. Favors It

Paris, May 22.

"Marty" still may be checked into the forthcoming Czech Film Fest in Carlsbad (Karlovy Vara), to be held July 12-31, according to the Czech West European State Film rep Ladislas Kachtik. Since the U. S. State Department is for it and the Motion Picture Export Assn. is against it, this may be overcome by producers Hecht and Lancaster, entering the film in the fest themselves. Reportedly the State Dept. has asked the producers about this, and they may be willing to send the pic to the fete as a special invited American film.

If "Marty" goes to the Carlsbad show, the MPEA and State Dept. will probably send observers to the fest which may lead to overtures for film sales possibly to be instituted between MPEA and the Iron Curtain countries. Only thing holding up actual sales talks is the go-ahead sign from the U. S. major prexies and an official move from the Russo State Film Center.

MPEA rep Marc Spiegel has been conferring with the Russo West European film rep, M. Lebedeff, on an unofficial plane here. Spiegel is now waiting for more conclusive talks. Satellites have all been making offers on their own for Yank films.

SWISS EXHIBS SQUAWK VS. LARGE SCREEN TV

Zurich, May 22.

Reproduction of telecasts on large screens in public restaurants in the Tessin (Italian part of Switzerland), has prompted the Swiss Cinema Assn. to petition the police of the canton Tessin. Request is made that this kind of public telecasting be made subject to a concessions' duty. Reason given is that these performances are in special locales and therefore compete with regular film houses.

The association, in its petition, considers it wiser to take adequate measures in time rather than to seek injunctions once the operations are in full swing. It proposes that the police department either restrict the right to project large-screen television to cinemas only or to make such projections subject to the same regulations valid for regular cinemas.

Highbury Film Plant Closes For Summer

London, May 22.

High-Definition Films is closing its Highbury studios during the summer for reconstruction and installation of new electronic recording equipment, but will continue to function from its recently acquired workshops and labs.

Since the beginning of this year, the HDF studio has been used for pre-filming a number of top commercial tv series, including "Take Your Pick," "Double Your Money," "My Wildest Dream" and "Noddy." The studios hold a record of four hours 31½ minutes screen time filmed in four shooting days. Since January, the minimum daily output has never fallen below 30 minutes screen time.

Tax Angle: Concerts

Washington, May 29.

For purpose of exemption from the 10% admission tax, the term "concerts" includes ballet and classical dance performances, Internal Revenue Service has just ruled.

The exemption is applicable when musical accompaniment is required.

French Pic Producers Shun Specs, Cut Costs With Comedies, Remakes

Paris, May 22.

Unlike the U. S. trend to spectacle films, upcoming Gallic production appears to be cutting down on the costly historical costumers and centering on comedy, social films, and a big number of remakes. This type of film-making would cut down production overhead somewhat and might make for a more balanced fiscal film picture here, with local and foreign income on an upbeat.

About the only costume specs on the horizon are "Til L'Espiegle," with Gerard Philipe doing his first direction stint; Jean Renoir's "Elena Et Les Hommes" (an English and French version, making Ingrid Bergman's first comedy) and Rene Clement's "Gervaise."

Gangster films have faded and in their place loom some socially slanted pix with the perennial joy girl again in for rehabilitation and affectionate study. Leonide Moguy's "Le Long Des Troittoirs" (Along the Sidewalks) will study the case of a girl pushed into a life of disrepute by a gigolo while "La Fille Elisa" will depict a turn-of-the-century respectable prostitute. "Assassins Du Dimanche" treats motorists responsibility. Robert Bresson's "Un Condamne A La Mort" (A Condemned Man Escapes) will detail the life of a prisoner of war.

A pic version of Arthur Miller's "Crucible," "Les Bijoutiers De Clair De Lune," "Paris-Palace Hotel," life in a gaudy hotel, and "La Traversee De Paris," covering occupation days of the last war are also on tap.

Undraped chassis will not be neglected in a $1,000,000 picturization of "Folies-Bergere," "Mannequins De Paris," "Zaza" and "Paris By Night." Remakes include "Notre Dame De Paris," with Gina Lollobrigida and Anthony Quinn; "Les Miserables," "Arsene Lupin," "Michael Strogoff," "Sans Famille" (Nobody's Boy) and "Kean."

Richmond-Power to Do 2 Brit. Pix This Year

London, May 22.

Copa Productions, the Ted Richmond-Tyrone Power producing outfit, has lined up two British pix for filming this year. Power will star in both. They will be produced by John R. Sloan for release through Columbia.

The first, skedded to start rolling at Shepperton July 2, is "Seven Waves Away," which will be directed by Richard Sale. It will be followed in September by "Lorenzo the Magnificent," which will go in location in Florence late in September, with interiors to be filmed later at Shepperton.

102 Jap Permits To 10 U.S. Majors

Tokyo, May 22.

The Japanese government foreign film import policy for the fiscal year 1956-57 was fully okayed May 15 when the Finance Ministry released a supplement to the earlier April 3 announcement. Additional information covers final adjustment of fraction quota holdings by importers, bonus import licenses and quota-less import of educational films.

Final juggling of fraction quotas gives the 10 U. S. majors 102.09 licenses which the ministry said will be 102 import permits to be divided among the companies under the MPEA global division plan. Eight other importers were granted 20 licenses to bring in films from the dollar area. Ten importers received a total of 44 licenses for use in non-dollar areas.

Import-export companies which earn a total of $30,000 from the export of Japanese films may import one extra film for each $30,000 grosser, the ministry announced. They must submit heavily documented proof of the earnings with each application. Eight bonus licenses will be awarded during the fiscal year to films released here during the calendar year which a jury from the Finance and Education Ministries consider "superior." In announcing conditions for these awards, the Finance Ministry said that, unlike the previous year's policy, films which do not win in the first half-year competition may not be resubmitted for second judging.

New Income Tax Gimmick For British Show Biz

London, May 22.

A new plan to enable entertainers to pay their income tax commitments out of earnings instead of allowing arrears to accumulate has been designed by the government and incorporated into the finance bill, now before Parliament. Introducing the new clause, the Financial Secretary to the Treasury told Commons that it was not meant to be a reflection on the entertainment profession.

Unlike other employees, who had their tax deducted automatically at the source, entertainers were in a different class. And the changes were aimed at enabling the tax to be paid as near as possible to the due date.

The new arrangement would permit expense claims to be dealt with "expeditiously, expertly and uniformly." The Minister added that the new proposals were the outcome of careful study of entertainers' tax problems.

Start 'Bundle' in Havana

Havana, May 22.

Filming of "The Big Boodle" is scheduled to begin near Havana this week. The full-length film, being produced by Louis F. Blumberg, is based on the novel of the same name by Robert Sylvester.

Errol Flynn is starred with Rossana Rory, Italian-English star, playing opposite. Also in the cast are Pedro Armendariz and Gia Scala.

Brisson Mulls 'Fanny' And New Delhi Offers

Minneapolis, May 29.

In final frame of five-week Hotel Radisson Flame Room engagement here, Carl Brisson is mulling two offers for the summer. One from Lillian Schary of the Paul Small agency is to play the Ezio Pinza "Fanny" role for 10 weeks in California. He's also wanted by the Hotel Imperial, New Delhi, India. It's one of the few countries where he hasn't played yet.

Following his local engagement, Brisson goes to the Hotel Duluth, Duluth, for his first engagement there. It's same spot where Hildegarde was booked for her initial Duluth visit.

Palladium TV Show Layoff

London, May 22.

"Sunday Night at the London Palladium," one of the top programs on Britain's commercial tv network, is to be laid off during the summer months. The final airing will be June 24, with the show returning in the fall.

It will be replaced by "Sunday Night at Blackpool," a George & Alfred Black presentation, which will continue to feature "Beat the Clock." Tommy Trinder, resident emcee on the Palladium show, will perform a similar chore from Blackpool.

Amateau Sets Up Coast Shop

Syndicate Romances Co-op Film Deals For Portugal And Spain—One-Quarter Hollywood Costs

Hollywood, May 29.

Complete or partial financing for American producers interested in film making in Spain and Portugal is being offered by a new foreign syndicate, A. J. Amateau Co., which has set up offices here in an effort to attract Hollywood production talent. Syndicate consists of several wealthy persons in the two countries, none connected with the film biz as such, and headed by Amateau who is now here.

Syndicate already has had two American films completed under its sponsorship, Republic's "Lisbon" and Warwick's "Cockleshell Heroes." Outfit also has an agreement with Mike Frankovich for one or more films.

Production in Spain and Portugal, Amateau contends, costs about one-quarter of the Hollywood cost without loss of quality. Figure also is about one-third or one-half the cost of other foreign production centers. Plan makes two well equipped studios, the Tobis in Lisbon and the Orphea in Barcelona, available to participating producers. Technicians familiar with American techniques are available and the governments also are ready to offer assistance.

For total financing, producer supplies a letter of credit from a U. S. bank for the full amount of the cash budget in favor of Amateau European Production Organization. AEPO finances the entire budget at the rate of six percent interest and then receives total payment from letter of credit on delivery of the negative, or gets "above the line" charges on delivery with the balance within 90 days.

practices of the film companies, it would devote its efforts to a single company, or a single policy, or a single picture." It was clearly stated that 'War and Peace' would receive the "package" treatment as soon as exact terms for distribution were known."

Other developments of the Allied sessions:

The Allied emergency defense committee stated "it is not felt that the distributor witnesses have damaged the fundamental of the exhibitors' case."

The board expressed "deep resentment that Adolph Schimel, of Universal, and Louis Phillips, of Paramount, misused the Congressional hearings as a forum for intemperate and scandalous attacks on exhibitors whose only offense was to present information to that committee."

The board said chances of eliminating the remaining admissions tax at this session of Congress are "uncertain," but predicted that if not forthcoming this year, "it is a sure-shot for 1957."

The board, at the suggestion of Spyros Skouras, is making a survey of audience preferences but believes that what is needed is more family type pix, such as "The Kettles," "Andy Hardy" series and "Long, Long Trailer."

Allied prexy Rubin Shor and board chairman Abram F. Myers have notified the Justice Department that they have no objection to Si Fabian buying into WB, so long as he completely divests his Stanley-Warner interests.

Cost Lopping

with all films. Some don't lend themselves to it. Test engagements at a limited number of first runs usually show the wisdom, or lack of it, in spending high for the campaign.

New Ballyhoo Approach

Being looked for, as a consequence, is the manner of building public consciousness of films in general, almost institutionally. The ad pub committee of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, chaired by Paramount's Jerry Pickman, sat in a four and a half hour session in New York last Wednesday (23) to tackle the problem. Ideas were dropped—such as a revival of the "Movietime U. S. A." campaign, execs calling on newspaper editors and publishers for more film attention, market research, press tours of Hollywood, etc.—but no formal action was taken, nor was any single broad program recommended. As each company rep was called upon to offer a suggestion, several of them merely said, "I pass." So committees were appointed for further investigation and another meeting is set for next week.

One decision made by the group was to eliminate the formal dinner that went with last Wednesday's session. At the next conclave, only sandwiches will be served so the conversation may continue while the ad-pub experts partake of their nourishment.

As for streamlining distribution, talk among the MPAA sales managers committee, also conducting current meetings, so far has focused on the elimination of certain exchanges, such as New Haven and Hartford to name a couple, and the pooling of physical facilities for handling film. Latter covers print shipping, inspection and storage.

Both proposals have been given trade attention in past but nothing came of either in the tradition-bound industry.

Meanwhile, MPAA has set up a new, special committee of execs whose job is to explore all possibilities concerning both the cost-cutting and public lures. Group comprises members of both the MPAA board and its distributors' committee, including Arthur M. Loew, Spyros P. Skouras, George Weltner, John J. O'Connor, and Abe Montague. Reflecting the urgency of the situation, they've been asked to give as much time as possible to meetings to exchange ideas and the pursuit of proposals which are mutually acceptable. "Progress" reports are to be made periodically to Eric A. Johnston, president, and the full MPAA board.

Fading Pioneers

duction topper, also unloaded his holdings but it's strongly suggested he'll stay on as head of the studio (separate story on page 3).

Herbert J. Yates has taken preliminary steps toward relinquishing his longtime hold on Republic Pictures and its predecessor companies. Beverly Hills investment firm of Cantor, FitzGerald & Co., has acquired an option to buy Yates' vote-controlling stock in Rep.

50 Years With Loew's

Joseph M. Schenck who, with brother Nicholas M. Schenck, was associated with Marcus, Loew's nearly 50 years ago and subsequently segued into production, has severed his final connection with the industry by yielding his stock in United Artists Theatres Corp. to George P. Skouras.

At Paramount, Adolph Zukor is continuing as board chairman but, at 83, for years now has been leaving most exec responsibilities to president Barney Balaban.

Earlier this year Mary Pickford, one of the original founders of United Artists (the year was 1917) divested her one-third stock in UA to the management team headed by president Arthur B. Krim and board chairman Robert S. Benjamin.

Nicholas M. Schenck, having taken on board chairman status at Loew's to make way for Arthur Loew in the presidency, is still referred to as the "General" in the trade. But the prominent role he's played, throughout the entire industry and not just within the Loew's murals, is now drawing less of a spotlight.

No pioneer he, but Darryl Zanuck nonetheless has written some of the history of films. He produced some of the feature talkers for the Warners, teamed with Joseph M. Schenck in 20th Century Pictures, which led to 20th-Fox and his job as topkick of that major studio. Zanuck is now exiting, to produce films independently in partnership with 20th.

The Skourases, naturally, go way back, too, but had their origin in the theatre business in St. Louis. The key figure in the pioneering of the 20th-Fox predecessor operation was William Fox. Thus, Spyros P. Skouras, president of 20th, isn't billed as a "founding father."

Louis B. Mayer, whose reputation as M-G studio head was spread the world over, has been on the bench for several years. That Mayer would be again active in film work had been widely expected but this has never materialized. Except for theatre interests, he's on the sidelines.

Sam Katz, who co-founded Balaban & Katz with the Balabans, and later went into production, likewise has been out of action but now is ready to form a new partnership, with Joe Pasternak, as the latter switches from contract to indie producer status, probably remaining at Metro although also mentioned going Columbia.

Al Lichtman, vet of all phases of the business and onetime partner of B. P. Schulberg, bowed out recently as director of distribution of 20th-Fox, is now planning indie production.

Perhaps it's significant that Cecil B. DeMille's next picture will be produced under his own aegis but the actual producer will be Henry Wilcoxon, his longtime associate. Thus marking the first time that DeMille, who's 75, and now putting the final touches on his mammoth "The Commandments," will not call the turns on his own production.

Wrapping it up, the industry has reached that point on the calendar where the generals are doing a fade. All the aforementioned are men of means, to be sure, although the $22,000,000 going to the three Warners and the $10,000,000 earmarked for Yates, through their respective stock divestitures, represents interesting backlogs of capital. In any event, it's a new era.

Senate Decision

the withering personal attack made by Phillips and other distrib witnesses on prexy Rube Shor. In addition to officially censuring Phillips and Schimel, Allied leaders felt that Phillips' comments represented a "vendetta" rather than a factual presentation of the facts. Written replies to the distributor testimony are currently being prepared for insertion in the record.

Both exhibition and distribution are claiming "victories" as a result of the facts presented to the Senate committee, although impartial observers are inclined to believe that the distributors make an excellent showing in answering the exhibitor charges. Distribs themselves feel that they have succeeded in changing the views of Sen. Hubert Humphrey, D., Minn., who had at first appeared to favor the exhibitors' case.

Almost everybody agreed that the hearings, more than anything else, placed in sharp focus the changes that are taking place in the industry. That the industry is not completely "healthy" economically was evident from the testimony offered by both groups. Except for possible help via elimination of the Federal admissions tax, no concrete proposals were presented as to what efforts can be taken to preserve the structure of the business as it has functioned for many years.

Over and over again, it was hammered home that television was making serious inroads, that theatrical pictures can only survive if "blockbuster" entertainment can be offered, that the production and talent costs for "big" pictures prevent the producers from turning out films on an assembly line basis, and that some theatres, even given product free, cannot survive in today's market.

Other factors listed as contributing to the falling boxoffice were the dispersal of urban populations, the rash of installment and home buying, and the emergence of unemployment in some sections of the country.

The hearings, to some extent, cleared the air. It crystallized the issues and placed in the forefront the many problems confronting the industry. However, it increased the bitterness between distribution and exhibition since, for the first time perhaps, attacks were made on a personal basis rather than on a group as a whole.

The effect in the relationship between the two segments of the industry may be bitter as a result, but there are many who feel that the clash of personalities will soon be forgotten and that distribution and exhibition, realizing the "tough days" ahead for the industry as whole, will make a concerted effort to bring about an armistice so that both groups can combine to fight equally the common enemy—the slumping boxoffice.

North's Exhibs

—exhibitors feared the consequences. They were sure that a Negro in the theatre would cost them a marked boxoffice loss.

But when Warner and Loew houses removed the "color line," the protests which arose subsided in a matter of weeks. Wilmington Negroes still patronize their own "colored" theatres but are seen on Main St. in increasing numbers. Still another case is that of Columbus, where Negro organizations years ago campaigned for equal rights in a tense situation replete with arrests, law suits and bitterness. Today the problem no longer exists.

As with Columbus, segregation long ago disappeared in northern cities such as New York, Chicago, Detroit and Philadelphia.

But in the deep south there's been little, if any, change. Some theatres have "colored balconies" and separate entrances for Negroes. Most communities have "colored" theatres and no Negro attends first run houses.

In line with the motion picture industry's enterprise in lowering the segregation bars in theatres is its long standing custom of mingled white and Negro players on the screen. At one time it was considered improper to have a Negro in a cast of white thespians, except when the Negro portrayed a valet, maid or other menial. Only in Memphis and similar places did objections arise when screen desegregation took effect. Today, of course, there's no color line in casting films, plays or tv shows.

ent, specifically the participations demanded by top players? "If you have anything they want to do, most of them will overlook percentages," Siegel replied. "A good part in a good property is an insurance policy for the stars who will not pass it up for percentage demands." Only Crosby has a percentage in "Society" and this is a "reasonable one," said the producer.

Film is his first for M-G under a deal that calls for, at least, four productions in two and a half years. His next, expected to roll in Paris Sept. 1, is "Les Girls," with another new score by Porter and four star players, of whom Gene Kelly, Leslie Caron and Mitzi Gaynor already are set. George Cukor will direct.

As for the fate of the company itself, physically, it's seen as a cinch that Semenenko didn't buy control for the only purpose of being in the picture business. There figure to be some spinoffs of assets if banker is to recoup at least part of the $22,000,000 invested in buying out the Warners' stock.

Harry M. Warner originally balked at the stock sale but finally acquiesced when his deal with Semenenko was sweetened up. It's believed that "H. M." was given $30 per share for his holdings as against the $27.50 paid to Jack L. and Maj. Albert Warner. Deal also provides for all three to remain on the board.

20th-Fox has an exceptionally well-presented outdoor drama in "The Proud Ones." It's certain to hit the mark with western fans, and can prove to be an attractive entry for those who usually do not go for frontier actioners. A credible story with excellent dramatic values, direction that sharpens them and builds suspense, and strong performances by an able cast are among the entertainment assets of this well-thought-out Robert L. Jacks production.

Robert Ryan, Jeffrey Hunter and Robert Middleton are the male cast toppers. Playing a marshal who knows his business, a young man who has not yet determined where he is going, and a gambling saloon operator, respectively, the trio responds exactly right to Robert D. Webb's forceful direction. For femme interest, Virginia Mayo stars, and she gives the pic a performance asset as the girl who loves the marshal. Other acting assists come from Walter Brennan, town jailer; Arthur O'Connell, nervous deputy; Ken Clark and Rodolfo Acosta, deadly gunmen; George Mathews, Whit Bissell, Paul Burns, Richard Deacon and others.

Script by Edmund North and Joseph Petracca, from the novel by Verne Athanas, provides believable shadings to the characters and situations as the plot moves through a dramatic study of a Kansas frontier town suddenly become rich and riotous with the entry of the railroad and trail herds. How Ryan works out his personal and duty obligations, proves that sometimes the use of a gun is necessary, and wins over a young man to his side in the climaxing battle with the town's evil forces, is suspensefully and engrossingly presented. Noteworthy is the script and directorial avoidance of over-statement, resulting in a taut 94 minutes of footage.

The footage looks great in CinemaScope and De Luxe Color as photographed by Lucien Ballard. Editing, art direction and other technical credits merit mention. Picture has a good score by Lionel Newman, albeit over-emphasized in some of the more suspenseful sequences. A simple whistled, behind-scenes theme is very effective for mood. Brog.

Secret of Treasure Mountain

Slow, dull re-telling buried treasure.

Hollywood, May 16.

Columbia release of Wallace MacDonald production. Stars Valerie French, Raymond Burr, William Prince, Lance Fuller; features Susan Cummings, Pat Hogan, Reginald Sheffield, Rodolfo Hoyos. Directed by Seymour Friedman. Screenplay, David Lang; camera, Benjamin H. Kline; editor, Edwin Bryant. Previewed May 15, '56. Running time, 67 MINS.

Audrey Lancaster ..... Valerie French
Cash Larsen ..... Raymond Burr
Robert Kendall ..... William Prince
Juan Alvarado ..... Lance Fuller
Tawana ..... Susan Cummings
Vahoe ..... Pat Hogan
Edward Lancaster ..... Reginald Sheffield
Francisco Martinez ..... Rodolfo Hoyos
Sheriff ..... Paul McGuire
Sam ..... Tom Hubbard
Stub McCurdy ..... Boyd Stockman

This is a poor action programmer, re-telling a familiar outdoor theme about buried gold at such a dull pace there's little to recommend it. The footage is short at 67 minutes, but the picture is long.

David Lang's screen story bears a certain basic resemblance to Columbia's 1949 "Lust For Gold," as does some of the stock footage included in this Wallace MacDonald production. Plotting and dialog are hackneyed, so there is nothing the direction by Seymour Friedman nor the thesping can do to make events even vaguely believable.

A multi-million treasure in gold is the plot lure. The early-day Fort Knox was buried by a Spaniard, who in turn was killed by Apaches and an Indian curse put on the land and cash. Apparently the Apaches didn't believe in the power of their curse, though, so some 200 years later, a redskin posing as a white stands guard. When some adventurers come along and one of them gets on the scent of the hoard, things happen and greed crops out, both for gold and gals. When the plot's all over, the gold's still cached and the bad men are dead.

William Prince, who appeared in the '49 "Lust," is again a good guy in this and his basic honesty gets him the gal, Valerie French, daughter of English remittance man Reginald Sheffield, who has sought the desert for his health. Raymond Burr is the stereotype baddie, Lance Fuller the masquerading Indian guardian. Susan Cummings, Pat Hogan and Rodolfo Hoyos are among featured players.

Benjamin H. Kline's photography and the other technical credits are standard for the budget. Brog.

Screaming Eagles

Good war actioner.

Hollywood, May 16.

Allied Artists release of Samuel Bischoff, David Diamond production. Stars Tom Tyron, Jan Merlin, Alvy Moore, Martin Milner, Jacqueline Beer; features Joe di Reda, Mark Damon, Paul Burke, Pat Conway, Edward G. Robinson Jr., Ralph Votrian. Directed by Charles Haas. Screenplay David Lang, Robert Presnell Jr.; story, Virginia Kellogg; camera, Harry Neumann; editor, Robert S. Eisen; score, Harry Sukman. Previewed May 14, '56. Running time, 80 MINS.

Mason ..... Tom Tryon
Pauling ..... Jan Merlin
Grimes ..... Alvy Moore
Corliss ..... Martin Milner
Marianne ..... Jacqueline Beer
Dubrowski ..... Joe di Reda
Lambert ..... Mark Damon
Drecf ..... Paul Burke
Forrest ..... Pat Conway
Smith ..... Edward G. Robinson Jr.
Talbot ..... Ralph Votrian
Foley ..... Paul Smith
Hernandez ..... Bobby Blake
Torren ..... Bob Roark
Peterson ..... Bob Dix
Nolan ..... Wayne Taylor
Hans Schacht ..... Robert Boon
Gustav Bormann ..... Peter Michaels

The formula war action in "Screaming Eagles" is stirred up at an okay pace so it averages out as a good entry for regular program bills. Additionally, it nicely showcases a number of newer male faces. Younger filmgoers, particularly the action-minded male teeners, will accept this one.

Screenplay by David Lang and Robert Presnell Jr. from a story by Virginia Kellogg, rounds up a group of stereotype characters and situations for the cast to enact under Charles Haas' direction. Latter keeps the Samuel Bischoff-David Diamond production going at a pace fast enough to hold overall interest in the familiar doings.

Tom Tyron plays a surly private replacement in the 1st Platoon, Company D, 101st Airborne Inf. Division, whose association with an understanding lieutenant, well played by Jan Merlin, and other heroes of the group brings about a change of character. The platoon's Normandy D-Day mission to take and hold a bridge. In trying to make its way to the bridge after parachuting into France, the group valiantly fights its way through all sorts of Nazi opposition, even rescues a French girl, Jacqueline Beer, and takes her along on the heroic junket.

Cast acquits itself excellently. Rating a nod, In addition to Tyron, Merlin and Miss Beer, are Alvy Moore, Martin Milner, Joe di Reda, Mark Damon, Paul Burke, Pat Conway, Edward G. Robinson, Jr. Ralph Votrian and others.

Lensing by Harry Neumann, art direction, settings, editing and other technical assists handle the physical layout expertly. Harry Sukman's music is okay. Brog.

Loew's Board

member of the board, have been in the forefront in urging Loew's to accept Chesler's $50,000,000 bid. They have faced considerable opposition from prexy Arthur M. Loew and other members of the management team who feel that a restricted release policy of M-G-M old pictures to television would be a more suitable arrangement. If the situation reaches a showdown stage, a vote of the 13-man board will determine the direction the Metro films will take.

Charles C. Moskowitz, v.p., and treasurer of Loew's, has returned from a Florida vacation and will be present for the board meet. Moskowitz, also a member of the board, interrupted his holiday several weeks ago to return to N.Y. to take part in the initial board discussions of the proposed tv deals.

Arthur Loew and other key Loew's executives, meanwhile, have been studying the Chesler proposition. All details have been committed to paper and frequent talks took place during last week between representatives of Loew's and Chesler.

Wall Street sources continue bullish on the chances of the deal going through. Actual bidder is Chesler's Ridgeway Corp., a corporate shell in a hefty cash position which resulted from its sale of the physical assets of the Campbell, Wyant & Cannon Foundry Co.

SPECS' POWERLESS STEERING

'We Love Hits—Anybody's': NBC

In view of present-day network sensitivities on so-called program-talent "monopoly," NBC-TV is making a point of hammering home board chairman Pat Weaver's sentiments expressed at the recent annual meeting of the Association of National Advertisers, to wit:

" . . . we should use tv to get as many groups as possible building shows—it is that tough a medium—and our stated policy is that we want more, not fewer groups, producing programs, whether they are agency, client, management company, star company, independent company—we don't care. Our variations run the entire gamut. For instance, we have stars who won't speak to anybody including us. We have stars working in our packages; our stars working in agency packages; stars that the agencies control, and so on.

"We love hits. We don't care whose they are. We just love hits."

Collingwood Revelations Stir Up An AFTRA Anti-AWARE Tempest

A high degree of anti-AWARE sentiment among members of the N. Y. branch of American Federation of Television-Radio Artists is given in some quarters as the reason why some thesps who were not too long ago closely associated with AWARE have allowed themselves to run for national office on the "coalition" anti-AWARE slate. Feelings became feverish over the weekend as the result of an article in AFTRA's "Stand By" bulletin and a subsequent N. Y. newspaper report.

Charles Collingwood, as prexy of the local AFTRA board and as a man who last December successfully opposed the AWARE-allied slate, declared in "Stand By" that "a newly elected group of officers" was singled out by AWARE for a working-over. He said that "in at least two cases this campaign has had some success." Orson Bean and John Henry Faulk, who became 1st and 2d veep, respectively, on Collingwood's "middle-of-the-road" slate, were attacked in an AWARE bulletin shortly after their election. Word was out that Collingwood and Faulk, both of whom work for CBS, had some troubled moments afterwards. Now everything seems to be back to normal, but not before one had "appearances on shows cancelled" and the other suffered a decline in the number of his sponsors.

Collingwood, whose words were picked up in the N. Y. Post on Friday (25), went on to say: "I'd like to think that the character and record of these men under assault is such that, in the end, these efforts to ruin their careers will fail. But the ugly thing is that they should be subjected to this kind of thing at all. For it seems crystal clear that the motive for this offensive is not the purifi-

'TODAY'S' BONANZA

Grove Labs, BC Remedies Buy $1,100,000 Worth

NBC's "Today" enriched its coffers this week by a $1,100,000 gross sales of 273 participations to two drug advertisers. Grove Laboratories, for its Fitch Shampoo and 4-Way Cold Tablets, pitched in $700,000 for 124 participations started this week and running through next April, while BC Remedies bought up a total of 149 spots on "Today's" eastern network starting Aug. 1 at the rate of three a week.

Harry B. Cohen agency placed the business for Grove; N. W. Ayer agented the BC deal.

4-Star, CBS-TV In Love Again As 'Zane Grey' Is Set

Dick Powell and his Four Star Films have patched up their feud with CBS-TV. The feud started when the network bounced "Four Star Playhouse" to make way for the 90-minute "Playhouse 90" on Thursday nights, and Powell, on behalf of Four Star, let loose a public yowl about monopoly. Now, however, Four Star has set a new Zane Grey filmed series with General Foods, which has placed it on Columbia as the "Our Miss Brooks" replacement for the fall, so Powell is presumably mollified.

Powell, who's partnered in Four Star with Charles Boyer, David Niven and William Cruikshank, will narrate the new series, all westerns based on Gray's stories and novels. Show goes into the "Brooks" 8:30 slot Friday nights starting in the fall. Purchase of the show by General Foods (via Benton & Bowles) fully resolves the company's CBS-TV nighttime status for the fall, since the company picked up "The West Point Story," another indie vidpix entry (Ziv) for its 8 p.m. Friday spot as the "Mama" replacement. It still has another program buy to make to fill the Sunday 7 p.m. time period it purchased on NBC-TV.

Wrap Up Kleenex For Danny Thomas

Danny Thomas' "Make Room for Daddy," which lost both its clients this season on ABC-TV, has latched onto one new alternate-week sponsor, Kleenex and Delsey Tissues, out of the Celluton Division of Kimberly-Clark Corp. Kleenex will take alternate weeks of the show starting in the fall, when it moves into its new Monday at 8 time slot. Kleenex deal set via Foote, Cone & Belding.

Thomas' two sponsors for the past couple of seasons were Dodge and American Tobacco (Pall Mall), with Dodge ankling the show to pour more coin into Lawrence Welk (same network) and Pall Mall reportedly unhappy with an earlier time slot than the current Tuesday at 9. There's a good chance, though, that Pall Mall will have a change of heart and decide to stick with the comedy series. It's reported that a final decision on the reconsideration will be made when American Tobacco prexy Paul Hahn returns from Europe in a couple of weeks. A yes from Pall Mall would return the show to SRO status, what with the new Kleenex deal.

L & M's Co-Sponsorship Deal on Bergen TV Show

L&M Filters, recently cut off from the parent Chesterfield brand insofar as advertising is concerned via the transfer of the filter biz to Dancer - Fitzgerald-Sample agency (see separate story for this week's Chesterfield switch from Cunningham & Walsh to McCann-Erickson), has made its first independent program buy. Ciggie outfit has picked up half of the Edgar Bergen quizzer, "Do You Trust Your Wife?"

L&M starts alternate-week sponsorship of the Don Fedderson package on June 5, with Frigidaire Division of General Motors continuing with skip-week exposure instead of every week as heretofore.

90-MIN. PIONEERS ON CROSSROADS

By GEORGE ROSEN

The tv networks, particularly NBC, are finding out the hard way that they've been putting too much reliance on automotive sponsorship coin to keep the spectaculars in business. The auto market being what it is, which translates itself into some drastic sales dips and serious cutbacks, Detroit & Co. has been beating a hasty retreat on lavish tv spending (in sharp contrast to their No. 1 status this past season).

Whether or not NBC will be able to invite other sponsors in to pick up the slack may well determine the status of the specs as either a permanent pattern in the scheme of tv programming or scrapped in a return to the established half-hour and 60-minute formula.

With perhaps the single exception of RCA, the parent company of NBC, the automakers practically stood alone among all facets of big industry in embracing the new ambitious concept of big-big-big programming as evolved by NBC and later taken up by CBS via its Saturday night "Ford Star Jubilee." On the other hand, the General Foods', the Procter & Gambles, etc., have wanted no part of them, content with the old established 30-minute format.

While NBC has encountered a modicum of success in inviting such lower-level sponsorship coin as Sunbeam, Maybelline and a couple of others in embracing the specs, by and large it's been the auto companies who have displayed the major courage in lending economic support to what unquestionably remains as tv's most prominent and distinguished bid to brighten up the spectrum.

CBS-TV's "Ford Star Jubilee" is in the bag for another semester (this representing the network's sole effort thus far in the spec area), but the situation at NBC is something else again. Ford has pulled out of the Monday night "Producers' Showcase" series, leaving its co-sponsor, RCA holding the bag. Same situation pertains to the upcoming Friday night one-a-month specs on NBC, with only RCA-Whirlpool signing up for the series.

NBC's high hopes of bringing Plymouth into the Monday-Friday specs as Ford's replacement were dashed, even after board chairman Pat Weaver had gotten a tentative okay from the Detroit brass. Plymouth reversed itself within 24 hours. Reason: cutback. Had the inflationary market continued, NBC could probably have had its choice among Plymouth, Buick or Pontiac. But all three companies are taking a scram, Buick pulling out of Jackie Gleason and Pontiac tossing over "Playwrights '56."

Oldsmobile will be back for the Saturday night NBC-TV specs, but only committed to a handful of special attractions, such as the Esther Williams, swim show, etc. General Motors is staying with the "Wide Wide World" Sunday specials, but don't look for those auxiliary Motoramas either hitting the road or on tv. They're off next year and for the same reason—budgetary cutbacks.

GE UPS SPONSORSHIP ON 'WB PRESENTS'

General Electric has upped from quarter to half-sponsorship to ABC-TV's "Warner Bros. Presents" via full support to the alternate-week "Cheyenne" slot. The net is still seeking a sponsor for the skip-week Warner's dramatic anthology.

Next season, under the new half-sponsorship arrangement, lamp, houseware and radio set divisions will get the "Cheyenne" plugging for GE, which this year bankrolled only a half-hour every other week of the hour-long Tuesday night show. Deal was set through both BBDO and Gray.

David Davidson Blasts 'Chiseling' Tactics of TV Networks, Agency 'Hucksters' in Handling Writers

By DAVE KAUFMAN

Hollywood, May 29.

David Davidson, one of television's top writers, accuses the tv networks in N. Y. and Madison avenue "hucksters" of "chiseling" practices against vidscripters, and charges some writers are owed thousands of dollars for teledramas already seen on tv. Davidson is currently working on a screenplay for Metro.

Davidson said the prices paid tv writers in Gotham are "ridiculous," and added on top of this the pay isn't forthcoming even when the work is done. He cited as an example his "The President," telecast on Alcoa Playhouse, on NBC, on May 13. "I wrote the first draft last January, but I haven't received a nickel for it yet. They first offered me $3,000; I demanded $3,500; and I had to go on strike for a month to get $3,500 for a play seen by 25,000,000, but I haven't been paid yet," he said bitterly. Webs owe some writers as much as $10,000 to $12,000, he added.

'Asked why the delay in pay, he replied "the freshman lawyers at both networks (CBS and NBC) are out to make a good impression, so they're busy searching for loopholes in the writers' contracts. They're trying to arrange it so the networks will get a piece of the price on any teleplay sold to movies, and they seek exclusivity. And the accountants say they are busy and can't seem to get to it.

"TV hasn't yet learned how to bargain for writers. TV doesn't like its writers. It feels tv would be a great operation if you could just eliminate the writer, and have scripts come out from an IBM machine. If in talking terms with a network you casually mention a figure like $5,000, they shudder. They don't realize it now takes two to three months to turn out a good script.

"As far as I know, the highest amount paid in N. Y. is to Reginald Rose, who draws $4,000 a script on one show. My top is $3,500. They demand blockbusters at bargain prices. At one place I was offered $2,500 and held out for $3,500; I got it, but only after a seven-week delay.

"Here in Hollywood it's entirely

Gleason as Priest

Hollywood, May 29.

Jackie Gleason may play the part of a priest in "The Edge of Heaven," on CBS-TV's new "Playhouse 90" series. Show's producer, Martin Manulis, has signed A. J. Russell to script the property and it's to be tailored for the comedian. Russell writes Gleason's "The Honeymooners" series on CBS.

If the comedian okays the script, the show would originate from Hollywood, and he probably would have a couple of his weekly hour-long variety shows emanate from the Coast while working on the drama.

Gleason has essayed serious roles previously, starring in at least two Studio One dramas on CBS.

Mull Day & Date World Preem Of Danny Kaye TV'er

CBS-TV is toying with the idea of a "simultaneous world showing" on television of the filmed Danny Kaye world tour on behalf of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, which will open the "See It Now"" season on the network on Oct. 1. Idea would be to distribute prints of the film through the UN to every country Kaye visited which has television for a mass world showing of the film via tv on that date. For countries without television, idea would be to put the soundtrack on radio.

Language isn't considered a problem for the international day-and-date showing, since the film involves such scenes as Kaye leading the Israeli Philharmonic or imitating an Israeli pantomimist, singing "Minnie the Moocher" with a Turkish audience or dancing with Yugoslavian children. Film won't be straight entertainment, either, since much of it will be devoted to footage showing how UNICEF has cleaned up trachoma in North Africa, polio in Italy and spastics in Yugoslavia. Ed Murrow-Fred Friendly "See It" time is planning to edit the 200,000 feet in a pattern alternating the entertainment with the "message."

It isn't determined yet whether the film will be used as a 90-minute one-shot or a two-parter of 60 minutes each. All coin involved in the tv showings—that is Murrow & Friendly's take and Kaye's own fee—will go to UNICEF. Thus, Kaye's first major tv appearance will be a "benefit," so to speak, all the more startling since Kaye is reported to have turned down $250,000 for a spectacular appearance recently.

'Bloomer Girl' Caught With Trendex Down

CBS-TV is making a habit of knocking off those NBC spectaculars in the overnight Trendexes. Latest casualty is Monday night's (28) "Producers' Showcase" version of "Bloomer Girl," which took a pasting from Columbia, with the 8 to 9:30 average showing CBS with a 21.7 and the spec with a 13.2. ABC averaged 4.7.

Half-hour breakdowns gave "Bloomer" a 12.9, "Burns & Allen" (CBS) a 13.7 and "TV Reader's Digest" (ABC) a 6.4 at 8; "Bloomer" 14.5, "Godfrey's Talent Scouts" 21.2 and "Voice of Firestone" 3.7 at 8:30; and "Bloomer" 12.3, "I Love Lucy" 28.6 and "Film Fair" 3.2 at 9.

Vic Damone Series To Sub 'Dec. Bride'

Last-minute flurry of summer replacements were set this week by CBS-TV, chief among them a Vic Damone musical stanza as the "December Bride" summer speller and reruns from the NBC-TV "Loretta Young Show" with Gene Raymond cut in as host as a late-summer sub for "Mama" before that gives way for the new "West Point Story."

Damone series, in the last stages of finalization, would give CBS a full Monday night hour (9-10) of new shows, since neither "I Love Lucy" nor "Bride" will use reruns, though both are filmed series. The new Charles Farrell segment rides for "Lucy" as a film entry, with Damone filling the other half-hour live. The Loretta Young series will consist of films which did not star Miss Young on NBC, and since Raymond will host the show, all trace of identity to the network showcaser except the Lewislor screen credit will be erased. This starts Aug. 3 in the Friday at 8 slot for eight weeks. At 8:30, "Our Miss Brooks" uses reruns as its swansong.

Other replacements are "Undercurrent," series of old MCA half-hour films, for "The Lineup" Fridays at 10, starting June 92, and another film anthology rerun series for Red Skelton on Tuesdays at 9:30.

IT'S NBC-TV VS. FILM SYNDICATORS IN OPENING SALVO OF BATTLE ROYAL

NBC flatly accused the film syndicators and other allied interests of spearheading the attack on network television and seeking to destroy network programming and replacing it with "a continuing flow of stale and stereotyped film product." In a brief submitted to the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce this week, NBC launched its first counteroffensive against charges of monopolistic practices by the networks with a "naming names" manifesto that also sought to discredit previous testimony against the webs by Richard C. Moore, KTTV, Los Angeles, president, by charging he was acting as representative for and was financed by a group of film syndicators.

The NBC charges brought instant replies from the film syndicators, who declared the charge of a link with Moore is "an insult" and that the suggestion that they seek destruction of the network structure is "an absurdity tantamount to stating that the film companies seek to commit economic suicide." Moore also replied that KTTV acted on its own "and on its own expense" and stated that his huddles with the film outfits, "which have been referred to often in the trade press, seem sinister to NBC, which apparently expected that the victims of its restraints should lick their wounds separately, privately and passively."

The NBC brief, submitted at the request of the Committee as a comment on Moore's recent testimony attacking network option and must-buy practices, came on the eve of testimony by the film companies before the FCC's Network Study (Barrow) Committee in Washington. The film companies, which had been planning to announce the organization of the Assn. of Television Film Distributors, a new industry association, incorporated the announcement in their reply to the NBC charges and will testify tomorrow (Thurs.) under their new ATFD banner. The testimony, in spite of the NBC barrage, is expected to be moderate in its approach to the network problem.

'Topper's' Topper

General Foods purchase of the "Topper" series for a summer NBC-TV run in the food firm's newly acquired Sunday at 7 time slot sets some sort of record for the Bernard Schubert series. By playing NBC-TV over the summer, the same "Topper" films will have received exposure on all three networks within the past two years. It'll also be the first series to have a network third-run status.

Series started on CBS-TV for Camel's in the '54-'55 season, running in a Friday-at-8:30 time slot. Then it was set on ABC-TV last fall as a re-run entry Mondays at 7:30, with Standard Brands sponsoring on alternate weeks. Now comes the third run, with GF picking up 17 of the original pix for Sunday starting June 10.

'Why Ampex When We Got Our Own Color Tape' Folsom Retorts

In categorically denying that RCA "has any interest directly or indirectly" in the Ampex television tape recorder, Frank M. Folsom, president of the Radio Corp. of America, discloses that his company's own color tape device has been utilized at NBC for almost a year. "Since our sights are dominantly on color television," says Folsom, "that is our objective and we have been developing our own color-tape."

Folsom, while attending the NARTB convention in Chicago in May, purchased three of the Ampex machines but "other than those three pieces of equipment which we bought like any other customer interested in a new device we have no other interest in Ampex," says he.

NIX VIVIEN KELLEMS BID FOR EQUAL TIME

Bridgeport, May 29.

WICC, Bridgeport, has rejected the bid of Vivien Kellems, now seeking the Republican nomination for the U. S. Senate, for free time equal to that Sen. Bush has used in his reports from Washington since July 5, 1955.

In announcing the turn down, Philip Merryman, station's general manager, contended that "Miss Kellems' demand for a free ride for her candidacy is apparently based on the misapprehension that Senator Bush has been using time on our station to campaign for the Senate since last July. In fact, his broadcasts have been reports of his stewardship in Washington to the people who elected him."

MacDonald to CBS Sports As Derr's Replacement

James A. MacDonald Sr. has been named executive radio producer for CBS Sports, replacing John Derr, who recently ankled the post to freelance as announcer-producer. MacDonald, like several other top network sports execs, is out of the N. W. Ayer camp, where he coproduced regional and national pro football telecasts for Ayer oil clients.

MacDonald checks in June 11, reporting to Bill MacPhail, CBS director of sports.

Chet Huntley's Local TV'er

Chet Huntley, NBC-TV newsman out of the Coast who's been getting a national buildup via subbing for John Cameron Swayze and his own Sunday afternoon "Outlook," gets his first New York show via the network's WRCA-TV flagship. He'll take over the new "Saturday News Special," a 6:45-7 p.m. slice starting June 9.

So far the segment is slated as a sustainer.

CBS Radio Still Going Hot; Three New Clients In

CBS Radio, sparked by Colgate's purchase of $1,500,000 of daytime radio on the web last week, continues to roll new sponsor coin into its daytime coffers. Web signed on three new sponsors last week, one for the first time on CBS, another returning after 20 years and a third in an expansion of its lineup.

Newcomer is Stanback Co., which is making its largest network radio expenditure to date in a pickup of three five-minute segments a week. Drug outfit will sponsor Galen Drake in Monday-Wednesday-Friday capsules at 3:30-3:35. Returning to the web for the first time since 1937, when it sponsored "Dining With George Rector," is Phillips Packing Co., which picks up three five-minute portions of the "Wendy Warren With the News" strip. Expanding is Sleep-Eze, which having first sponsored Drake and "Young Dr. Malone," has bought in on "Road of Life" and "Romance of Helen Trent," giving it a total of seven segments of seven and a half minutes each every two weeks.

New business, including Colgate's, comes on the heels of a rash of Arthur Godfrey morning buys and Art Linkletter afternoon simulcast deals. Add to that renewals on the radio-tv side from both Lipton's Tea and Toni for the Godfrey "Talent Scouts," which came through last week.

'MARKO' A LOTTERY

FCC Cautions Against Transmission of TV Program

Washington, May 29.

Departing from usual policy of issuing no declaratory rulings, the FCC last week advised the owners of "Play Marko" that the tv program is a lottery and that its transmission over the air would be against the law.

The show was withdrawn last year by KTLA-TV in Los Angeles when the Commission ordered the station to show cause why a "cease and desist" order should not be issued on the ground the program was found to be a lottery. Other stations later cancelled the show or refused to carry out contracts with The Caples Co., Chicago, the owners.

The Commission advised Caples that one element of the program, which requires attendance at a retail store to win a prize, is similar to the "Bank Night" schemes which were found by a majority of courts to be a lottery

SAG Rejects AFTRA 1-Card Bid

Screen Actors Guild flatly rejected an offer by American Federation of Television & Radio Artists to merge the two thesp unions at their joint Coast meeting a fortnight back. According to an AFTRA spokesman, only thing that seems to remain to be discussed when the groups meet again in N. Y. the middle of June is disposition of taped commercials.

AFTRA and SAG prior to this week each maintained that "nothing happened" during their Coast talks, but it is reported that AFTRA is preparing a full report to its membership on the two-day meeting. AFTRA will tell its members that it approached the guild and simply declared that it was ready to merge into a one-card union with no reservations. When this was rejected AFTRA proposed a looser working arrangement to allow both unions to engage jointly in all contract negotiations.

AFTRA's one-card hopes, which the N. Y. local is supporting, are a result of the growing jurisdictional hassles between the two unions. The forthcoming N. Y. powwow might erupt with squabbling over jurisdiction of taped shows. AFTRA sees only taped commercials in dispute. Because of its Clarification Agreement with the networks, permitting it to negotiate on contracts for taped shows, AFTRA doesn't figure on any trouble with deciding jurisdiction on programs proper. However, SAG has been unhappy with the Clarification since it was first written several weeks ago.

SAG national exec secretary John L. Dale stated: "It's correct that after study of all merger propositions the Guild believes that dangers and weaknesses . . . in a merger are greater than the benefits . . . but the Guild has a keen interest in continuing close cooperation with AFTRA . . . where our contract fields come close, while retaining control in the basic field where our primary interests lie.

"We feel, as always, that the existing federation of actors' unions should be strengthened, always maintaining complete autonomy of present branches, and work out a better system of membership card interchangeability."

Stanton, Bricker Go at It Again In Running Feud on Network Control

Sen. John W. Bricker and CBS prez Frank Stanton continued their running feud over Government control of networks last week in a public exchange of letters that saw Sen. Bricker denying he wants the networks regulated as public utilities and Stanton refusing to take him at his word.

Exchange started as a result of Stanton's speech the week before to the American Marketing Assn., in which he called Sen. Bricker a "20th Century King Canut ready to tell the electronic signals to turn back at the edge of town." Bricker wrote to Stanton stating that "your speech implies I propose Federal regulation of networks as a means to put them out of business," but "nothing could be further from the truth. I am an ardent advocate of freedom from regulation except when it is proved such regulation is in the public interest. . . . However, the use to which the public airwaves is put assuredly is a matter of public interest."

Sen. Bricker denied he ever proposed regulation of the networks as public utilities, pointing out that stations are regulated by the FCC, but not as a public utility "nor does the FCC attempt to decide rates, as is done in the case of a public utility." he referred to the "anomalous" position of the FCC in finding itself "having some directive control over individual stations but no licensing authority over what is agreed is the all-important network operation."

Sen. Bricker concluded that "freedom of the networks from regulation has brought about an

JESS OPPENHEIMER'S '10 COMMANDMENTS'

NBC-TV has assigned Jess Oppenheimer to produce a new color film series based on the Ten Commandments, his first project for the web since quitting as producer of "I Love Lucy" to join the network. Series, which will clothe each commandment in a modern-dress adaptation, will be turned out for the fall by Oppenheimer's Burlingame Productions on the Coast.

Oppenheimer, according to Tom McAvity, veep over the tv network, will ask top writers like Ernest Hemingway, William Faulkner and J. P. Marquand, to create original stories based on the Commandments for telefilm adaptation.

Sponsors Like Winning Ball Clubs, So Pirates Get Weekend Away Slots

Pittsburgh, May 29.

Upswing in the fortunes of the Pittsburgh Pirates in the National League race has resulted in still another dividend, the sale of tv rights to nine away-from-home weekend games. Deal was just closed few days ago, more than a month after season opened.

Plymouth and Atlantic Refining, co-sponsors with Braun Baking Co. of radio broadcasts on Pirates, are picking up the tab along with Otto Milk outfit, and KDKA-TV will be the outlet, which means flock of Sunday afternoon sponsors will have to be preempted eight times during the season. The other game, in September, will be on Saturday.

With Pirates hugging the National League cellar past few seasons, there had been little sponsor interest in them, and even so little likelihood of getting time on KDKA-TV, the only VHFer in this big market, but club's steady onslaught on the first division changed that picture immediately. Plymouth and Atlantic, previously uninterested, taking cognizance of the public response, decided to go for the bundle.

Pact Allen, Bullock To Script 'Stanley'

Max Liebman has signed on Ray Allen and Harvey Bullock as scripters of his new Buddy Hackett comedy series, "Stanley," which will ride the Monday 8:30 slot on NBC-TV in the fall under Helene Curtis-Pall Mall auspices. They're the first regular scripters assigned to the show.

Allen & Bullock checked off the Robert Q. Lewis daytimer

O'Neill, NBC Dicker Chi TV Origination

Chicago, May 29.

While in New York last week, Don McNeill, headman of ABC's "Breakfast Club," set a tentative deal with NBC-TV to host a lunchtime show which would emanate daily from the top floor of Chi's 41-story Prudential Bldg. Project is contingent upon the network's ability to make the necessary arrangements with the Prudential management and the Stouffer restuarant chain which operates the Top O' the Rock lounge where the daytimer would be located.

There's an obstacle in the negotiations with the eatery management in that the audience participation show is earmarked for the fall in either the 11 or the 11:30 a.m. half-hour which could interfere with the luncheon trade. That's one of the several kinks still to be ironed out. Another is the possible client conflict problem

Pall Mall and Simoniz Still Like 'Big Story'

Pall Mall and Simoniz have taken the iffy status out of "Big Story" for next fall by renewing the series for 26 weeks starting Sept. 7. Both sponsors will be back for the Friday night half-hour on NBC-TV, but whether it will be in the same 9 p. m. time is still undecided, waiting on a possible shift of the new "On Trial" series from 9:30 into the 9 p. m. slot.

Show goes off the air July 6 for the customary eight-week summer hiatus, returning Sept. 7. SSC&B set the renewal for both sponsors.

Cabinet Post For B'caster Seaton

Washington, May 29.

A television station operator will soon be a member of the Cabinet, with expected confirmation of the President's appointment of Fred A. Seaton, White House aide, as Secretary of Interior. Seaton, a former Senator, is head of KHAS and KHAS-TV in Hastings, Nebr., and holds interests in radio stations KGGF in Coffeyville, Kan., and KMAN in Manhattan, Kan. Seaton also owns a chain of newspapers.

Seaton will be the second Cabinet member in recent years from the broadcasting industry. President Truman's Secretary of Commerce, Charles Sawyer, has controlling interests in Ohio and Kentucky stations.

COMEDY SITUATION STILL GOOD

BBC-TV a Foreign Agent?

London, May 29.

BBC-TV is being taken to task by the London Evening Standard for giving screen time to a series of American propaganda films made by NBC. These, according to a Standard diarist, "are designed to sell the American people to the English—and any other country that wants to look. The plan is to endear the Americans to us by presenting some of their problems.

"It is bad enough," the writer comments, "that the BBC should consider it necessary to buy shows from another country. But to become propaganda agents for a foreign broadcasting service is far worse. In this case it is the BBC who have been bought" he adds.

Ch'field Blows $12,000,000 Billings McC-Erickson's Way in Agency Shift

Loss of the $12,000,000 Chesterfield billings by Cunningham & Walsh, within a few weeks after C&W also blew $4,000,000 in Liggett & Myers' L&M product, puts the agency in a spot on billings. It's estimated that the total Liggett Myers account represented about 50% of the agency's biz.

Falling heir to the Chesterfield biz is McCann-Erickson, with the additional billings putting that agency well over the $200,000,000 mark in McC-E's onward-and-upward surge into the year's "dream agency" status. Although only a week ago Cunningham & Walsh had named a new radio-tv veepee—Edward H. Mahoney — who was brought over from Benton & Bowles, the Chesterfield defection didn't come as a particular surprise, since the jockeying among agencies for the biz had been going on for some time. The L&M filter cig account went to Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample.

Of the total $16,000,000 Liggett & Myers biz, about 75% represents tv billings, siphoned chiefly into sponsorship of "Dragnet," "Gunsmoke" and "Warner Bros. Presents," and about $2,000,000 in tv spot billings.

Whether or not McCann-Erickson will revamp the tv spending is still to be determined. Meanwhile, Terry Clyne, McC-E's veepee overseeing the tv operation, will become managing officer of the Chesterfield account. (Emerson Foote takes over Bulova account from Clyne with William Berchtold moving in from Chi office as administrative veepee.)

Cunningham & Walsh still has Eversharp and a few other accounts, but the Liggett & Myers biz was its major plus.

'Queen' Rakes 'Em In

NBC-TV's high ridin' "Queen for a Day" is continuing as one of the web's top daytime lures. New business booked includes Borden's, latter having dropped "Date With Life" on the same network to come aboard "Queen" twice weekly starting June 29.

Procter & Gamble, already repped on the show triply, is taking a pair of additional positions weekly.

Triangle NH Buy For $5,400,000 To Pepper Conn. TV

Hartford, May 29.

Sale of WNHC-TV, New Haven, to Triangle Publication Co., is expected to hasten the sale of two local UHF'ers to NBC and CBS. Friday (26) Aldo De Dominicis, treasurer of the Elm City Broadcasting Co., announced the sale of the VHF'er and its AM sister station for $5,400,000.

WNHC-TV has been the main stumbling block in the sale of WGTH-TV here to CBS and of WKNB-TV, West Hartford, to NBC. In both cases FCC has ordered hearings on the petition of the WNHC-TV owners.

According to De Dominicis, the petitions will continue until the sale of WNHC-TV and its sister station is approved and then may be dropped. Any further appeal against the sale of the local UHF'rs will be up to the new owners.

Sale of the Elm City Broadcasting properties does not include WHAY in next door New Britain. A prehearing FCC conference skedded for Saturday (26) on the WKNB-TV transfer to NBC was postponed until June 8 at the request of Elm City Broadcasting, which gave as reasons the impending sale of the New Haven VHF'r. A similar prehearing conference on the transfer of WGTH-TV to CBS scheduled for today (Tues.) is expected to be delayed at the request of Elm City for the same reasons.

Last Monday (21) CBS petitioned the FCC to cancel the WGTH hearings and approve the station's purchase by the network. Elm City had protested the assignment of two hearing examiners to the case. Earlier the Commission had sanctioned the sale to CBS.

Both WGTH-TV and WKNB-TV

300G Suit Rap Vs. 'Let's Take Trip'

Suit for $300,000 has been filed against CBS-TV in N. Y. Supreme Court alleging theft of the idea for the "Let's Take a Trip" show. Suit was filed by Esther Friedman, also known as Esther Plan, who states she furnished the idea and format for the show at CBS-TV's request in 1948.

Network promised to pay for value received, Miss Friedman alleges, but instead appropriated the idea for its own use and without payment and started running "Let's Take a Trip" in April of 1955.

NC&K's Fat Chunk Of Lambert-Hudnut Biz

Norman, Craig & Kummel has grabbed off some new drug-cosmetic billings in the form of four new products out of the Lambert-Hudnut division of the Warner-Lambert Pharmaceutical Co. Since the products aren't on the market yet, final budgets aren't set, but are expected to be in excess of $1,000,000. Television will figure large in expenditures on the new products. NC&K also took over the Sportsman line of men's toiletries.

Other Warner-Lambert billings are concentrated at Kenyon & Eckhardt and Lambert & Feasley, with this being NC&K's first crack at the company.

Chevy Passing Up Hope's Final TV'er of Season

Chevrolet, in line with a rapid moveout by the automotives from television, has asked out of its regular June 12 "Chevy Show." That's the 8 to 9 NBC-TV slot that was to front-line Bob Hope in the season's Chevy finale.

As result, the network will fill the time with another repeat of its anti-Hitler telementary, "The Twisted Cross."

ONLY 2 SHOWS FEWER IN FALL

By BOB CHANDLER

Those filmed situation comedy shows are more durable than anyone seems to think. In spite of the hullabaloo about the "end of the situation comedy cycle," the fact is that they are just as strong as ever. It's not simply a case of "I Love Lucy" retaining its top status on the rating list either; fact of the matter is that as of now, there will only be two fewer situation comedy shows on the air than this season out of a grand total of 18.

There were six cancellations of the comedy shows at the end of this season. One, "Our Miss Brooks," was a veteran; another, "It's a Great Life," had a two-year span; a third, the live "Ethel & Albert," has been an on-again-off-again affair for several years. The others were one-time losers: the ill-fated Jackie Gleason "Honeymooners," "It's Always Jan" and "Damon Runyon Theatre."

In contrast, however, there are four new comedy shows already scheduled for fall, and the selling season is by no means over. These are Jack Carson's "Johnny Come Lately," the new Buddy Hackett starrer, "Stanley," the new Jeannie Carson show, "Hey Jeannie" and Gale Storm's new entry. "Oh, Susannah." The latter show, incidentally, provides a striking example of the durability of situation comedy. Miss Storm was last seen in "My Little Margie," like "Susannah" out of the Hal Roach Jr. stable. "Margie," after a three-year run, got cancelled, so what happened? Roach has been mopping up on "Margie" reruns; he's got Miss Storm back on the networks with "Susannah," and to complete the picture he's got Charles Farrell, costarred in "Margie," on the air as a summer replacement for "I Love Lucy" in a Palm Springs-located filmed comedy series.

List of returning shows includes "Make Room for Daddy," the Danny Thomas starrer which was axed by its two bankrollers but which has already picked up one new sponsor; "Ozzie & Harriet," which was shared by four sponsors this season, all of whom dropped, but will be back under a single aegis, Eastman Kodak; "Private Secretary" as the continuing alternate to Jack Benny for American Tobacco; Burns & Allen, another longrunner; "Lucy" and "December Bride" as a Monday night CBS pairing; Phil Silvers army show, the hit of this past season; "Father Knows Best," the sole survivor of a Scott Paper cutback in television; "People's Choice," the Jackie Cooper starrer which made it for Borden's in spite of a bad start; the Bob Cummings show, which survived the Groucho Marx Thursday night competition; and the longrunning "Life of Riley."

If there's been any trend that's hurt the comedy shows, it's an indirect one, the new interest in "kid shows," be they costumers or so-called "adult westerns" which stir high moppet interest. Added to last year's "Robin Hood" entry on the costume side are "The Buccaneer" and "Sir Launcelot." Pairing with "Wyatt Earp" are the new "Jim Bowie" and "Zane Grey Theatre" series. Then there's "Circus Boy" and "The West Point Story," all of them aimed mainly at the "family trade," which means the juves.

K&E Goes Int'l

Appointment of Robert Cole, veepee of Kenyon & Eckhardt as director of the agency's newly-organized international division has been announced.

The new division, which will have its headquarters in New York, will provide broad advertising and marketing services to meet the growing international requirements of K & E clients, according to Cole. The first office in K & E's international operation will be opened in Mexico City June 1.

NBC's Got a Slight Edge Over CBS on Live Summer TV Entries But Pix Repeats Get Major Play

NBC-TV looks to have a slight edge over CBS-TV in the programming of live pinchhitting and "as is" shows over the summer stretch. But save for this factor, both networks are in there pitching for the dubious if perhaps inevitable honor of slipping in reruns of the same vidpix series or inserting replays of skeins that have "had it" as network entries and are now available for hot weather relief duty. (CBS' summer sked was lined up in the last issue.) That some new titles appear in the bannering of summertime telepixers isn't gonna fool viewers—they'll find out soon enough that these new labels merely cover the old ones.

Highlighting NBC's mercury-on-the-rise agenda on the live side are singers and maestri-virtuosi. There's still a pretty fair sked of the full hour dramatics plus a brand new series (Kaiser's) in this bracket.

Here's how the network's summer schedule shapes, give or take a couple of minor alterations:

Sunday: "It's a Great Life" is through via the Chrysler guillotine and "Topper" pix get a new lease under General Foods which has the slot for next season. "Frontier" films stay, with some reruns and some new product. "NBC Comedy Hour" will bid for an "all new" tag starting June 17, due principally to the introduction of Steve Allen as the emcee, with retitling to bear the Allen name. Goodyear-Alcoa dramas stay. Loretta Young pix have their final '55-'56 fling June 24 with replacement not yet set. Sunday specs are stet.

Kovacs Subs Caesar

Monday: "News Caravan" crossboarder rides through. Ernie Kovacs will take "Caesar's Hour" starting July 2, Caesar switching to Saturday night in the fall. "Medic" ended its two-season run in the 9 o'clock spot Monday (28) and reruns go in. (No word as to where will be spotted next season.) "Robert Montgomery Presents" works itself into the "Summer Theatre" edition. "Producers' Showcase" rides through every four weeks.

Tuesday: Dinah Shore rides at 7:30 to July 10, then Snooky Lanson heads up her Tuesday-Thursday quarter-hours until end of July, when Frankie Carle occupies the Tuesday segment (Lanson prevailing on Thursday). In the 8 to 9 slot (for Milton Berle, Martha

Love That 'Lucy'

Hollywood, May 29.

"I Love Lucy," the Desi Arnaz-Lucille Ball top-rated situation comedy series, has been renewed for another semester by Procter & Gamble and General Foods, it's revealed by producer-star Arnaz.

Series will begin its sixth season in the fall, with Bob Hope set as the first guester when it returns in October.

Arnaz and CBS-TV had considered switching the show to a once-a-month, hour-long format, but decided to let well enough alone and continue with the half-hour "Lucy."

CBS Mfg. Still In State of Flux; Six Alternatives

There's still no decision at CBC Inc. on the future of the CBS-Columbia set-manufacturing arm, though prexy Frank Stanton indicated last week in a memo to all divisions that things won't continue as they are. Stanton said that six separate alternatives are being considered for the subsidiary, but that no decision had been reached on any of them.

The six alternatives are "merger with or acquisition of other television receiver manufacturing companies"; greater concentration on special types of sets such as color and "small-screen black and white portable" units; expansion of activities through the acquisition of new and modern facilities in place of the present Long Island City (N Y.) plant; subcontracting the manufacture of chassis to other companies; halting operations altogether and operating on a minimum basis until the situation clarifies."

All of these are possibilities, he said, but "no decision among any of these alternatives has been reached." He referred to a "significant drop in unit as well as dollar sales throughout the industry" and said "the imminence of color on the one hand and the current emphasis on low-priced portable black and white sets on the other make it imperative to reexamine the future of television receiver manufacturing. As a result, we, along with many other manufacturing units in the industry—particularly the smaller units who generally feel a drop in consumer demand most severely — have found it desirable to reappraise the future. We have set as our immediate objective getting our house

LEVER'S ALTERNATE RIDE ON TV 'TRAIL'

Lever Bros. has added some more coin to its nighttime expenditures on NBC-TV, buying in on half of the new Friday night "On Trial" Joseph Cotten starrer. Lever, which will share the show alternate Fridays at 9:30 with Campbell Soups, replaces Pond's-Chesebrough, which had dropped out of the current "Star Stage."

Deal is Lever's second new NBC-TV buy, since the company just a couple of weeks back had signed for alternate-week sponsorship of the new "Sir Launcelot" series on Monday nights. Lever also bankrolls "Lux Video Theatre" and has half of "Big Town," but it hasn't yet decided whether it will be back for the Mark Stevens starrer.

Wrigley May Axe Autry TV'er, Too

Chicago, May 29.

Apparently the Wrigley gum firm is cutting all ties with cowboy star Gene Autry, who's carried its radio-tv brand these many years. Autry's CBS Sunday night radio show has already bitten the dust after 17 years under the Wrigley banner. And now it's doubtful that the Chi-based gum outfit will renew Autry's Flying A-produced films series when the contract for the Saturday afternoon CBS-TV show ends in July.

If the final Wrigley decision is negative on the series it's sponsored since it's inception, one of the factors is believed to be CBS-TV's prodding that it expand its station lineup.

Meanwhile, the Chi CBS programmers and the Ruthrauff & Ryan agency which handles Wrigley's radio biz are whipping up formats for the Pat Buttrom vehicle which goes out on CBS radio in a couple of weeks as a replacement for the defunct Autry show. It's still not decided whether the Buttram program, to originate from the Windy City, will be a weekly half-hour or a 15-minute strip.

British Com'l TV's Program Rift; A-R and ATV Go Separate Ways

By HAROLD MYERS

London, May 29.

The networking rift between Associated-Rediffusion and Associated TeleVision on an exchange of programs on the London and Birmingham commercial outlets, is now complete. First news of the split was given in VARIETY April 25, but was subsequently denied by ATV execs.

In the intervening weeks a series of meetings between the commercial programmers have failed to resolve the differences, and the existing network agreement will terminate on June 4. Thereafter they go their own ways and have to provide their own programming. There will, however, be one exception. Associated-Rediffusion will take the ATV Birmingham program, "Hit the Limit," and in return will network to ATV "I've Got a Secret."

TV insiders, who are close to the situation, and regret the development, are hopeful that the breach may be healed in the next few weeks. Meantime, the limited technical facilities of a single coaxial line from London through Birmingham to Manchester, present difficulties in arranging a programming reshuffle.

In view of these limitations, networked programs claim priority and if the line is in use for a program exchange between London and the north, it would not be available for use by ATV. They would not, therefore, be able to beam a show direct from London but would have to use local facilities. Either they would have to rely on talent available in the midlands or substitute filmed programs. They will also be in technical difficulties in regard to their Monday night dramas which have been networked on the three commercial outlets. As the drama exchanges between London and Manchester will continue they would need to stage their own plays locally if they wished to continue with the series.

The split has its roots in the price demanded by ATV for its top weekday vaude shows. A-R complained they were being asked to foot a substantial bill for unscripted entertainment which, more often than not, featured familiar performers. A-R contended that they were unable to build large enough audiences with such programs.

As a result, both ATV and A-R are making hurried adjustments to their program schedules to fill the gaps which will be created by the end of networking. As an example, "On the Town" which had hitherto been networked between

Todd Storz Does Things The Big Way; $210,000 In Promotion Giveaways

Omaha, May 29.

Biggest radio or tv giveaway of all time will be kicked off June 7 at two Mid-Continent outlets by prexy Todd Storz. Sum of $105,000 obviously was rigged to top the $100,000 tv program.

Storz, who has had considerable success with treasure hunts, mystery telephone numbers, money searches and lucky house numbers, is going to try his newest gimmick on KOWH in Omaha and WDGY, Minneapolis and St. Paul, simultaneously from June 7 to June 16.

Storz contracted with a national company (unidentified until the contest is over) to underwrite the $210,000, and the company will have a man hide a bank check for $105,000 in each city. If check is found after June 16 deadline, it will be worth $500 in each city.

Stations broadcast two clues per day for entire 10-day period but at different times every day to boost listening auds.

New production has focused considerable attention on Storz, 32, who has built Mid-Continent auds to peak levels. The first year Storz had Mid-Continent, billings totalled $100,000. Today the annual billings exceed $3,000,000, a growth of 3,000%.

Life, Time and Newsweek staffers and photogs were in town past week, preparing articles on youthful exec.

Godfrey's Ayem SRO

Arthur Godfrey's CBS morning radio and tv shows have been restored to SRO status with the pacting of Scott Paper, Simoniz and General Foods to dual radio-tv segments. Purchase by the three advertisers of an additional segment every fourth Friday on radio gives the radio side of the segment, which involves a half-hour more than tv every day and the entire show on Fridays, an SRO status as well. Each bankroller picked up one quarter-hour on tv a week.

Scott buy, via J. Walter Thompson, reverses what first appeared to be video retrenchment by the paper company's new management. Among its initial cancellations had been the Bob Crosby daytimer on CBS-TV.

Rountree 'Press' TV Show Slotted

Washington, May 29.

Martha Rountree, who pioneered in the press conference format for news shows when she co-founded "Meet the Press" 10 years ago, debuts a new type televised press-huddle on NBC July 4. New show, which will be programed into the 8 to 8:30 p.m. Wednesday slot through the summer, moves to 10:30 p.m., Wednesday, with return of fall schedules next September. Corn Products will pick up check for institutional type commercials. C. R. Miller agency inked deal.

Miss Rountree, who will produce show with husband, former New York ad agency exec Oliver Presbrey, was prepared to launch new show, "Press Conference," shortly after she sold her "Meet the Press" interest to co-producer Larry Spivak two and a half years ago. However, clause in sale contract prevented her entry into tv with format resembling "Meet the Press" for two years. Though Miss Rountree contends new format is entirely different, possible legal difficulties made her decide to wait the full contract term. New deal was inked last Friday (25) in New York.

"Press Conference," according to Miss Rountree, will be just that —a "no holds barred" give-and-take between a roomful of reporters and a top drawer, newsworthy subject. Miss Rountree plans to background herself in role of referee, or press adviser to the guest of the day, in much the same way government officials have their aides sitting on sidelines during meetings with press.

Show will accent the free-for-all aspect of capital press conferences, rather than the panel type of show which is standard. Plans are to draw 16 newsmen and women weekly from a pool of top reporters. All reporters will be invited to attend televised press conference, however, and to probe for their own stories in post-show period.

ED REYNOLDS QUITS CBS RADIO FOR AGCY.

Ed Reynolds leaves CBS as manager of radio press June 18 to join Ketchum, McCleod & Grove in the Pittsburgh agency's recently-established New York branch office. He'll handle publicity for the office, concentrating mainly on the Westinghouse Broadcasting Corp. account.

Reynolds has been with CBS for 10 years, moving over to the network from the now defunct Earl Ferris flackery. No replacement is set yet, that awaiting he installation of Jules Dundes as v.p. over sales promotion, advertising and press info on June 18. Reynolds' departure leaves the CBS publicity sector with two key posts unfilled, manager of the department and trade editor, the latter vacated when Harry Feeney took over the trade chores for the tv network at CBS.

Summer 'Studio One' May Prove Exception With Offbeat Ventures

Although this coming summer shapes up as one of the dullest to date, replete with filmed reruns and vocalist, there will be at least one conspicuous exception to the rule, That will be the "Summer Studio One," with Robert Herridge of CBS-TV "Camera Three" fame moving in on the Westinghouse hour for the 13-week hot spell plus another 10 weeks of regular season and later an alternating producership with Felix Jackson.

Herridge, fresh out of the free and rarified air of the "Camera Three" sustainer, won't be lacking for experimentation this summer, having already set a plan to alternate adaptations of top established writers both contemporary and classical with originals from "fresh young writers." When he says "fresh young writers," he means it, for already set for the summer schedule are four "first" tv scripts, two by complete newcomers and one by a scripter with Broadway credits but new to television. To add to the metaphor, Herridge bought two scripts from Richard DeRoy, a newcomer who just walked into his office with a "bundle of scripts under his arm.'

Herridge, with a staff he took away from "Camera Three," starts operations June 11 with a John Steinbeck short story (Herridge, who adapted it, calls it a "tragic narrative"), "Flight," story about a Mexican boy. Ted Pearson, longtime "Camera Three" narrator, will double over to narrate this, with another "Three" alumnus, Gerald Sarracini, in the lead. On June 18, the first DeRoy script, a comedy titled "Snap Your Fingers," is set, with Jeanine Menatis, prize-winning off-Broadway actress, in the femme lead.

Back on the established-writer side, June 25 will see another Herridge adaptation, of Conrad Aiken's short story, "Mr. Arcularis," with John Drainie and Nancy Wickwire, also out of the "Three" stable, in the leads. That's followed on July 2 by "The Luck of Luke McTrigger," a western farce by Leo Brady, the legit writer-gone-television. Another newcomer, Charles Garment, is spotlighted July 9 with an original, tentatively

DORFMAN'S UPPED CBS AD-PROMOTION STATUS

Louis Dorfman has been upped to director of advertising and promotion for CBS Radio. Dorfman for the past several months had been in the peculiar position of holding the title of co-director of ad-promotion without anyone to share the co-billing with, as Sherill Taylor had quit the co-director's post to join Television Bureau of Advertising and hadn't been replaced.

Dorfman has already taken over his new duties but the appointment won't be officially announced until June 18, when Jules Dundes steps in as v.p. in charge of sales promotion, advertising and publicity, replacing the departing Irving Fein.

Weed's 100-Hour Spin

Dallas, May 29.

Gene Weed, 21, KGKO deejay, set a new record for marathon disk spinning Friday (25) at 7:16 p.m., after 100 hours, 16 minutes and 58 seconds. General manager Buddy Harris said the previous record was 90 hours and odd minutes, by a Utah d.j.

Weed entered a glassed-in booth in the Palace Theatre lobby Monday (21) to start his daily 3-to-6 p.m. stint. Then KGKO announced that he was starting the record-breaking stunt. Earlier, Weed had a doctor's okay and, fortified with vitamin pills but no stimulants, youngster acted as his own engineer on the spins and also voiced skedded commercials. Only recesses came with hourly five-minute news bits from the studio.

A policeman kept a 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. vigil over Weed, while the theatre was closed. Near the 100-hour mark, a doctor was on hand and an ambulance was called as Weed went to sleep.

Must a UAW Gabber Join AFTRA?

Detroit, May 29.

The official voice of the United Automobile Workers, labor news commentator Guy Nunn, is having union trouble. The Detroit Chapter of AFTRA thinks Nunn should pay dues—starting with a $100 initiation fee.

Nunn maintains he should not have to join AFTRA. He says he is a member of the American Newspaper Guild and is an employe of the United Automobile Workers.

He broadcasts over CKLW with which AFTRA has a contract. Tapes are used on other stations across the country. An AFTRA spokesman said that under the CKLW contract the union could ask that Nunn's programs be stopped until the dues are paid.

"That's not true," Nunn stated. "The contract covers only CKLW employes and I'm employed by the UAW. I have not refused flatly to pay dues to the AFTRA, but they cannot do anything for me. I see no reason to pay dues to a union that doesn't have the power to negotiate for me, or offer me job security or other union benefits. In some cities where my broadcasts are heard, the American Newspaper Guild includes commentators."

Nunn said that he has been informed by AFTRA's national headquarters in New York that the union's jurisdiction includes announcers, but not commentators who express opinions. The executive board of AFTRA's local chapter is tussling with the problem and is fearful that a bad precedent might be established unless Nunn is brought into the fold or forced off the air.

Comments on A Tale of 2 Cities

Dual Identification of TV Stations Draws Lots Of Pro & Con Reaction

Washington, May 29.

FCC's proposal to allow dual identification of tv stations serving two principal cities drew comments from about 35 stations last week, the majority of which opposed the plan.

The proposal resulted from petitions by WVEC-TV in Hampton, Va. (Norfolk area) and WDSM-TV in Superior, Wis., which serves Duluth, Minn.

Majority opposition to the proposal was summed up in the comments of the Meredith stations which told the Commission that dual identification might be justifiable in some cases in the public interest but the usual purpose is to identify a second city for "prestige" reasons, especially with advertisers and networks.

"Carried to its logical conclusion," said Meredith, "the objective would require that station be permitted to list all of the cities in its coverage area."

Meredith argued that "a desire to impress advertisers should not be permitted to make a mockery of the whole concept of principal city service."

Among those which supported the proposal with qualifications was KGUL-TV in Galveston, Tex., which has been authorized to move its transmitter to cover Houston. The station took the position that an outlet serving two communities should be required to say it has studios in both places. However, it asserted it was not urging that dual identification be permitted or required.

Comments filed by KFSD-TV in San Diego, Calif., urged the Commission to prevent foreign stations, such as XETV in Tijuana, Mexico, from identifying themselves as American. It was suggested that FCC impose such conditions on American networks supplying programs to such outlets. The San Diego station is fighting a request by ABC to supply network shows to XETV which covers the San Diego area.

Betty Field's Spec

Betty Field has been set for the lead of the "Producers' Showcase" spec version of Anita Loos' "Happy Birthday" spec on NBC-TV June 25. Showcase Productions and Alex Segal, who will produce-direct the spec, have been looking for a lead ever since Rosalind Russell nixed the part a few weeks ago. Supporting cast includes Enid Markey, Harry Vellaver, Parker McCormick and Harold Vermilyea.

RCA Convention's Major Color Push

Top RCA execs will open a big push for color-tv sets this year at the convention of the company's consumer products convention at Miami Beach, opening Friday (31). Frank M. Folsom, RCA prexy, and Robert A. Seidel, exec vice-prexy of the consumer products division, will be on hand among the 1,300 representatives of the company's distribs and 17 foreign affiliates.

In addition to previewing the new line of video sets, RCA will also show its upcoming radio, phonograph and hi-fi equipment models. Execs of each division will be on hand to detail the extensive ad-promotion campaigns planned for the coming period.

As entertainment for the delegates, a talent contest will be held at the Roney Plaza Hotel with the winner getting a NBC and Victor disk pact. Among the Victor disk names who will appear are Perry Como, Eddy Arnold, Mitchell Ayres, Ray Charles Singers, Jaye P. Morgan, Vaughn Monroe, Homer & Jethro, Janet Martin, Joe Reisman, Henri Rene, Hugo Winterhalter and others.

CHI AUTO DEALER'S BAIT & SWITCH RAP

Chicago, May 29.

Crackdown by the Better Business Bureau and State's Attorney John Gutknecht on alleged televised bait and switch advertising has resulted in the arraignment on charges of "false and misleading advertising" of auto dealer Irving Cole, prexy of Cole-Finder Inc. and Irving Rockling, head of the ad agency bearing his name.

Arraignment by Criminal Court Judge Cornelius J. Harrington last week followed an earlier indictment handed down by the Cook County Grand Jury. Hearings have been set for June 22.

State's Attorney's office took the charges to the grand jury after an investigation by the BBB of Cole-Finder's advertising claims. Although the car merchant at one time or another has used all four Chi tele stations, the charges specifically mention the ad claims aired in February on WNBQ. Cole-Finder is currently sponsoring "The Falcon" on the NBC-TV station.

Sealtest Hot for UPA Network Cartoons But Not Against Rival Dairy

Sealtest is known to be a hot client potential on the United Productions of America cartoon half-hour being offered by CBS-TV for the fall. But as much as the dairy wants the show, it might not be able to take it.

Network is purportedly ready to offer a half-hour anchorage Wednesday night opposite "Disneyland" via ABC-TV. However, Sealtest does not want to compete with "Disneyland" bankroller American Dairy Assn. Dairy, which intends maintaining its CBS-TV "Big Top" position next fall, is said to want a 30-minute opening for the UPA "Gerald McBoing-Boing," et al., cartoon variety presentation either on Tuesday or Friday night.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

U. S. Steel Hour

J. M. Barrie's vintage play of World War One, "The Old Lady Shows Her Medals," was shaped into a standout offering on the "U. S. Steel Hour" Wednesday night (23) on CBS-TV. It was not an easy assignment either. One false step in the telling of Barrie's sentimental story would have tripped the whole production into bathos. But as adapted by Robert Anderson, the video play struck the precisely right blend of comedy and tear-jerking.

The yarn about an elderly spinster, who pretends to her charwomen friends to be the mother of a soldier whom she finally meets and adopts, was flawlessly performed. Making her bow in a dramatic role on tv, Gracie Fields played the central role with a charm and a tenderness that suffused the whole stanza and made for a substantial quota of lumps in the throat. Jackie Cooper shared top honors for his portrayal of the Scot soldier boy. He carried off the burr like a pro and made the whole characterization thoroughly credible.

The attentiveness to detail in this play was above all demonstrated by the superb performances in the supporting roles. As the on-scene narrator, Jerome Kilty keynoted the play with his urbane humor. The three friends of the charwoman were played by Moyna MacGill, Betty Sinclair and Cynthia Latham in the best tradition of the English film, where the small character touches are of major importance. Ralph Bunker, John McLiam, Ronald Long and Stanley Bell were also excellent in subsidiary parts.

The excellent package was wrapped up under Norman Felton's direction. Herm.

Playwrights 56

Fred Coe, hitherto in the producer's seat of "Playwrights 56" on NBC-TV, took a crack at directing last week (22) in a dual assignment. Coe hasn't been repped as a tv stager in the official sense for a few years, but such craftsmanship is nothing new to the pioneer teledrama man who only last week was elaborately kudosed on his 10th anni in the homescreen biz.

Coe could hardly have asked for a better script to show off a director's ingenuity; nor a more workmanlike playwright than Sumner Locke Elliott, one of the Coeterie of tiptop dramatic boys who've rode along with the tall Mississippian in his preeminence over the decade. For "The Keyhole" was nothing if not a vigorous vehicle for displaying a director's approach to staging a live show in a manner that compared favorably with the "liquid assets" of the motion picture camera.

As a matter of fact, the ingenuity called into play for the playout of a trial and the numerous flashbacks thereof seemed to challenge film lensing in its own backyard. It was an impressive production, beautifully mounted and moved along at a pace that could not help but strike a viewer with its coherence and clarity amid a shuttling of the characters as to time and locales—and on the same set to boot. Every moment was precious and none of it was wasted, mated to a decent regard for fillips of humor that stemmed from two directions: the characters themselves and the introduction of a "Greek chorus" narrator on-screen who was also injected as a character smack into the courtroom proceedings for one of the most vivid stunts in tv annals. The role also brought new credit to its interpreter, E. G. Marshall.

The setting was a British court of 1889; on trial for murder of her English husband was [redacted] American, Lee Grant. As explained, this was before an accused, English or otherwise, could testify in his behalf in the British courts. Against the fact that the testimony was more or less down the middle, though slanted in certain particulars, certain shafts of information and humor supplied largely by "interlocutor" Marshall were apparently intended to lead auditors to the belief that Miss Grant was innocent. She said so in a final statement to the court without benefit of appearance in the witness box, following detailed testimony covering death by arsenic poisoning as worked out in quick-change flashbacks contrived on the spot.

The technique was handled mostly through having witnesses step down from the dock to the point where the recollective action was marked off.

What seemed of basic importance was the fact that as result of this trial, with Miss Grant first sentenced to be hanged and later gaining commutation of sentence (serving 15 years), British law was altered to permit testimony by an accused. The play as a whole was less weighty than the spotlighting of this single gap in the then British law which by latterday standards seems unreasonably severe on one charged with a capital crime. But this stress was all but lost in "The Keyhole" where it should have been a fatter part of the running theme. From this view, it was an uncommon production of an otherwise routine—through interesting all the way—courtroom drama.

Miss Grant, called upon for numerous scenes with changes in dress and manner, delivered a performance that had sensitivity and authority as well as grace and style. There were a succession of small and extended scenes from witness box to flashback locale and back again, ably done in particular by Meg Mundy; and including even the courtroom entry of the deceased in another piece of fascinatin' filmflammery. To top it all, "Keyhole" Marshall committed a sort of libel on the judge himself, this being explained away by the fact that the old boy was adjudged insane after the trial. This part was played vigorously by Henry McNaughton. All in all, an absorbing study in tv departures. Trau.

Bob Hope Show

It was those dreary stretches between chuckles which deadened the whole effect of this final Bob Hope effort of this season on NBC-TV last week. The prefilmed footage gave the impression that Hope was tidily cleaning out the bits and snippets remaining from past programs, before winding his seasonal chores.

Sharpest turn was an intramural breakup duel between Hope and Ken Murray, in which the razor-sharp ad libs overwhelmed the set lines. However, a number of specialized tv industry jokes must have left the hinterlanders bewildered. In the later stages, an adaptable Leo Durocher displayed an increasing ease before the cameras.

In whatever direction Kim Novak's talents lie, she amply demonstrated that they don't tend toward the quick-paced give-and-take comedy of the Hope variety. Another comedic bit with warbler Vic Damone and Hope in tandem likewise disclosed that as a funnyman, Damone's a most able ballad singer.

On the other hand, Pearl Bailey again registered solidly, both in her inimitable song stylings and in the quip-trading department, although her comedy material sagged woefully in large part.

Hope's opening monolog departed considerably from preshow publicity, but therein he managed a goodly number of wry nifties, especially aimed at his employers, NBC. The watching execs may have been laughing, but there surely must have been suspicious moisture in their eyes as shaft after shaft found its mark. Kove.

Antarctica: Third World—Part II

Second full-hour presentation of NBC-TV's film coverage of the U. S. Navy's "Operation Deepfreeze" Sunday (27) proved a vastly interesting doumentary of the current South Pole expedition. In the initial installment of cameraman Bill Hartigan's polar footage last February viewers were briefed on the natural obstacles facing the men and ships who probed the Antarctic continent.

But Sunday's films depicted the Navy's race to complete its mission on the frozen wastes before the Antarctic night set in. It was a stirring pictorial chronicle of how the Navy found sites and set up bases for America's participation in the Antarctic phase of the International Geophysical Year. Purpose of the expedition was further outlined in an introduction by Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd who described the Antarctic as "an untouched reservoir of natural resources."

Lensman Hartigan, who did his own narration, ably covered the physical aspects of the expedition via graphic scenes of natural hazards which abound in that frigid area. These were further pointed up in sequences showing a tanker blown to sea, an icebreaker's crew hacking away at three-foot thick ice on deck and Seabees' valiant efforts in mooring a couple of YOG's (Yard Oilers Gasoline) to the ice shelf for the winter.

How men react to the biting cold and 102 knot winds wasn't overlooked by Hartigan for his film

BLESSINGS OF LIBERTY
With Gil Rathbun, Angela Bayer, Peter Jerome, Keith Kirby, Paul Kielar, Alfred Anderson, Jackson Lowe, Ted Work, Lee Reynolds, Philip Bosco, Robert Prest, Robbie Bordley, Sid Slappey.
Producer: Thomas Jones
Director: Jim Silman
Writer: Stanley Reid
30 Mins., Sun. (27), 5:30 p.m.
WTOP, Washington

Staff members of WTOP, who must have labored long and hard on this historical documentary, rate A for effort, and nearly as much for results. First of all, it is a step in the right direction to tackle a live show of these proportions on a local level. Secondly, show itself, based on a little known incident in American history, stacked up well even programmed immediately before "You Were There," another historical drama of formidable proportions.

Show was wisely backgrounded against the setting of the capital itself, using the Jefferson Memorial to lead in and out of actual drama. The device of weaving the action from a small boy's visit with his father to the impressive Memorial was effective stage-setting.

Play, adroitly written by Stanley Reid, production manager for WTOP, is based on an incident in the life of Matthew Lyon, Congressman from Vermont, at the turn of the century. Action pivots on court room scene in which Lyons defends himself on charges of violating the Alien and Sedition Acts of President John Adams' administration. Exploiting the principle of free speech as guaranteed by the Constitution, script was often stirring, sometimes too detailed.

Standout on cast of local players, recruited from AFTRA roles, Catholic U, Arena Stage, and Barter Theatre, was Gil Rathbun in leading role. Actor Rathbun managed an Irish brogue with far more skill and consistency than many a bigtime player viewed by this reviewer. In addition, he was generally up to the demands of long runs of rhetoric, sustaining interest and drama. Cast was, on the whole, competent, a credit to director Jim Silman and producer Tom Jones, both WTOP staffers.

Washington is a natural for shows of this type. And certainly any town of same size can well afford to spend time and money to develop local talent. This effort impressed as sufficiently polished to stand a try at the network.

Peter Masters' sets rate special mention. They were effective, simple, and uncluttered. Flor.

TROOPING THE COLORS
With Bruce Rogers
Producer: Pierre Normandin
60 Mins.; Sun. (27); 2:30 p.m.
CBC, from Ottawa

Trooping the Colors is one of the most colorful military spectacles in British history, dating more than 400 years back and a slick subject for television, if handled right. This year's event was held (27) on the laws of Parliament Hill in Ottawa with the Governor General's Footguards (an affiliate of the Goldstream Guards of Britain) and the Canadian Grenadier Guards of Montreal combining to present a broad, precision production. Canadian Broadcasting Corp. did its third annual airing of the ceremony to its national web, with Pierre Normandin exhibiting boffo production throughout. Camera action and angles plus narrator were his tools and he made the most of them, using building-top cameras and a turret setup in the middle of the parade grounds for closeups. Sound pickup was as good as it could have been since the combined bands marched as much as they stood still. Bruce Rogers gabbing showed top advance research and a good knowledge of the background of the event and the units taking part as well as the ceremony itself. Rogers kept the gaps filled with intelligent narration while Normandin had the cameras filling with movement and clicko coverage of crowds and buildings in the area.

Zoom lens held the arrival of the Governor General, Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey, with his Royal Canadian Mounted Police escort, well in the picture and followed the GG through the inspection. Normandin neatly interspersed long shots and closeups during the march-past and reviews. In spite of cloudy weather and some rain, the video pickup was satisfactory at all times, even bringing in traffic an people in the background. Normandin's experience as newspaper reporter and photographer before he hit tv went to his advantage in a show like this. Gorm.

THE JOHNNY CARSON SHOW
With Carson, Glenn Turnbull, Laurie Carroll, Peter Hanley, Cal Gooden Orch, Hank Simms Producer: Herb Allen
Director: Ron Winston
Writers: Milton Pascal, Morris Freedman, David Greggory
30 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 2 p.m.
Sustaining
CBS-TV, from Hollywood

In line with a general reshuffle of its daytime variety picture, CBS has inserted Johnny Carson as a Coast sub for the eastern-originated Robert Q. Lewis longrunner. In effect, the only difference is a change in faces and originations, since the format is the same type of easygoing variety offering that characterized both the Lewis show and another daytime casualty, Jack Paar. What CBS-TV is trying to accomplish by the switch is a little difficult to figure out.

Of course, there's the element of a buildup for Carson. The young comic may have been pushed along too fast via his nighttime half-hour, which has since been dropped, as his initial television outing. Mebbe, CBS figures, some exposure on a day-to-day basis in the afternoon will bring him along to the point where he can overcome the nighttime hurdle. And Carson, as personable a performer as has come along in the past couple of years, is certainly worth the trouble.

Whatever the reasoning, CBS can rest easy, for the new show looks pretty good at this point. Of course it's cut out of the same daytime cloth as half a dozen similar daytimers, and whether it can overcome some of the difficulties in clearing stations and thus getting sponsors is another matter. But it's a cheerful, relaxed entry with some pleasant and talented people, and under today's daytime standards, who can ask for anything more. Carson's a likable emcee and a funny gent, fast on the uptake. Two singers, Laurie Carroll, late of "Plain and Fancy" and Peter Hanley, out of the New York televinyards, are engaging and have excellent voices. Glenn Turnbull is an inventive dancer with verve and ability. Cal Gooden orch seems well-versed and Gooden looks like a good straightman. Hank Simms is a pleasant announcer. With an act-and-gab format, enlivened at the end with a guest in the form of the prez of Godgets Inc., it makes for an easy-to-take, pleasant session. It looks like fun, even if it doesn't turn out to be commercial. Chan.

STAND UP AND BE COUNTED
With Bob Russell, others
Exec Producer: Sy Fisher
Producer: Robert Wald
Director: Karl Genus
20 Mins.; Mon.-Fri., 1:10 p.m.
CO-OP
CBS-TV, from N.Y.

"Stand Up and Be Counted" is an audience particlipationer in the widest sense of the word. The housewife can get into the act whether she's in the studio audience or at home, and there are so many that just love to dish out advice, good, bad or indifferent.

Situation has emcee Bob Russell putting a femme with a problem through the paces. The audience then steps up to a bar and are interviewed as to their solution, and a vote taken afterward. Stay-at-homes can also chime in. On show caught, a mother had to decide whether to give her 17-year-old son permission to marry. The mother had lined up the issues involved fairly, but just couldn't get herself to go on record. The studio audience just swarmed over to the mike for their say in the matter, and the opinions expressed were strong and positive that permitted no deviation.

A vote is taken with the studio deciding in favor of withholding approval, and the mother is slated to return next week and give her decision. In the meantime, Russell asks for letters, with the best epistle getting an automobile. And when the housewife comes back, she too will undoubtedly be loaded with gifts, probably to start the kids off right.

Of course, the issue here is so delicate, deeply personal and so dependent upon the individuals involved that counsel from backfence sources can be dangerous—irrespective of the outcome of any votes. However, the bulk of the housewives will know of no such thing—they'll gladly throw their weight into the fray, especially when a car is involved. Although it's socially wrong to pander these highly personal questions for public consumption, there's little doubt that a lot of stay-at-homes will find this right up their alley.

Russell does a good job in handling the wives. He has a quiet and confidence-begetting demeanor, and handles the studio audience and the central figure nicely.

Though a network venture, stations will be selling this one locally, and it should be able to hold its own on the ratings. Jose.

NBC-TV's "Producers' Showcase" turned up with a gay frolic Monday night (28) in a compatible color video reincarnation of Harold Arlen-"Yip" Harburg's "Bloomer Girl" musical of the 1944 Broadway season. As produced-directed by Alex Segal, a new hand in the terp and tonsil department, its musical-dance sequences provided a bouncy, zingy plus to the late season. Practically all hands on board earned their tv stripes for extracting a high quota of entertainment values from the lampoon on militant feminists. This was one of the better of the season's musical colorcasts, despite an occasional "book" intrusion awkwardness, and the rich tint values heightened the enjoyment immeasurably.

After a dozen years, it was refreshing to have Arlen's melodic score and Harburg's lyrics trotted out and treated to such fine vocal interpretations, and although the "Bloomer Girl" book rates something far less than a masterpiece, Segal's direction gave it a movement and fluidity. It was a big, striking, multiple-peopled production, endowed with fine talent, that meshed into a cohesive unit.

Agnes de Mille was on deck to stage the dances and the recreation of her "Civil War Ballet," an established item in the Ballet Theatre repertoire, was a standout final-act sequence of the production, blending as it did so neatly into the "Bloomer Girl" framework. Yet in the telscoping of the musical into its hour and a half spec format, it was the dancing chiefly that came out on the short end, with only a comedy interlude (to the accompaniment of "It Was Good Enough For Grandma") rating the remainder of attention from the dance department. The in-between "Sunday In Cicero Falls" with its "Uncle Tom's Cabin Parade" cried out for choreographic attention, if only for a change of pace.

Vocally the show was a delight and its richest item. With Barbara Cook and Keith Andes as the romantic leads—and a fetching couple they made, too—they romped home with "Evalina," still one of the top tunes in the Arlen catalog, and handled "Right As the Rain" ballad beautifully. It was the major virtue of the show that all the tunes received primary vocal attention, whether in solo or in chorus. Thus the choral roundelay on "When The Boys Come Home" fore and aft and "Sunday In Cicero Falls"; Rawn Spearman's sock rendition of "The Eagle and Me" and as a trio with Brock Peters and Leon Bibb on "I Got A Song"—here were the properly accented musical contribs that gave it its high entertainment voltage.

The straight acting performances of Carmen Mathews as the femme revolter Dolly Bloomer, along with Nydia Westman and Paul Ford; Patricia Hammerlee's stunningly executed terping comicalities in the "Grandma" sequence; George Bassman's musical direction; Hugh Martin's choral direction; Otis Riggs' settings and Jerome Boxhorn's finely detailed costuming all rate as distinctive plusses. Rose.

A workmanlike 10-minute midday tv news show, with Charles Collingwood doing the commentary, preemed Mon. (28) on the CBS net. It will be presented regularly Monday through Friday (1 to 1:10), filling in the afternoon news gap.

Although the show apparently does not blaze any trails in news presentation, it offers a solid, factual up-to-the-minute news account, using film clips from reports of CBS newsfilm's department. Utilized for the preem event were exciting shots of the Cypros rioting, a not too newsworthy filmed

VARIETY'S weekly chart of city-by-city ratings of syndicated and national spot film covers 40 to 60 cities reported by American Research Bureau on a monthly basis. Cities will be rotated each week, with the 10 top-rated film shows listed in each case, and their competition shown opposite. All ratings are furnished by ARB, based on the latest reports.

This VARIETY chart represents a gathering of all pertinent information about film in each market, which can be used by distributors, agencies, stations and clients as an aid in determining the effectiveness of a filmed show in the specific market. Attention should be paid to time—day and time factors, since sets-in-use and audience composition vary according to time slot, i.e., a Saturday afternoon children's show, with a low rating, may have a large share and an audience composed largely of children, with corresponding results for the sponsor aiming at the children's market. Abbreviations and symbols are as follows: (Adv), adventure; (Ch), children's; (Co), comedy; (Dr), drama; (Doc), documentary; (Mus), musical; (Myst), mystery; (Q), quiz; (Sp), sports; (W), western; (Wom), women's. Numbered symbols next to station call letters represent the station's channel; all channels above 13 are UHF. Those ad agencies listed as distributors rep the national sponsor for whom the film is aired.

M-G: SHORT FOR MIGRAINE

'Lassie' a Dog's Life to Jan

Hollywood, May 29.

Jan Clayton has intimated that she wants to quit her femme lead role in the "Lassie" vidpix series. Unless the producers of the series can come up with a fatter part for her, the chances are she will check out at the end of the year.

Miss Clayton will shoot 39 of the half-hour series and do a theatrical film between now and Christmas, when her "Lassie" contract expires. Her major beef is that the vidpix role is a more or less inconsequential one and she would like to have it expanded.

Somewhat similar situation arose in the case of the Danny Thomas vidpix series. Jean Hagen is leaving the cast (requiring a whole new approach to the show) because she finds it's stymieing her in other theatrical endeavors.

More Chi Live Entries Bite The Dust as Vidpix, Feature Films Take Over the Local TV Spectrum

Chicago, May 29.

The Windy City, generally considered a tight film market with three of the four tele stations network-owned, is being attacked with renewed vigor by the syndicators and feature film distribs who see an accelerated trend to celluloid by the local advertisers and agencies.

The upbeat has sharped the competition between the peddlers of the vidpix portfolios and those pushing the swelling supply of full-length ex-theatricals. It's the latter, with more and more "big name" product coming into tv release, that continues to excite the bankrollers as a result of the rating track record the Hollywood oldies and the not-so-oldies have scored down through the years. This is not to say the Zivs, the MCA-TVs, the Officials and the network syndicators aren't scoring with their half-hour virginal and repeat product.

Sales coup of the week, however, goes to E. Jonnie Graff, National Telefilm Assn.'s midwest veep, repping this time the feature film side of the sweepstakes. Graff engineered the sale of NTA's "TNT" bundle of 34 films, including the giltedged bundle of 10 David O. Selznick pix, to Ford dealer Jim Moran for his longstanding Sunday night at 10 berth on WGN-TV. Everyone involved is strictly mum on how much Moran paid for the package so as not to make him a target for the next guy.

Malcolm-Howard account exec Hal Barkin did say, however, it's by far Moran's biggest film expenditure to date.

More Live Entries Axed

Meantime, WBBM-TV is getting a lot of scrutiny from the film peddlers. Wholesale series of sponsor shifts has two of the Columbia station's live entries falling by the wayside in favor of vidpix replacements. But even of more import are the ambitions of the filmites to tip the scale towards their programming fare in the debate that's going on at the Columbia station on what to do about the 11 o'clock weeknight strip. 'Public Defender' Into 40 Markets

Interstate has sold the reruns of the former network show, "Public Defender," in 40 markets. Package contains 69 films, and a spokesman for the syndicator said that in all but two or three cases, it was sold to local sponsors and not stations.

He said that most of the deals call for single run only, adding that it was the aim of the company to leave room for third run sales after one year of initial syndication. Former CBS-Philip Morris series starring Reed Hadley has been on the block for five months.

Meantime, Interstate TV reports that its "Little Rascals" is now in 142 markets.

Toy Guidance Council Repeats Jimmy Nelson

Again, several months ahead of the Xmas selling season, Toy Guidance Council is setting production dates on the new Jimmy Nelson quarter-hour series, "Toyland Express." RKO Pathe will produce the 13-week telefilm skein.

Last year the Nelson show, which marked the Council's second year in tv via Friend-Reiss agency, was spotted on 60 tv stations.

Stanwyck Telepix Series With Flock Of Major Names

For its first major entry in the telefilm lists, the Coast-based Jaffe Agency is throwing practically every one of its big name Hollywood stars, many of whom have never appeared on video before, up for national sponsor grabs. Talent percentery has a half-hour anthology format making the Madison Ave. rounds called the "Barbara Stanwyk Theatre."

Miss Stanwyk, who hasn't appeared in a regular tv show before, is co-producing with Jack Denove productions, with Jaffe said to be coming in for a share of the profits. Agency has already exacted promises from practically all the talent on its roster to appear on the show, if the sponsor desires it.

The Jaffe "A" list, from which eight performers are to be chosen for the 39-film series, includes: Greer Garson, Cary Grant, Rod Steiger, Errol Flynn, Jack Palance, Merle Oberon, Joan Fontaine, Dorothy McGuire and Jimmy Cagney. Firm has also listed "B" and "C" groups of actors. It is said that those on the "B" list are "substantial names, but people who regularly do leads in television." Ten leads will be taken from that group, and eight from the "C" list. Miss Stanwyk is to appear as star in 13 as well as host all 39.

In an effort to match the star and the story, the producers are offering writing talent of the Charles Lederer, Don Mankiewicz, Frank Nugent, James Poe genre. Jaffe says its going to develop scripts first and then find the stars to fit them.

TPA's Chi Setup

Television Programs of America has created a new central sales division and named Walt Plant to head it up out of the Chicago office. New division, TPA's sixth such setup, will cover a good part of the midwest and take much of the pressure off the overloaded midwestern division under Leo Bernard.

Plant has been with TPA as a sales staffer since January, having managed the Horace Heidt band prior to that.

BACKLOG INVITES DIZZY ECONOMICS

By ART WOODSTONE

All the talk about spending $35,000,000 to $50,000,000 for tv rights to MGM's catalog of pre-1948 features is dizzying the industry, but there would seem to be an abundance of flies in the ointment.

There are 780 pix involved in the negotiations between Metro and the Lou Chesler-Eliot Hyman interests, who are willing to pay $50,000,000 for outright purchase of the prints. Ely Landau and Oliver Unger (National Telefilm Associates) are reportedly just as eager to pay between $35,000,000 and $40,000,000 for a longterm lease, said to be 10 years. A number of questions arise if either buy is consummated: (1) Where is the market in television for such extensive and costly product? (2) How long, under present market conditions, would it take to recover this kind of investment? (3) How many of the 780 Metros will be acceptable to station film buyers?

Unger and Landau so strongly believe that top features will "create their own playing time" that they're turning almost entirely from half-hour syndication. While many share that opinion, it's warned that it was first voiced at a time when only Matty Fox owned a large supply of new-to-tv features. When he acquired RKO's catalog, tradesters couldn't immediately depend on getting any further product from Hollywood. Also, it really had been some time since product-hungry first-run tv stations had gotten new stuff and they were willing to pay new highs to get the goods.

When Will Price Come Down?

But now, with RKO's 740 and Warners 754 both available, and with some quarters figuring a Metro deal has a 50-50 chance, more than one major source has opened up for quality product. Competition is seen bound to bring down the price of the new pix—which cost the distrib as much as $60,000; in some cases more. Generally, those higher purchase prices necessitate asking higher station prices.

Along with distrib competition, which puts the stations in the driver's seat, the trade points to factors compressing the size of the market:. Half-hour telepix, though

Sinn to London to Set Ziv 'Martin Kane' Series; 39 to Be Shot Abroad

Ziv prexy John Sinn is in London to work on the first large scale vidfilm production for the company abroad. He's overseeing a half-hour pilot on "Martin Kane, Private Eye," with William Gargan, who also played the lead when it was a live network tv'er.

According to reports, Ziv intends shooting all 39 "Kane" stanzas in London. At one time, the syndicator lensed 13 of the Ronald Coleman "Favorite Story" telepix in England, but that was the only extent to which the company went in overseas production.

With "Kanes" in production, it makes nine out of 13 Ziv syndicated packages which were once radio programs, showing how heavily the vidfilmer depends on audio originals for video material. "Cisco Kid," "Dr. Christian," "Man Called X," "Meet Corliss Archer," "Mr. District Attorney," "Favorite Story," "Boston Blackie" and, of a more-or-less status, Eddie Cantor were all radio stanzas. Only "Highway Patrol," "I Led Three Lives," "The Unexpected" and "Science Fiction Theatre" began as tv'ers.

TV Film Distributors Assn. Now A Reality, and With Its Hands Full; NBC Blast, D.C. Quiz Cue Speedup

About two years ago, Ziv prez John L. Sinn, asked whether he would support a telefilm trade association, answered that he would "when and if" the industry's problems were of such a nature that they couldn't be solved by an individual companies. Ziv is now one of the charter members of the Assn. of Television Film Distributors (ATFD), formed several weeks ago and formally announced this week.

For a fledgling trade group, the ATFD already has its hands full, what with NBC having launched a direct assault upon it—if not by its organized name, then by the names of the individual members, Ziv, Television Programs of America, Screen Gems and Official Films (see separate story). Moreover, its first official act takes place tomorrow (Thurs.) via testimony before the FCC Network Study Committee (Barrow group). And all this before the association has named officers, set budgets or even gotten a firm hold on its intentions and scope. About the only thing set is the ATFD's general counsel, the Washington law firm of Arnold, Fortas & Porter.

Nonetheless, announcement of the formation of the group comes on top of informal meetings that date back to January, and that included the drafting of tomorrow's testimony. Group, spearheaded by Screen Gems' Ralph Cohn, TPA's Michael Sillerman, Official's Herman Rush and Ziv's Sinn and A. Frank Reel, had gotten together after the Barrow Committee had invited it to prepare a presentation on the network situation. They had comprised the remnants of an industry "steering committee" formed the previous summer to draft an industry organization which was then thumbed down by the industry itself in September. When the Barrow Committee invite was extended, they revived the group. Guild Films' Dave Savage was also a member of the original group, but Guild's interest started to wane when Savage left to head up Theatrical Enterprises, and Pay-TV the Solution?

Hollywood, May 29.

If the syndicate bidding $50,000,000 for the backlog of Metro pix wins out, it will have to gross $100,000,000 to break even, according to Telemeter exec Carl Leserman. Exec commented, "I don't understand how they expect to get it back unless they envision using the films on pay-as-you-see tv. TV stations can't afford to pay prices which would have to be asked to break even; and in many small towns around the country, they pay as little as $12.50 a picture. They simply can't afford more."

Lou Chesler syndicate of Toronto has made a $50,000,000 bid for the Metro backlog.

No RKO Teleradio Vidpix Production For Year or More

RKO Teleradio's entry into vidfilm production is at least a year off, even though a staff has been in readiness on the Coast to start work. Company execs now admit that RKO probably won't enter tv film production on its own before this time next year. They don't believe that the market is conducive to the sale of vidfilm.

RKO sees the tightening syndication market as discouraging. Company had laid plans to do a syndicated series on "Bozo, the Clown," and mentioned a Ted Steele (he's on RKO's WOR-TV, N. Y.) as a probable, but series has been stalled indefinitely, it's reported.

Downbeat attitude of RKO for the present toward telefilm production is seen evidenced in the company's almost total disestablishment of a tv syndication arm. Its execs have largely been moved into other areas of RKO Teleradio, such as national sales division, or have moved out of the company completely. (Dwight Martin, who headed the syndication division, lately assumed command of a station in Baton Rouge, La.

WCAU-TV's $100,000 Buy of 50 Features

Philadelphia, May 29.

Conclusion of a deal between WCAU-TV and Hollywood Television Service, Inc., for the Republic subsidiary's Silver and Diamond packages, involving about 50 features, has been disclosed. Reported price was approximately $100,000.

Negotiations for the deal, involving tv rights for two years, were carried on by Charles Vanda, WCAU v.p. in charge of tv, and Earl Collins, Hollywood Television Service prez, and Richard Yates, veepee and Eastern sales manager.

Damon Runyon Series Into SG Syndication

Screen Gems is expected to toss "The Damon Runyon Theatre" half-hours into syndication almost immediately in an attempt to line up some station sales for next season. Stanza, with a bundle of 39 films in the kitty, is ending its CBS-TV network run in a couple of weeks when Budweiser drops it.

SG syndication head Bob Salk will handle the rerun stanza.

Pillsbury's Major Spread on 'Opry'

In one of the biggest national spot deals yet consummated, Pillsbury Mills has bought Flamingo Films' "Stars of the Grand Ole Opry" in 119 markets starting in September. Pillsbury has been carrying the show in some 30 markets this season, but expands four-fold in the fall with new films currently being shot in Nashville.

Deal is expected to put the show into a grand total of 225 markets in the fall for Flamingo, since it's currently in 115 cities, 85 of them non-Pillsbury markets under the current lineup. Pillsbury deal, based on the show's success this past season, is via Campbell-Mithun and represents the mill's largest non-network expenditure to date.

Flamingo has already completed production on 26 new "Opry" half-hours in Nashville and goes into production on an additional 26 in a month, with Al Gannaway as producer. All 52 are in color, as were the original 39 produced last summer by Gannaway. Previous pix were filmed with only some of the "Opry" stars, but the new batch will feature all of them on a rotating basis.

Deal gives "Opry" continued exposure on spot-film, network tv and radio. Telecasts, on a once-a-month basis, were bankrolled on ABC-TV by Ralston, while its broadcasts on NBC Radio are sponsored by Prine Albert. For Flamingo, the show is far and away its hottest property.

'Translator' Stations for Isolated TV Communities Get Nod from FCC

Washington, May 29.

Regardless of their impact on community antenna systems, the FCC last week authorized the establishment of low-power tv "translator" stations to rebroadcast programs of existing outlets (VAF or UHF) to isolated communities beyond the range of direct reception.

The new service, which will use the upper 14 UHF channels (70 to 83), is designed to provide service in areas where regular stations cannot be supported and at the same time help ultra high. To pick up programs from the "translators," which can be built for $2,000 or less, all the viewer will need is an all-channel set or a converter for his old set.

To encourage the establishment of the new stations, the Commission will impose no limitation on the number which may be operated by the same interest. To minimize expense of operation, remote control of the transmitter will be permitted where automatic devices are used.

To provide multiple program service to a community, the Commission will grant authorizations for more than one translator, each of which will be assigned a separate channel.

Under rules adopted for the service, licensees of translator stations will not be permitted to operate without "prior consent" of the station whose programs are to be rebroadcast.

While the National Community Television Assn. did not register outright opposition to the new service, it urged the Commission to consider the effect translators would have on established c.a. systems. It was also proposed by Spencer Kennedy Laboratories, an equipment manufacturer, that c.a. systems be given "a breathing space" of three or four years before being subjected to "competition" from translators.

Regarding these appeals, the Commission said it recognized that community antennas have made a significant contribution in bringing tv service to isolated areas. "But community antennas," the agency asserted, "do not provide a broadcast service available to the public at large. Their service is limited to subscribers who must pay a fee, and often is not available even at a fee for those members of the community in outlying areas."

The Commission said it would not be warranted in withholding authorization of translators "merely because they would compete with community antennas providing service to some people at a fee. Investments in community antennas were not made on the basis of any assurance that the areas served by them would remain without direct tv reception. Such systems have been interim measures, taken without Commission authorization, to provide outlying areas with tv until direct reception could be achieved. The public interest would not be served by depriving a community of the privilege of obtaining direct reception to protect these investments."

It is expected that most translators will be established by local groups, probably on a cooperative basis. However, some may be built by UHF stations to extend coverage in so-called "shadow" areas.

David Davidson

different. Here you deal with showmen; in N. Y. you deal with hucksters. I can afford to write for tv only because I come to Hollywood to do screenplays, and am paid generously for it. I write for tv because I like certain shows where you have complete freedom of theme and handling of the script, as well as first class production. I have no criticism of the creative producers like Fred Coe and Herbert Brodkin who work to get more money for the writer; it's the moneyed people in tv who have this dislike of the writer.

"They can't get it into their heads that there is such a thing as a star writer as well as a star actor. In fact the more they pay a star, the less they want to pay the writer. You don't receive a reward commensurate with your work; You're rewarded much more in movies and in legit. They tell you you can sell your story to movies, but actually movie sales of tv stories are diminishing.

"Ironically, Hollywood appreciates the tv writer more than tv does. For example, I know of one studio where the lowest-paid producer gets $300 a week, while the highest paid writer receives $5,000 a week. They want and will pay for good writers here, but in N. Y. the idea of a prosperous writer is appalling.

"The networks feel when the new contract forced them to raise the writers' minimums from $800 a script to $1,100, they will make the writer pay for that hike. What they don't realize is that more and more tv writers are coming to Hollywood and subsequently writing less for tv. I will be writing eight months of this year in Hollywood for movies, for example.

"I plan to write a play based on a tv story I wrote called 'High Man.' But I will raise the money to do it from my movie work. Everything I get from tv goes down the drain while working on tv. And those delays in paying for contractual work are terrible in tv.

"Paddy Chayefsky, for example, hasn't written for tv in about two years; he's been busy in movies and legit. But when he was active in tv, it took great effort by Fred Coe to raise Chayefsky's price. I believe he finally got it up to $2,500 a script; I understand that the last year Chayefsky wrote for tv, he wrote four teleplays, for which he got a total of $10,000.

"My complaints are directed against the business side of tv; it refuses to give the writer opportunity or acknowledge his rights," concluded Davidson.

College Audition Winners Get TV 'Matinee' Roles

Hollywood, May 29.

Nine winners of a four-day audition project involving six local colleges and universities have been inked by producer Albert McCleery for roles in an NBC-TV "Matinee Theatre" stanza coming up June 29. Each of schools sent 10 best campus players, selected by drama department toppers of USC, UCLA, L. A. City College, Santa Monica City College, Pasadena J. C. and Pasadena Playhouse.

Future auditions on similar pattern may develop with colleges throughout the country.

Why Was 'Medic' Dumped? It's in 81st Position On Nielsen's Newest Roundup

While it's true that NBC-TV had a wrestling match with the masterminds of "Medic" (notably producer Frank Latourette and creator James Moser) stemming from a recent installment that was to include a Caesarean birth sequence which never got to the homescreens, its dumping from the 9 p.m. Monday niche is apparently based on weightier considerations. One of these is realism, with "Medic" showing up a straggling 81st in the latest Nielsens.

It's no secret that that M.D. stanza, a two-season wonderboy that has made a number of departures in tv and at one period was threatening the supremacy of "I Love Lucy" on CBS-TV., has been dipping sharply of recent months. But NBC was reported last week as anxious to find a new spot for the show, although the vacancy chart is down to only a pair of slots on the '56-'57 agenda. The 9 o'clock slot next season is earmarked for "Impact," a suspense telepix series out of the network's hatchery. Chesebrough-Pond's is practically set to sponsor on a two-out-of-three basis, leaving a single vacancy. Fourth go-rounder taken is by "Producers' Showcase."

have been leaders in the fight to get the FCC to make the Connecticut Valley an all-UHF area, eliminating or removing VHF Channel 3 from Hartford. Litigation over that channel between the Travelers Broadcasting Service and the Hartford Telecasting Co. has been in progress for quite some time. An examiner has awarded the channel to the Traveler's, operator of WTIC here, but the commission hasn't acted on this initial decision yet.

WHNC-TV was New England's first television station. It went on the air in 1948. WNHC-AM went on the air in 1944. It was and still is Connecticut's only VHF outlet and lately has been affiliated with ABC and CBS.

Radio Reviews

O'HARA
With Jack Moyles, Ben Wright, John Reed, others
Producer-Director-Writer: William N. Robson
25 Mins., Sun., 6:05 p.m.
Sustaining
CBS, from Hollywood

"O'Hara," an adventure series about a newspaper correspondent in the Far East, apparently has been in the CBS program hopper for some time, since when the Gene Autry show was axed the network immediately substituted this and announced that it would continue at another time slot after an Autry successor was chosen by Wrigley's. Since the chewing gum outfit has already signed Pat Buttram for a new series, it's too late for them to give a listen to "O'Hara," but there's no reason why the adventure entry shouldn't find some other sponsor coin.

It's a racy, flip programmer in the classic adventure-whodunit tradition, fast-paced and snappy. Moreover, the story on the show caught, as adapted by producer-director William Robson from a yarn by Irene Winston, was better-than-average in its offbeat approach and ending. This combination of good story, intriguing setting and snappy dialog, plus some offbeat characterizations, are a winning combination for any adventure show, and add the solid basis of a correspondent off on a story, and you've got a winner, or at least CBS does.

Jack Moyles is fine as Bob O'Hara, the correspondent, and a good supporting cast including Ben Wright and John Reed backed him solidly on the show caught. To give an idea of the show's approach, this one dealt with a big-deal industrialist whose wife was running off with a British adventurer. The runaway doesn't work, the industrialist casts the wife off anyway and then prevents O'Hara from filing his story by buying out a major interest in the new syndicate he works for. Robson keeps the story moving at a good clip, which is all anybody can ask in view of the other strong ingredients. Chan.

FRED WARING SONGFEST
With Ed Herlihy
Producer-director: Parker Gibbs
Writer: Jack Wilson
30 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 2 p.m.
WRCA, New York

"The Fred Waring Songfest" is getting a five-day trailerization before the maestro takes over next Monday (4).

Under the emceeship of Ed Herlihy, the first week of this new cross-the-board entry will relate "The Fred Waring Story" in between spins of Waring's orch and chorus disks. After that the show shifts to Waring's Shawnee-on-Delaware (Pa.) lodge where the orch leader will spin his disks as well as interview celebs from the entertainment and business fields.

Opening day's trailer was easy to take. Herlihy wisely kept the gab at a minimum and let the Waring story be told via wax. Among the disks turntabled Monday (28) were "Say It With Music," "The Girl Of My Dreams," "On Top of Old Smokey," "Collegiate" and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." It was a varied and delightful potpourri of Waring's waxworks.

The series should please dialers who are tiring of the run-of-the-rock'n'roll platter shows. The series goes out on the network at 5 p.m. the same day. Gros.

Money's the Root of All Evil

WISK Disk Jocks in Mpls., Mobbed During Cash Handouts, Nurse Bruises

Minneapolis, May 29.

Five radio station WISK disk jockies still are nursing bruises sustained when the continuing local audio cash giveaway war hit a new frenzied high as they attempted to hand out $1,000 in $5, $10 and $20 bills on an orderly first-come first-served basis.

The stunt had been well advertised over the air in advance. The bills were in sealed envelopes sans any outside designation as to the amount of money therein. People were supposed to step up to the jockies and ask politely for one of the envelopes.

But standing at noon in front of a loop sponsor store, the quintet was mobbed by an estimated 5,000 people, some 4,500 more than it had been expected would be attracted by the chance to get quick buck handout. The six policemen lost control of the crowd and a traffic jam ensued.

When the mob tried to snatch the envelopes from their grasp, the disk jockies tossed all of them out on a "catch-as-catch-can" basis and beat a hasty retreat after suffering some pummeling during the getaway. In the mob's ensuing scramble there were no serious injuries as far as the police could learn.

Stunt was conceived as a switch in the local radio stations' cash giveaway war and to publicize WCOW's name change to WISK, to create publicity otherwise and to stir up word-of-mouth. All Twin Cities' newspapers carried stories on it.

In the war in which many of the Twin Cities' stations engaged and which shows no sign of abating after nearly two months, WCCO, for example, already has passed out $18,000 in cash and WDGY now is promising a cash contest with a single $105,000 cash prize. Until the WISK gimmick the money had gone largely to people whose telephone numbers, home addresses and auto license numbers had been selected at random.

George Gobel's live one will have "Encore Theatre" as pinchhitter. No word yet on what moves in for the Max Liebman 90-minute every-fourth-week specials. "Hit Parade," last season replaced by Ann Sothern's "Private Secretary" in a CBS moveover, this time up will get another telepixer, "Adventure Theatre," with Paul Douglas. American Tobacco and Hudnut stay with it.

The new slate put out to fill the 12 N. Y. vacancies to the national board of AFTRA in the upcoming referendum have already published a new anti-AWARE platform. But the "coalition," which was formed a fortnight back to oppose it, has not appeared yet with the anti-AWARE doctrine, as some of its members promised. When organized, one of the "coalitionites" who had run as one of the dethroned pro-AWARE group last year, said that he knew nothing about the stand. However, it's said that others of the group formerly in power are fully cognizant of the anti-AWARE stand their 12-man slate intends to embrace.

Larry Wynn's 'We'll Service Everything' In New Type Setup

New type of station service organization embracing sales, programming, publicity, filmbuying, merchandising and general liaison on the New York level has been established by Larry Wynn, former sales manager at WABD and WABC-TV in Gotham. Outfit, The Lawrence Wynn Co., offers "special station services," all of which are directed at on-the-spot solicitations and dealing in Gotham on behalf of client stations.

On the sales side, which would predominate, Wynn would supplement efforts of the station reps both via liaison with the reps and special agency calls with Wynn's own contacts. That's on the spot side; he'll also solicit added network business for stations from the agencies. Research in the form of analyses of rate-price structure, programming and packaging will seek to explain missing business.

Among the other services are filmbuying, which would embrace direct contact with homeoffice sales execs of the syndicators, plus ability to take advantage of quick openings for top product; programming advice; merchandising and publicity, the latter concentrating on trade publications and talent and personnel funneled from N. Y. through Wynn to fill station needs.

Hartford—FCC has approved another AM station for this state. It will be located at Old Saybrook and will operate on 500 watts power, daytime. Owners of the station are Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Trantino of West Hartford, and Nathan L. Dubin, West Hartford. Mr. Trantino has been sales rep for WGTH, Hartford.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

Anniversary party over the weekend in Washington for Ted Granik's "American Forum of the Air" brought back some milestone memories for G. W. (Johnny) Johnstone, radio-tv director of the National Assn. of Manufacturers, who tail-ended a six-week transcontinental trek by dropping in on the Granik-NBC shindig. It was Johnstone, who as director of pubrelations, news & special events at WOR-Mutual in 1935, set up facilities for the show to originate from Washington when Granik moved to the capital on a special assignment under Federal Housing Administrator Nathan Straus (now owner of WMCA, N. Y.). Johnstone, after installing the show in the Interior Bldg., then urged a time switch to Sundays at 8 to 9, opposite the terrific competition of the late Fred Allen and Edgar Bergen-Charlie McCarthy shows on CBS and NBC. Idea was to grab off those Monday morning frontpage pieces in the dailies, Sunday being the poor news day that it is. This is still the pattern.

Johnstone also recalls the hectic days of the Col. McCormick-FDR feud, with McCormick decreeing that no shows out of Washington would be carried on his WGN-Mutual setup except the single entry of the Chi Tribune's Washington chief, Arthur Sears Henning, who broadcast by direct line from his own office. To get around the Colonel's tabu, Johnstone arranged a special cue system on the show, which read, "WOL, in cooperation with WOR, presents the American Forum of the Air" in opening and closing. There was a 20-second wait after the closing before the announcer dared to mention, "This is the Mutual Broadcasting System."

Best of "Omnibus" will get distribution to colleges, schools, civic organizations and other educational institutions through a deal set by the Ford Foundation Radio-TV Workshop with the McGraw-Hill Text-Film Dept. Publisher will eventually take on over 70 of the "Omnibus", features but starts off with distribution of two "series," the "Constitution" three-parter featuring attorney Joseph N. Welch, and the five-part filmed "Lincoln" series. McGraw-Hill has been expanding in its television-originating film distribution, having taken on several "See It Now" shows for educational sale.

NBC-TV's WNBQ in Chicago carried off its switch to tint with a minimum of technical snafues. Assistant general manager Henry Sjogren says the station received but 25 letters complaining about the black and white picture during the conversion to color which bowed April 15. And most of complaints weren't an engineering problem, but were beefs that Clint Youle's markings on his weather map weren't legible. That was easily remedied by changing the lighting.

Writers of the letters were visited by an RCA service man to have their sets checked free of charge.

Mutual Broadcasting press department, which won a Freedom Foundation medal and $1,000 for similar work in 1952, is again offering 250 U. S. and Canadian newspapers gratis news coverage at the Democratic and Republican conventions. Radio network is providing bylined articles on the Chi and Frisco political powwows by its commentary staff.

Mutual is making available a minimum of four articles from each convention, to be delivered as on-the-spot reports. In the first few days of the offer, 25 stations, including the Minneapolis Star-Tribune, Boston Traveler, Trenton Trentonian, Montreal Star, accepted. The FF award was first prize in the "outstanding public service to nation's press" category.

Broadcast Music Inc. is making a package of radio and tv scripts available gratis to stations as an election year pubserv boost. Titled "1956 Presidential Package," scripts will be sent to over 3,000 stations. For radio, outfit is supplying a variety of half-hour, quarter-hour and five-minute scripts as well as "get out and vote" station breaks. Television stations will receive two half-hour scripts. Twenty-one scripts go out in all by June 15.

Rev. Malcolm Boyd got a degree of Master of Sacred Theology from Union Theological Seminary of N. Y. this week, climaxing five years of study for the former radio-tv exec. Rev. Boyd was formerly partnered with Mary Pickford and Buddy Rogers in radio-tv production via PRB Inc. and was prexy of Hollywood's Television Producers Assn.

titled "The Brass Ring." Following week it's another Herridge adaptation, this time of Stephen Crane's short story, "Blue Hotel." Tentatively set for July 30 is DeRoy's second script, "Emmeline," to be followed by "The Ballad of Yermo Red," a musical by Marcel Klauber and Billy Grady."

That's all on the definite list as of now, but Herridge is talking with Earl Hyman, the young Negro actor who won unanimous raves on Broadway in the shortlived "Mr. Johnson." When and if he's available—he's set this summer for the Stratford Memorial Theatre and for the incoming "St. Joan"—he'll do a stint, probably in the fall. Also on the tentative list is George Bernard Shaw's "The Village Wooing," but since this is a two-character play, it will depend on whether Herridge can cast it to his satisfaction. For the fall, he's talking up a John P. Marquand story. On the directorial side, he'll have Francis Moriarty, his old "Camera Three" director, for most of the summer, along with Tom Donovan, Carl Genus and Paul Stanley. Herridge is slated for 23 weeks running at the "Studio One" helm before he takes off for 10 weeks in Europe in early winter. On his return, he shares production chores with "Studio One" regular Felix Jackson, who's taking time out for a feature film production deal.

Seattle—John H. Eishhorn, assistant to general manager Otto Brandt of King Broadcasting here, has been named manager of radio station KGW in Portland.

Chi Live TV Vs. Pix

season has spared no horses attempting to fill the band with live shows, but with series of sponsorial defections only the Monday night 11 to 11:30 half hour remains in-the-flesh with the "Universal Golf Clinic" and Howard Miller's two-hour Friday night music display. For a brief span earlier, Channel 2 was alive at 11 six nights a week.

The WBBM-TV jury is still out on the film vs. line issue. But it's known some of the feature boys are eyeing the open spots and polishing up the argument that they're a natural berth for some topnotch pix which might dent the traditional rating hold WGN-TV's nightly features have on the 10 to midnight strip. Also it's argued the 11 o'clock films would lend additional values to WBBM-TV's 10 to 11 block of quarter-hour live strips.

But for the nonce, the vidpixers have grabbed off the recent WBBM-TV openings. For example, Household Finance is dropping its 60-minute identity on Miller's Friday night showpiece to install Official Films' "Four-Star Playhouse" reruns in the Saturday night 10 p.m. spot being vacated by Peewee King's live country and western show June 9. And the Nelson Bros. furniture stores have latched onto the other two half-hours Saturday nights for a brace of telefilms still to be picked.

(Miller's live program remains 50% sponsored at the moment, with Canfield Beverages and Cadillac Heating to share the first hour Friday nights.)

There's also a possibility another hunk of cross-the-board time will open up for film on WBKB. According to present plans, the ABC-TV station is axing the Buddy Lester show in the 11:15 to midnight band in July. While veep Sterling (Red) Quinlan has ambitions to keep the period live, it's considered possible that film fodder may get the ultimate nod.

Vidpix distribs also cut themselves in for some of car merchant Moran's replacement spending for his live WBKB variety show which expired last Friday night after seven and a half years. He's lodged Ziv's "Mr. District Attorney" and MCA-TV's "Federal Men" back-to-back in the Channel 7 spot. It's understood Moran is giving the brace of telefilms a 13-week rating run and if they don't hold up he'll switch to a feature series.

Not only is there plenty of intramural jostling between the feature and the program sellers, the infighting between the various station's film buyers is growing in intensity. WGN-TV, which as an indie has parlayed celluloid into a nighttime bonanza, is constantly upgrading its stockpile of full-lengthers so its 10 o'clock sponsors can retain their latenight dominance cross-the-board.

In recent weeks, WGN-TV film director Elizabeth Bain bought a batch of 11 firstrun features from Atlantic TV; 10 firstrunners from M&A Alexander, and a General Teleradio bundle. And the station is on the prowl for fresh and strong vidpix to muscle up its primetime slots vis-a-vis the network competition. The initial such spec purchase earlier this season was Ziv's "Man Called X" which was sold pronto. Followthrough has been the buy of the new "Highway Patrol" series from the same firm for the next semester. "Patrol" this cycle has been running on WBKB.

WABD Still Shuffling; Walter Wulff Ankling

The exec shuffling at WABD, N. Y., isn't over yet. Walter Wulff, film buyer and manager of film programs for the DuMont station, is ankling as of next week, to be replaced by Jack Lynn. And Mort Kasman is being brought in to fill part of the duties vacated by Barry Shear, who quit as WABD exec producer-director last week to moveover to NBC-TV.

Lynn was formerly manager of WEBB, Baltimore radio outlet. Kasman, as biz manager of the program department under John Kieran, will thereby be handling Shear's more administrative tasks.

British Com'l TV Friction

London and the midlands on Saturday nights, and was due to be rested in mid-June, is now being switched to a Friday telecast for midlands reception only. Many other readjustments will be necessary by both programmers to fill the program gaps.

The split between A-R and ATV does not, however, affect the networking deals with ABC-TV (weekend programmers in the midlands and the north) and Granada-TV (weekday programmers in Manchester). ABC-TV are still taking the top weekend ATV shows beamed from London, including "Sunday Night at the London Palladium," and have set a deal for their "Film Fanfare" to be networked on Saturdays between London, Birmingham and Manchester from mid-June. They are also lining up a drama series for the fall, to be networked from the midlands to London.

Granada-TV, which only entered active programming at the beginning of this month, is adhering to the networking arrangements which have been already published. It has a two-way traffic between its station in the north and the London and Birmingham outlets.

The economic effect of the break between A-R and ATV will not be known for some months, but there's no doubt that it must upset advance calculations, and if unduly prolonged would affect the quality of programs.

NEW PROGRAM

A few of television's most exciting buys are still available. Most important, they can be scheduled in excellent time slots. We think you'll agree that this is your year for ABC-Television.

ABC TELEVISION NETWORK

CBS-TV Program Casualties Now Headed for Syndication Route

CBS Television Film Sales, which over the past couple of years has been picking up rerun rights to shows going off the CBS-TV network, is close to a deal to acquire distribtuion of 52 films in the "Our Miss Brooks" series. With the Eve Arden starrer bowing off the web next month after a four-year run under General Foods auspices, it becomes available for rerun syndication for the first time.

At the same time, the CBS subsidiary has already firmed up distribution rights to two other CBS-TV casualties, "Brave Eagle" and "Adventures of Champion," both of which ran during the past season in the 7:30-8 strip experiment on CBS, "Brave Eagle" having run Wednesdays and "Champion" Fridays. There are 26 films in each series. "Eagle," strangely enough, is a Roy Rogers Frontier Productions package—strange because of Rogers' close identity with NBC. "Champion" is a Gene Autry "Flying A" package.

Actually, Film Sales has been representing all three shows—"Miss Brooks," "Eagle" and "Champion"—for international sale, so the relationship is not entirely new. Syndication subsid also has distribution on the 13 films in each of the "My Favorite Husband" and "That's My Boy" series which it's offering on a network-sale basis as summer replacements.

'Christian' on Again

The on-again, off-again production status of Ziv's "Dr. Christian" half-hour is evidently over, since the company now plans to sell the Coast-based telefilm production through syndication for fall exposure. Jean Hersholt is back as star of the series.

Hersholt, who reportedly wants to give way eventually to another star in the medico skein, was ill recently, calling a halt to production. Ziv has about three or four in the can now.

RESOLVE LITIGATION ON 25 WANGER PIX

After five years of litigation over television distribution rights to 25 Walter Wanger features, the principals have reached a settlement which gives Masterpiece Productions television and theatrical rights in the U. S., Canada and Alaska. Other parties to the suit were Matty Fox and his Motion Pictures for Television, Herman Greenfield and United Artists.

Under the settlement, Masterpiece will permit Fox's sub-distributor (Guild Films) to continue servicing of contracts set prior to the first of this year, while all future pacts will be serviced by Masterpiece. Pix include "The Long Voyage Home," "Stage Coach," "To Be or Not to Be," "I Married a Witch." "Foreign Correspondent," "Winter Carnival," "You Only Live Once." "The Kansan," "History Is Made at Night" and "Blockade."

Four Vidoater Series For Alexander Prod.

Hollywood, May 29.

Robert Alexander Productions, besides "Fremont the Trailblazer" series to be made in association with Harry Ackerman of CBS-TV, plans for three more vidfilm series in the western idiom. Thesp Steve Cochran, a partner in the Alexander firm, who will star in the Fremont series, will make his directorial debut on the three pilots.

Pilots, entitled "Decision at Laramie," "Monterey Incident" and "Sierra Crossing," and scripted by John Dunkel, will be produced by Harrison Reader. Filming is slated to commence next week, upon Cochran's return from a Miami legit engagement.

KLING COAST MERGER WITH NORTH AMERICAN

Chicago, May 29.

Kling Film Enterprises, Chi-anchored telefilm firm, has merged its Hollywood adjunct with North American Film Corp. New outfit, tagged Kling California, Inc., has Robert Eirinberg, KFE prexy, as board chairman and Edgar Yuhl and Robert Larsen, partners in the North American setup, prexy and exec veepee respectively in the merged operation.

Kling California, located in the former Chaplin studios, will continue to turn out tv commercials and industrial films with eventual plans to produce half-hour show packages. As a result of the consolidation with North American, Gail Papineau has checked out as Kling's Coast production chief to set up his own company, La Brea Productions.

KFE's Windy City adjunct, Kling Film Productions with Harry Lange as exec veepee and general manager and Les Weinrott as exec veepee in charges of sales and programming, continues as before in the Washington Blvd. studios.

Cinema-Vue's New Batch Of 52 Color Cartoons

Cinema-Vue Corp, has acquired a new group of 52 color cartoons, which added to its backlog of 350 black-and-white subjects, brings its total animated library to 402 shorts. It had acquired 150 b-w's only a week earlier. All the films go into its "Whimseyland" package.

Of the 52 new color subjects, 12 of which are "Mutt & Jeff" pix, a total of 40 were acquired from Morris Kleinerman, who's associated with Cinema-Vue. Others were acquired from indie producers.

DESILU SIGNS MOPPET

Hollywood, May 29.

Five-year-old Richard Keith has been inked to a seven-year pact by Desilu Productions, his first assignment being to play the role of Ricky Ricardo Jr., tv film son of Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz in "I Love Lucy."

fewer made this year than last, are still in there fighting for whatever time vacancies there are. ABC-TV, for the first time, is a major factor in time consumption; can the Washington probers ultimately chip away more time from CBS and NBC than the third network has gained via its new stature? Other things block the way to a perfect picture, e.g., ability to make room for additional hour-and-a-half local showcasings for feature use; inability to make network deals (ABC is willing, it's reported, but can't supply the kind of cash desired of a national exposure), etc.

Sixty-thousand a pic seems pretty high right now, but of any video-biased pic catalog, there is the question of how many are not suitable to tv, because of age, censorship problems or because of grade-B status. If 100 pictures are arbitrarily lopped off the 780 Metros —and that's said to be a highly conservative estimate — it leaves 680 pictures which either Hyman or Landau can hope to sell to tv, if all other conditions are near perfect. If Landau could use all 780 pix, he'd be paying over $51,000 for each, which he'd have to write off before the lease is up. At 680 pix, the per pic costs jump to $59,000 each. For Hyman 780 would cost roughly $64,000 each, with porportions jumping if catalog is cut to 680. Moreover, some say it might be hard convincing any film buyer on the station level to take all 680 when he can mix the best up with some from Fox or NTA or Screen Gems.

Judging by these conditions, it is observed that industrial firms which aligned themselves with Landau and Hyman in making big film purchases are willing to take long odds on a profit, since they will receive partnership shares and not interest on loans. One point of view is that investors must be relying heavily on theatrical re-release rights, which, because tv rights are of such widespread interest to the trade, may not yet have come to light.

Patti Page's TV Film Segs Into Syndication

"Patti Page Show," the series of 78 quarter-hour musicals filmed by Screen Gems for Oldsmobile spot-booking and since dropped by the automaker, has been set into syndication with a major sale in the form of a WCBS-TV, N. Y. sale for all 78 pix.

The CBS-TV flagship will use the films in its Saturday 6:15 slot as a replacement for the Frankie Laine filmed series out of the Guild Films stable, which ran 39 weeks, 26 of them sponsored by Progresso Foods. No sponsor for "Page" yet; presumably same spot sponsors as are in the Laine segment will carry over into the replacement.

BORDER STATIONS BUY KINES FROM MEXICO

In addition to the dubbed U.S. vidfilms that are deeply entrenched in this country's Spanish-speaking tv markets, stations north of the Rio Grande are going in now for kinescopes of live stanzas originating in Mexico City. Teleprogramas de Mexico is distributing the kines to stations in California, Arizona, Texas and Colorado.

Distrib is exporting "Fiesta En Mexico," a half-hour musical variety stanza; "Teatro Angel Garasa," an hour light drama; "Mil Suenos por la Calle," a half-hour drama, and the bullfights. Teleprogramas boss, Rene Anselmo, hopes to have the stanzas running in 15 to 20 U. S. markets by the year's end. He has six now.

AA's Big Cartoon Push

Associated Artists has begun actively pitching 234 "Popeye" and 337 Warner Bros. cartoons to tv stations. Company is pushing the color angle of the 571 shorts by offering 311 Warner cartoons in tint and 114 of the "Popeyes."

The 571, company reports, are being offered as one package. The Warner material includes 46 "Bugs Bunnys," 24 "Daffy Ducks" and 17 "Porky Pigs."

DIAL 9 FOR MUSIC
With Pat McCaffrie, Betty Bryan, Kyle Kimbro, Bob Trendler Orch
JoAnn Miller, guest
Producer-Writer: Les Urbach
Director: Lee Trednari
30 Mins.; Wed., 9 p.m.
Sustaining
WGN-TV, Chicago

Program director Jay Faraghan and his WGN-TV cohorts have cooked up an easy-to-take musical half-hour that points up the programming dilemma of an indie station during the prime evening hours when the competition is pumping out network produce. Through the adroit use of telepix, WGN-TV has been able to maintain a generally respectable rating stance vis-a-vis the national shows but the live efforts are a horse of another rating.

So from an attention-getting standpoint this Wednesday night at 9 serving poses a tough challenge for producer Les Urbach. Competitive context aside, "Dial 9" on installment seen (23) came off as a smoothly assembled showpiece that ranks with best in the local sweepstakes. If nothing else, it highlights the fact that given the exehequer greenlight the WGN-TV programmers have the imagination and knowhow to add further lustre to Channel 9's hometown countenance.

Ably hosted this go by Pat McCaffrie, who works with a likeable free-and-easy style, the 30-minutes was a virtually continuous roundrobin of songs by Betty Bryan, Kyle Kimbro, guest JoAnn Miller, backed in bigleague fashion by Bob Trendler and the house band. Both Miss Bryan and Kimbro were in fine form with their solos and duets and Miss Miller supplied a sultry fillip with a brace of ditties from her nitery rep. McCaffrie got into the musical act for additional versatility payoffs with a hardriding "Begin the Beguine" clarinet solo.

But most impressive of all were the half dozen or so sets through which director Lee Trednari skillfully guided the action to avoid the static effect that's the bane of televised music. Each tune or medley was showcased individually for maximum impact. Whole affair has an aura of class that does the Chi Tribune station proud. Dave.

Tele Followups

incorporated interviews with a number of the expedition's personnel from topper Rear Admiral George Dufek down to the lowliest member of the deck force. Tipoff on what kind of detail this is can be found in Admiral Dufek's observation: "It's the toughest operation I've ever seen anywhere."

NBC rates laurels for fine pictorial reporting in "Antarctica: Third World—Part II," which Reuven Frank produced under supervision of Joseph O. Meyers, manager of NBC News. Hartigan and Pat Trese wrote the continuity. While this hour-long telecast was unsponsored, the net appropriately enough tossed in a spot announcement for Hunt Club dog food which urged viewers to "feed your dog what the Navy used on its Antarctic expedition." Gilb.

Alcoa Hour

"The Confidence Man," a comedy by Ernest Kinoy, was an entertaining vehicle for Jessica Tandy and Hume Cronyn on the NBC-TV "Alcoa Hour" Sunday night (27). Set in the 1880s, yarn about an incompetent swindler who gets his comeuppance from an intended victim was scripted with a literate brand of wit and produced with a charming period flavor that established a tongue-in-cheek air about the whole stanza.

The performances were in a similarly stylized vein. Cronyn played the con man with an eloquence and a flourish that could be described as a well-disciplined hamminess. Jessica Tandy, as the romantic spinster who turns the tables on the swindler, also turned in a skillful comedy performance delicately shaded with pathos. Included in a solid supporting cast were J. Pat O'Malley, Dorothy Sands, John McGovern and Rex O'Malley. A barbershop quartet supplied suitable background music.

A big plug for the upcoming film, "The Spirit of St. Louis," dominated the Alcoa commercials. Leland Heyward, the pic's producer, delivered a not-too-effective rundown of the role of aluminum in aviation with the help of background film clips. Herm.

Dragnet

It's easy to see why Jack Webb flipped—even if it was publicity touting—after he ogled the "rushes" on last week's (24) "Dragnet." It was one of those affecting human interest yarns that might have wrung authentic tears from parlors and pubs around the country. In a major guest shot, the fragile Virginia Vincent, a legit-to-tv regular, with bedraggled makeup, nervous hands, and a wistful love-for-the-deejay showing all over her all over her lonely face, rang up a top score in quiet, studied emoting. After that, it was inevitable that she'd grab viewer sympathy against the legal fact of her "just this once" theft of a platinum and diamond wristwatch as a mailed gift to the disk jockey. The sympatico stuff was the general idea, anyway, and Webb played it and staged it for that value on the NBC-TV longrunner. Trau.

Star Tonight

There's nothing quite so embarrassing as a fantasy that doesn't come off. That about sums up "Have Hope and Have Patience," last Thursday's (24) offering on "Star Tonight," soon to end its run on ABC-TV. This John Gerstad-Norman Brooks collaboration was about a jazz trumpeter who "sent himself until he was real gone," which is to say he just faded away, leaving a girlfriend and a jazz combo without a trumpeter. He re-materialized finally to the strains of "Bill Bailey, Won't You Please Come Home," which seems to make sense since they called him Bill in the play.

Purpose of "Star Tonight" is to spotlight new talent with some help by experienced hands in the feature roles. Call this try a flop on that score too. Lead was Rosalind Paige, a vocalist with MGM Records, and tied in was the title song of her own composition which she gave a hefty plug. She's a passable singer and a looker, but not much of an actress, at least not in this attempt. Perhaps it's a little too much to ask a novice to perform a role that's ludicrous to begin with, and with a more sensible role she might have proved more competent.

Nor did the older hands fare much better. They all looked rather ludicrous, especially Carleton Carpenter as the disappearing hornblower. Jimmy Komack and Norman Feld were the best of the lot as fellow musicians, but Horace MacMahon was wasted in a bit part, as was Josephine Brown. Producer Harry Herrimann and director George Weber missed the boat on this one; the best parts of it were the jazz music of an unbilled combo and some interesting camera groupings by Weber.

Intention is to hire a top-priced business figure as prez, in order to give it the kind of prestige that Eric Johnston, for example, gives the Motion Picture Assn. of America. Organization will operate on a domestic level, in cooperation with other trade groups like NARTB, the Assn. of National Advertisers and the American Assn. of Advertising Agencies, and in the foreign field to bolster the use of U. NBC-TV Vs. Film Syndicators into three groups—syndicators, "financial traders and promoters" currently acquiring Hollywood's feature film backlog and toll-tv interests—specifically named five syndication companies as the spearheads of the attack on the webs. The five so named were Official Films, Screen Gems, Television Programs of America, Ziv and RKO Teleradio Pictures. All but the last-named are the charter members of the new ATFD.

The brief charged that Moore's testimony "falls into clearer perspective in the light of the undisclosed interests for whom he was speaking when he testified before this committee. We understand that Mr. Moore's presentation was part of an organized campaign previously agreed upon and financed by a group of film syndicators and related interests, whom Mr. Moore served as Treasurer and to whom he has made periodic progress reports. We further understand that this film group had a series of meetings, agreed upon the retainer of counsel who represented Mr. Moore at his appearance before this committee and consulted together on the network attack to be made through Mr. Moore."

In reply to this charge, Moore declared that "NBC apparently has so little confidence in the merits of its case that it has chosen to becloud the issue by attacking the motives of those who have criticized network policies . . . Acting on its own, and at its own expense, KTTV presented its views to the . . . Committee . . . at the committee's request . . . KTTV, as was its right, has consulted with film distributors and other television stations, and several of us have come together for the purpose of common research, both factual and legal. From the outset, KTTV has advised the staffs of the Network Study Committee and the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee of this community of interest and activity."

Blast 'Promoters . . . Traders'

The "wide variety of promoters and financial traders" entering television with the Hollywood backlogs view "this new public communications medium as a source of quick profit," the brief declared, and "to obtain such profit, they must force huge amounts of television time for thousands of these movies; and the disruption of the network service offers an inviting route to achieve this objective." Transactions already consummated for backlogs involve 1,888 old features and 4,072 shorts, the brief said, released for a total of over $42,000,000. This is in addition to 7,500 old features already on the market plus the in-negotiation Metro backlog, and these "would absorb all the broadcast time of a station operating 16 hours daily for more than three years running." Though the body of the brief mentioned only Matty Fox, linking his RKO library activities to his Skiatron toll-tv interests, the appendix mentioned National Telefilm Associates, Eliot Hyman's Associated Artists Productions and Lou Chesler and his PRM Inc. and Ridgeway Corp.

The great stress in the NBC brief, apart from its defense of option time and must-buy arrangements and the scope of the network contributions to communications and culture as well as to television's growth, was an attack on film programming and its sources. The syndicators, the web averred, "want to create a vacuum in the existing service so that they can fill it with their own product. If they succeed, they may see it filled—not by their own product—but by repeated reruns of Hollywood feature films. The accumulated product in Hollywood's vaults—most of it musty and outdated—would hit television with the impact of a tidal wave. The American viewing public would literally drown in a celluloid sea. This likelihood is given added reality by the huge sums at stake in the trading of Hollywood backlog from motion picture studios to promoters to tv distributors."

Claim Charges 'Absurd'

In this regard, the ATFD reply stated that its four member companies are now responsible for a total of 17 regularly scheduled, sponsored network film programs. "To suggest, as NBC has, that the film companies seek the destruction of the television network structure is an absurdity tantamount to stating that the film companies wish to commit economic suicide. In attacking the quality of film programs, NBC is also criticizing its own program structure. NBC's present network schedule includes approximately 16 half hours of filmed shows each week, out of a total of 21 hours of peak evening time. In addition, NBC through its wholly-owned subsidiary also distributes film shows among which is a substantial backlog of feature motion pictures. Certainly, the men responsible for programming NBC's television network and acquiring films for its syndication subsidiary would not have approved these properties if they did not believe them to be quality programs."

NBC also attacked the validity of Moore's testimony that lack of available time periods on local affiliates of the networks is stifling the film producers and syndicators and hurting local and regional advertisers. "The fact is that television film production and syndication are doing a record business," NBC stated. "The film syndicators themselves predict an even greater expansion in their production and sales in the coming year." NBC also cited cases of national spot and regional film sponsorship where clearances were set among network affiliates and the degree in which they were set in network option time, along with examples where nearly all markets ordered were cleared in Class A time.

Citing its own pioneering in television and the networks' "annual losses of millions of dollars to develop the new medium," NBC blasted the "film come-latelys" who "turned to television only after it had been built by others."

"These film interests and financial traders, if successful in their designs on television, could reap a mountain of profit from the molehill of their contribution to the broadcasting art. But if they achieve their objectives, the American public and the vital new industry of television will be the losers."

Both the ATFD and Moore, however, accused NBC of "clouding" the issue and taking the position that anyone who speaks out against certain network practices is seeking to destroy television. "Instead of making any constructive contribution to the solution of these problems," the ATFD declared, "NBC throws up a smokescreen by issuing an unwarranted and irrelevant claim that any change in the status quo will destroy all television."

Stanton, Bricker

economic picture I find extremely disturbing. It is not a healthful condition for two networks and their owned stations to account for approximately one-half the net income of the entire television industry."

Stanton wrote he has "difficulty in reconciling the statements in your letter with the implicit and explicit thrust of your report, 'The Network Monopoly'." Referring to ananyses of network profits in that report, Stanton declared that "it seems to me that in this respect your report most clearly looks toward regulation which in fact would equate networks with public utilities. I do not understand how regulation of networks explicitly designed to achieve what you believe to be a more equitable distribution of 'revenue, income and profits' can be accomplished by a mere licensing function, confined, as you suggest, to the same kind of 'guardianship' as now obtains in licensing individual stations. Control of 'revenue, income and profits' to me is synonymous with public utility regulation."

Stanton quoted further from the report and stated that proposals to regulate a station's network rate, to regulate who shall get network program service and placement of specific programs on specific stations "compel the conclusion that regulation not all dissimilar from public utility regulation is, whether you intend it or not, what is contemplated." Moreover, Stanton cited testimony before the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on March 26 of this year in which Sen. Bricker specifically called for application of "ordinary public utility rules."

"I am persuaded, and I hope to be able to persuade you when I appear before the Committee," Stanton concluded, "that the perhaps inadvertent result of the enactment of your proposals would indeed be to suppress and possibly destroy networks. It is reassuring to learn now that this is not your intention."

posed for the fv venture by the 20-odd participation sponsors on McNeill's radio "Club" on the opposition network.

NBC-TV association has the blessings of ABC-TV prexy Robert Kintner, with whom McNeill and his biz manager Ralph Bergsten conferred last week before huddling with NBC-TV's programming veep Dick Pinkham. ABC apparently has given up on McNeill in tv after his nighttime show of several years back and the BC simulcast a year ago failed to make the grade. By the same token, there could be some blushes at ABC-TV, which next fall is launching its morning debut featuring supposedly personality salesmen, should the toastmaster prove a video winner for NBC-TV.

MCA is repping McNeill in the talks.

WABC-TV Grabs Kellogg Spot Biz

In a direct confirmation of its rising stature in the Gotham market paralleling the parent network's national upbeat, WABC-TV, the ABC-TV N. Y. flagship, has grabbed off a huge chunk of Kellogg spot business, most of it from rival flagship (NBC) WRCA-TV. Deal placed via the Leo Burnett agency of Chicago gives WABC-TV the spot-booked "Superman" and "Wild Bill Hickok" filmed shows plus a five-a-week morning quarter-hour in the station's "Tinker's Workshop."

Kellogg business, which involves some major spot billings, had been sitting at WRCA-TV for the past couple of years. Tho two film entries, which Kellogg spots in more than 80 markets apiece, move over to WABC-TV June 5 and 7, and go into the station's 6-6:30 Tuesday "Superman" and Thursday "Hickok" spots, following "Mickey Mouse Club." Station will retain its Gene Autry vidpix in the Monday, Wednesday and Friday slots.

"Tinker's Workshop" buy, which involves sponsorship of the 8:45-9 a. m. strip five days weekly, gives the morning hour a nearly sold-out status. Two quarter-hours are now sponsored fully

ALBUMS AS TYROS' SHOWCASE

Those High-C Phono Figures

Managers and pressagents are stepping on each other's dollar signs in the rush to announce the "biggest disk signing in history" for their singing clients. The astronomical guarantee figures have been putting the record company execs on the hot seat trying to "square" the figures with other artists on the label.

Recent examples of the big-money play are Doris Day's five-year pact with Columbia at a "guarantee of $1,500,000," which incidentally followed the Jo Stafford five-year signing with the same label at a "$500,000 guarantee," and Sarah Vaughan's signing with Mercury for four years with a "$500,000 guarantee." The thrushes will have to sell a lot of disks to earn those "guarantees."

Local 47 Defies Petrillo by Support Of Insurgents; Rap Trust Fund Bite

Hollywood, May 29.

Membership of Local 47 shouted defiance to AFM prexy James C. Petrillo last night (Mon.) in voting, by overwhelming majority, a series of resolutions supporting insurgent faction, instructing delegates to AFM convention to seek curbs on Petrillo's powers and changes in the constitution. About 200 members attended the session which registered opposition to Petrillo's reinstatement of John te Groen and Maury Paul as president and secretary, respectively, despite their removal by previous membership meetings. Te Groen and Paul are delegates to the convention. As such they are instructed to notify the convention that Local 47 opposes being forced to take them back.

Meeting also passed vote of continued confidence in policies of insurgent leader Cecil Read.

Changes sought by resolutions which delegates are instructed to introduce at Atlantic City would trim the president's powers under controversial Article 1, Section 1; ask AFM to go on record as favoring collective bargaining; legislation which would prohibit canned music; seek renegotiation of recording contracts to give pay raise to musicians instead of to the Performance Trust Fund; reverse last year's ruling switching to Trust Fund $25 pix-to-tv scoring fee originally paid directly to sidemen;

Berlin's 'Xmas' Klondike

A statistic on Irving Berlin's "White Christmas" shows that Bing Crosby's Decca waxing thereof, as of Dec. 31, 1955, royalty statement, sold 10,456, 174 and that the aggregate sales of all labels to date just top 20,000,000 platters.

Berlin Music Corp. records indicate between 125-135 different disk versions of the ballad.

Petrillo, Read Showdown Set For AFM Meet

The fight between American Federation of Musicians prexy James C. Petrillo and leaders of Coast Local 47 will have its showdown at the AFM convention in Atlantic City, opening June 11. Petrillo and the union's international exec board already have okayed a recommendation to expel Cecil F. Read, leader of the Coast dissidents, and 10 of his supporters, but have postponed execution of the explusion order until the expected appeals are made to the convention floor.

All the aces are held in Petrillo's hands in this battle and it's expected that he will face no significant opposition in dealing any way he wants with the Read group. Even the New York delegation, traditionally independent of Petrillo, has expressed its disapproval of the Read group's stance towards the Music Performance Trust Fund setup. A segment of N.Y. Local 802 members, who are sympathetic to the Coast dissidents and have been meeting quietly as a "social group," are not expected

CATHOLIC MUSIC FIRM AFFILIATES WITH SESAC

M. N. Nemmers Publishing Co., largest and oldest firm in the U.S. exclusively publishing Catholic Church Music, has affiliated with Sesac Inc. for the licensing of its catalog. Firm, which was founded in 1893 and headquarters in Milwaukee, publishes both traditional and modern ecclesiastical church works.

Sesac, which licenses many religioso and standard firms, now has 286 publisher affiliates. Licensing society is moving shortly from its Fifth Ave. offices to enlarged quarters in the Coliseum Bldg. on Columbus Circle.

Dot Stock Not for Sale; Prexy Knocks on Wood

Hollywood, May 29.

Rumored public sale of stock in the fast-growing indie Dot Records Inc. won't occur at this time, prexy Randy Wood reported over the weekend. Business is too good.

Firm is too busy, he explained, servicing distribs and finalizing plans for a move to permanent headquarters in Hollywood to undertake the public offering at this time. However, he added, "there have been a flood of inquiries and offers to subscribe, for which I am deeply grateful. Perhaps when we are established in Hollywood we may reconsider and make such a stock offering available."

Diskery reportedly is ready to sign a lease for a portion of the office space utilized by Capitol Records, at Sunset and Vine, before the Coast plattery moved into its own homeoffice. Dot move-over probably will take place around July 1.

Gala for Geo. Shearing's 'I Am an American' Oath

George Shearing's naturalization as an American citizen was marked at a special gala last night (Tues.) at Basin Street, New York jazz nitery. The blind pianist came to the U.S. from England about 10 years ago.

Shearing is currently filling out a regular engagement at Basin Street with his quintet.

Jazz Aids Symph

Hipsters are now coming to the financial aid of the longhairs. As a benefit for the Connecticut Symphony Orchestra, a jazz concert, headed by Duke Ellington's orch, will be played at the Fairfield (Conn.) Univ. Stadium Bowl July 28. Chico Hamilton's quintet, a modern combo, has also been set for the bash. Sidney Gross, the British disk jockey now on the ABC network, is organizing and emceeing the benefit concert.

For the event, Gross is writing a special opus tracing the historic milestones of jazz.

SURPASS SINGLES FOR SPRINGBOARD

By MIKE GROSS

Record company artists & repertoire men are now looking to albums as a springboard for new artists. In the past, new singers were launched mainly via the pop singles route but now the operation virtually is being reversed with the single disk releases waiting until the artist steps out in an album.

The a&r boys figure that they can get a longer run for their artists in package form. The disk jockeys are paying more attention to albums than ever before and trying to give as many as possible programming time on their turntables. In the case of single releases, however, it's become tougher for a new artist to get proper exposure. With the flood of singles still pouring out, the deejays have tended to stick with the bigger names and brush off the tyro diskers. Some even end up in the trash heap without even getting an initial hearing.

Not so with albums. The LP package is considered something of value to the deejay and if he can't audition it during his working hours, he's likely to take it home for a hearing. The launching of new singers on albums is also giving the deejay a chance to play at being an a&r man.

In the past few months the jockeys have been in steady touch with the a&r man advising them what tunes from the LP package seem to be making noise in their terri-

Gordon Jenkins' Vik-to-Capitol

Gordon Jenkins is switching allegiance to Capitol Records. For the past year, the maestro-composer has been working under the Vik (formerly Label X) banner. He joined the RCA subsid label after a long stay with Decca.

Other signings at Capitol in the past week have been Wanda Jackson, a country & western thrush; Ken Errar, formerly of the Four Freshmen, who'll solo trumpet and vocalize; warbler Trudi Richards and a new vocal combo, Tabby Calvin & Rounders.

'STREET SINGER' TRACY GRABBED BY VICTOR

Arthur Tracy will get back into the singing groove via RCA Victor. He reached his popularity peak in the 1930s on radio and records as "The Street Singer." For a number of years he's been operating in real estate in Washington, D. C.

Victor has pencilled in a recording session for Tracy June 7. He'll etch four tunes, his trademarked "Marta," "September Song," "One Night of Love" and "I'm Always Chasing Rainbows."

Dismiss Plagiarism Suit Vs. 'Moulin Rouge'

Washington, May 29.

A damage suit against United Artists Corp., charging them with music plagiarism in connection with the film, "Moulin Rouge," was tossed out of Federal Court here last week. Judge F. Dickinson Letts ruled that the plaintiff, Sydney Hirshon of Washington who claimed the music from his song, "London Bells Will Ring Again," was used in the film song, "Song From Moulin Rouge," had assigned his rights to a music publisher, and hence could not bring any suit in his own name.

The suit had asked the court to determine damages estimated by Hirshon at $2,000,000. United Artists attorney William B. Wolf Jr. said the music in the picture was written by a French composer, George Auric. Court action was a denial for a rehearing of a case disposed of in favor of the studio earlier this month.

Album Push Cues ASCAP Bonanza As Standards Dominate Output

Stand-in Stands Out

The Columbia Pictures biopic, "The Eddy Duchin Story," may or may not result in a disk windfall for the late bandleader as did the film biog of the late Glenn Miller a couple of years ago, but Carmen Cavallaro is already getting a big payoff. Cavallaro, who cut the Duchin piano part of the pic's soundtrack, has been again getting a big play on disks after a period of wax quiescence.

Cavallaro's pic album is now a bestseller for Decca and the diskery has followed up with a new package, "The Master's Touch." Several other recent Cavallaro sets have also been cashing in on the pic promotion.

Al Lewis Suing To Get Renewals Back From Mellin

Veteran songwriter Al Lewis filed suit in N. Y. Supreme Court last week against Robert Music, Bobby Mellin's ASCAP firm, for return of 200 copyrights. Lewis gave the renewal assignments on his catalog to Mellin in 1949 but now claims that Mellin did not live up to the contract. Suit seeks to declare null and void the 1949 pact.

According to the plaintiff's brief, Mellin approached Lewis for the renewal rights to the latter's catalog and said he would intensively exploit the tunes by getting top plugs for any 30 of Lewis' songs within one year of their renewal. Lewis now alleges that Mellin made false representations in order to get the renewals. The plaintiff further states that a rider was to be attached to the renewal pact detailing Mellin's representations and warranties. Since the rider was not completed, Lewis claims the agreement was not a valid and binding contract.

Included in the list of 200 songs, which Lewis wrote between 1924 and 1949 with collaborators, are such tunes as "Rose O'Day," "Lazy Mary, Will You Get Up," "Give Me A Day In June," "There's Music In A Kiss," and "When I'm President."

Brit. High Court Hears Hassle on 'Hit Disks'

London, May 22.

A dispute between two British trade sheets over the authenticity of disk bestsellers lists opened in the high court last week. The New Musical Express and Lew & Leslie Grade agency sought an interim injunction restraining Cardfont Publishers, owners of the Record Mirror, and its editor, Isidore Green, from publishing "malicious falsehoods" likely to cause them damage.

Counsel for the NME alleged that the Record Mirror had altered returns of record sales to boost the popularity of Robert Earl at the expense of David Whitfield. In one issue, it was stated, the Record Mirror rated Earl sixth among British artists' recordings and 14th in the all-comers list, but "it never got into the Top Twenty of the NME."

Baxter's 'Acapulco' Pic

Hollywood, May 29.

Les Baxter has been signed to compose and conduct the score for "Acapulco" at Republic.

Score will be published by Bax Music, in which he is partnered with Mickey Goldsen, and released through the latter's Criterion Music.

The record companies' swing to a heavier album output is strengthening ASCAP's position in the wax field. A survey of the load of pop album releases during the past couple of months indicates that it's a runaway for the standards in the fold of the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers.

Standards have always been the backbone of the album field, but the current diskery concentration on packaged goods is getting the oldies a bigger play than ever before. With the diskery stress on mood music, song stylists and jazz, the demand for the old copyrights has put the ASCAP publishers back in the catbird seat.

Unlike the singles field, where new tunes dominate, the diskery artists & repertoire men prefer to tap the standard shelves for their album repertoire to avoid the risks of gambling on an untested song. Even the indie diskers, with their own publishing affiliates, stick to the standards when it comes to laying out a repertoire for their album line.

Broadcast Music Inc. (BMI) publishers are not yet getting a full share of the album gravy. These publishers are strongest in the hillbilly and rhythm & blues field, but the package boom hasn't yet become an important factor in these areas. The lack of three-speed phonograph players among the hillbilly and r&b fans is holding back the albums push here.

BMI publishers, however, aren't getting a complete album brushoff. On packages cut by current pop singers, the a&r men have been including the artists' single disk clicks for another run in the album. For example, Dot Records' recently released albums by Pat Boone and Gale Storm are made up of previously released singles. And most of those belong to BMI publishers.

Diskeries' package push is also getting the ASCAP tunes a stronger ride on the disk jockey turntables. In a move to promote the albums, the record companies have been expanding their deejay lists and are making special price rates for radio stations on their albums or sending 'em out cuffo to get the albums exposed on the air.

The drive has already been reflected in deejay programmming. Disk jockeys around the country are now devoting more time to the spinning of albums. And it's all adding up to more performance coin for the ASCAP publishers.

MEX SONGSTRESS AXED ON MORALITY BASIS

Mexico City, May 22.

Radio censors stepped into the local broadcasting picture this week when station XEW announced that it had vetoed further programs by "La India Bonita" ranchera-songstress.

Femme singer has recently been involved in bad publicity over the shooting in her apartment of radio and tv comic Hector Lechuga, by Bonita's ex-husband. Ban is first of its kind and sets a precedent for local airwaves. Growth of censorship has been noted here in theatre and pix, during the last year, but video and radio have escaped with very little bluepencilling to date, from any sources. XEW announced that singer's suspension was for an indefinite time, "to test public reactions."

Modern Jazz 4 to Belt 'Em Out on Egghead Loop

The U. S. Naval Academy got its first jazz concert when the Modern Jazz Quartet moves in for a one-night gig last week (24) at Mahan Hall, Annapolis.

Plans for the MJQ this summer include appearances at the Baltimore Museum of Art, the Stratford Shakespearean Festival in Canada and the Berkshire Music Barn in Lenox, Mass. Atlantic Records plans an on-the-spot taping of the Music Barn stand for its next LP.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Perry Como: "Glendora"-"More" (RCA Victor). When Perry Como gets a jaunty number to toy with, it's a natural to roll right to the top. "Glendora" is that kind of tune and it's a solid followup to his bouncy clicko. "Hot Diggity." "Glendora's" gayly rhythmic mood should keep it spinning on the jock and juke tables. Como knows how to work with a ballad, too, and on "More" he gets a chance to show his strong vocalistics.

Richard Hayman Orch: "Street of Tears"-"Autumn Concerto" (Mercury). The warm and charming melodic line of "Street of Tears" gives Richard Hayman's harmonica styling a class showcase. The melody's rich and colorful shadings make it one of the choice instrumental sides of the season. Hayman's harmonica also makes "Autumn Concerto" appealing listening.

Archie Bleyer Orch: "Sleep, Sleep, Daughter"-"The Rockin' Ghost" (Cadence). This coupling should split the disk jockeys right down the middle as to which side rates the bigger push. Both are solid commercial bets with similar takeoff potential. It could become a two-sided click but the infectious orch and choral treatment on "Sleep, Sleep, Daughter" may give it the edge.

Dick Hyman Trio: "When You're Smiling"-"Rollin' The Boogie" (MGM). It seems that Dick Hyman works best with oldies. He turned "Moritat" (vintage 1933) into a smash wax entry a few months ago and he's likely to do the same for "When You're Smiling." He gives it a fresh and invigorating beat with a spotlighted whistling effect to clinch it. The reverse side shows off the combo in a rollicking mood.

Bill Haley & His Comets: "Hot Dog Buddy Buddy" - "Rockin' Through The Rye" (Decca). Bill Haley hasn't varied his rock 'n' roll style since he first broke through about a year ago. This coupling continues in the raucus rockin' groove highlighting the Haley steam. "Hot Dog Buddy Buddy" is a fast moving original while "Rockin' Through the Rye" is a souped-up version of "Comin' Through The Rye."

Dolores Hawkins: "A Kiss Before Dying"-"Squeeze Me" (Epic). Title song from the UA pic, "A Kiss Before Dying," is a melancholy item which should win interest because of Dolores Hawkins' forceful vocal way. She has a solid workover of the oldie "Squeeze Me" on the back side.

The Stylers: "Huffin' and Puffin'"-"Lost John" (Jubilee). This combo knows how to put a lot of punch into its vocal harmonies. The style gets a tiptop showcasing in "Huffin and Puffin'," a fast moving number with strong juke appeal. "Lost John" is in the folk idiom also done by Lonnie Donegan for Mercury.

Annette Warren: "Take This Hand" - "My Boy" (ABC-Paramount). Annette Warren should attract solid spins with "Take This Hand." Tune shows the thrush off in an effective swinging gospel groove and could come out of left field for a score. "My Soul" is in a slower vein and lacks the excitement of its mate.

Big Ben Banjo Band: "I.O.U. Polka"-"Anna Lisa" (Capitol). The banjos are highlighted on this coupling of rollicking tunes. The swinging beat of "I.O.U. Polka" should help the side draw jukebox coin. It's fast and catching and stays with you. "Anna Lisa" is in a similar groove and rates spins.

Lacille Watkins & The Belltones: "His Hand In Mine"-"Maybe You'll Be There" (Kapp). "His Hand In Mine" is worth watching. It's the kind of side that can build slowly and really take hold. In the spiritual mood, the tune is expertly handled by newcomers Lacille Watkins & The Belltones. They also make "Maybe You'll Be There" worth hearing again.

'Nita, Rita & Ruby: "Last Night In My Dreams"-"At The Old Town Hall" (RCA Victor). Although, 'Nita, Rita & Ruby are classed as country & western singers, "Last Night In My Dreams" puts 'em right in the pop groove. It's a slickly fashioned ballad— number that could make noise if the pop jocks go after it. There's an okay uptempo number on the reverse.

Billy Williams: "Pray"-"You'll Reach Your Star" (Coral). "Pray" has a strong inspirational theme and Billy Williams handles the lyric with care and affection. There's a big market for this kind of wax and the side should do okay on all levels. "You'll Reach Your Star" is another "message" song given a similar treatment. It, too, will nab spins.

Nick Manero Singers-Eddie (Piano) Miller: "Have A Happy . . ."-"Bailey Stomp" (Rego). "Have A Happy. . ." is a gay and bouncy item that gets a rousing workover by the Nick Manero Singers. It's a likeable slice that the jocks should showcase. Eddie (Piano) Miller takes over on the bottom deck with a vigorous instrumental.

Columbia Records' annual sales confab has been slotted for Estes Park, Colo., July 22-23. Label's brass and its sales personnel and distributors will converge for the two-day huddle.

As usual, fall plans will be unveiled along with the detailing of new product and promotional and exploitation schemes.

Album Reviews

Jackie Gleason Orch: "Night Winds" (Capitol). Jackie Gleason is assured of holding on to his slot as one of Capitol's top album sellers with this new package. For this set, Gleason has put together an orch which spotlights 23 flutes. The sound is rich and fluid and the 16 standards take on a fresh aspect under Gleason's imaginative approach.

Al Hibbler: "Starring Al Hibbler" (Decca). This is blind singer Al Hibbler's first package for Decca, for which he's already scored as a top pop single seller. He's got plenty of solid stuff in the repertoire and he belts with vigor and style. Only newie in the package is "After The Lights Go Down Low," which rates a push in the single market. Standout among the oldies are "Where or When," "Pennies From Heaven," "Night and Day" and "Stella By Starlight." Jack Pleis' orch sets 'em up neatly for Hibbler.

Eddie Layton: "Organ Moods" (Wing). Eddie Layton can really make his organ stand up and do tricks. He adds a new dimension to the fave tunes by inserting appropriate special effects. For example, on "Lullaby of Broadway," auto horns; on "Stormy Weather," the sound of wind; and on "Hot Canary," bird tweets, natch. It all adds up to delightful listening.

Art Waner Orch: "Girl of My Dreams" (MGM). Top pop selections and deft instrumental handling make this a standout among the current pile-up of "mood music" wax. Arrangements are pegged for easy listening and Art Waner leads the crew with a light touch. His piano doodling throughout highlights the package. Included are such nifties as "Golden Earrings," "Stella By Starlight," "Mona Lisa," "Moonlight Becomes You" and the title song.

Jane Morgan: "The American Girl From Paris" (Kapp). Jane Morgan is a nitery thrush who knows how to project on wax. She's got an effective song-selling style and a fresh approach to each item. In this package she mixes up lyric lingo between francais and anglais. For example, she puts Gallic lyrics to "It Might As Well Be Spring" and English to "J'Attendrai." It works out well. Martin Gold's orch backing helps, too.

Joe Derise: (Bethlehem). There's been quite a number of jazz-styled crooners hitting the album market in recent months and Joe Derise ranks high among them. He's an inventive singer but he never loses sight of lyric values. Working with the Australian Jazz Quartet, Derise dishes out "Swonderful," "Personality," "Swing On A Star" and "Soon" among others.

Sidney Poitier: "Poetry of the Negro" (Glory). Latest addition to the spoken word on wax is the independent Glory label's compilation of poetry authored by Negroes. It's an interesting attempt and should do well in certain areas. Sidney Poitier, Negro thesp, handles the lines with dramatic depth. Doris Belack, Negro actress, is also effective. Among the poets repped are Langston Hughes, James Weldon Johnson and Paul Laurence Dunbar.

Will Oakland as Disk Giant

By JIM WALSH

When Will Oakland died of a heart attack May 15, one of the true alltime greats of the recording art sang his swansong.

For a 10-year period, beginning in 1908, Oakland had disk and cylinder sales that most of the top-notchers today might envy. Gifted with one of the world's highest masculine voices—a counter-tenor which he always staunchly denied had any falsetto quality—Oakland said he received his first chance as a recording artist when Thomas A. Edison heard him sing in a minstrel production and asked him to come to the Edison laboratory for tests.

The singer, curiously uncertain in his last years about facts of his life and recording career, maintained in the face of all evidence that his first records came out in 1904, shortly after he was discharged from the Army. Actually, however, there is abundant catalog proof that the first Oakland records—Edison cylinders—were issued in 1908. Victor disks followed almost immediately afterward, and his first Columbias were cut in 1911.

Like nearly every other pioneer recording artist, Oakland had the idea that he made more records than almost anyone else—he made an exception of Billy Murray—and that he was probably the top alltime seller. He wasn't high man in either respect, but his achievements were outstanding.

Among other things, the tenor maintained, 20,000,000 platters and rollers of his favorite song, "Silver Threads Among the Gold," were sold throughout the world—an obvious impossibility, even though he maintained his statement was made on the authority of Charles Edison.

Similarly, Oakland, who collaborated briefly with this writer in an unsuccessful through-the-mail effort to produce a book giving his life story, said he was told that in one month around 1914 records in which he sang sold 15,000,000 copies. Told this was another obvious impossibility, when total record sales figures for that year were pondered, he admitted his memory might have tricked him and that the total could have been for a year. That sounded reason-

Cap to Test U. S. Tastes In Etchings of Garoto, Late Brazilian Guitarist

Hollywood, May 29.

Another test of how U.S. disk tastes correspond to those of other countries looms with Capitol's release of "Brazilian Polka" and "Nightingale Baion" by the late Brazilian guitarist Garoto.

Platter is on the Coast label's current release list as part of its international program through EMI affiliates.

Garoto was always a big disk favorite in Brazil, racking up average sales of 250,000 copies, which corresponds to 1,000,000 here. EMI affiliates in Sweden, Italy and other countries of the world which issued his stuff, reported it was correspondingly as popular in their countries.

The current Capitol release marks the first time Garoto's disks have been heard here.

Gershwin Foundation Expanding Its Scope

The George Gershwin Memorial Foundation, which fosters promising young composing talent in the U. S., is planning to expand its activities this year. In addition to making its annual Gershwin award for the best composition in a nationwide contest, the Foundation is planning to assist the work by the Composers' Forum and will also encourage concerts featuring works by young American tunesmiths.

Johnny Green, MGM musical chief and intimate friend of the late Gershwin, is addressing the sponsoring committee of the Foundation at a Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, N. Y., meeting next Tuesday (5). Maestro Dimitri Mitropoulus is national chairman of the Foundation.

Col's Conkling Pushes The Late Carl Fischer As Middlebrow Musician

James B. Conkling, Columbia Records prexy, is adding the personal touch to promote the music of the late Carl Fischer. Conkling drafted a note to radio programmers pointing up Fischer's tone poem, "Reflections of An Indian Boy," which was put into an LP groove by Paul Weston.

The note stated that the Col people believe that the material could find a place in the more serious aspects of popular music if brought to the attention of the public. Col has also prepped a special 45 rpm record which includes three minute platters of two of the themes for deejays who can't program the full album.

Fischer, who died last year, was longtime piano accompanist and musical collaborator with Frankie Laine. He also was piano soloist on Pee Wee Hunt's clicko Capitol disk, "Twelfth Street Rag."

Elvis Presley-digitation Churns Up Teen Tantrums, Scribe Raps, So-So B.O

Elvis Presley, RCA Victor's hot hillbilly shouter, is whipping up more noise than boxoffice in his personal appearance swing through the midwest.

The furor has been coming from (1) the hysterical teenagers in the aud and (2) irate editorialists, who've been blasting Presley for his torso-twisting singing style. Tix sale, however, has been below expectations.

In Kansas City last Thursday (24), for example, teenagers literally tore up the show at the Municipal Auditorium. There were only 2,500 in a house that could hold four or five times that many, but the crowd there created enough havoc to "break up the show."

Presley got through a half dozen songs before the teenage girls broke through the police cordon and swarmed onstage. When they began tearing at his costume, Presley left and the show was over before 10 p.m. The girls, evidently ranging in age from 12 up, were kept in check for a time but it was a losing game for the gendarmes and rather than push around the soft youngsters, they gave up. So did Presley.

Comparatively small turnout was attributed to the $2.50 top, judged too steep for the emotional youngsters, many of whom had to con it out of allowance money for the past several weeks. Harry Peebles, Wichita booking agent who set the K.C. show, and Jimmy McConnell, who handled it locally, estimated the crowd was one of the smallest Presley ever has drawn.

Diehl Deals It Out

The editorial rap came from Bill Diehl in his St. Paul Sunday Pioneer Press column. In a lengthy "open letter to Elvis," Diehl labeled the singer as "nothing more than a male burlesque dancer." After pointing to the scanty turn-

Jones' 2-Way MGM'er

Jive thesp Dean Jones, who is being primed for a screen buildup by Metro via a top spot in "Tea and Sympathy," is also getting a crack at the wax market via MGM Records.

Jone's first coupling, "Tennessee Rock 'n' Roll" and "Heart of Town," are already in the can.

Mercury Album Factory In Hi Gear—57 Sessions

With the upping of Buddy Friedlander at Mercury to assist jazz and r&b artists & repertoire chief Bob Shad, label's album production is starting to roll in high gear. Within the next 30 days, Shad will hold 57 recording sessions for the heavy load of albums set for release.

The packages will be released under the Merc banner as well as its subsid labels, Wing and EmArcy. Friedlander will assist Shad in production, sales and promotion of the album and single lines.

Cafe Bohemia Climbs Up N.Y.'s Jazz Ladder In Reversing 'Femme Trend'

In less than a year of operation the Cafe Bohemia has joined the ranks of Birdland and Basin Street as New York's top jazz joints. The Greenwich Village jazzery celebrates its first anni Friday (1).

The Bohemia has reversed the trend of 52d St. Once the stronghold of jazz clubs, 52d St. switched to stripperies while the Bohemia, under the aegis of Jimmy Garofolo, turned from hot girlie shows to cool jazz. Several of the other girl club operations in Greenwich Village have been eyeing the Bohemia with plans to drop the femmes and bring in the tooters. The Nut Club, for example, is currently mulling a jazz program.

The jazz disk labels are also cashing in on the Cafe Bohemia popularity. The companies are coming down to the cafe to cut their artists with on-the-spot tapings and are using the club's handle in the album title. The sixth album will be cut there this week by Blue Note. It'll be tagged "The Kenny Dorham Quintet at the Cafe Bohemia."

Among the cool musicians which the club has launched in its first year are the Mitchell-Ruff Duo, Julian (Cannonball) Adderly, Miles Davis, Charlie Mingus, Jimmy Smith, The Jazz Messengers. Bohemia also introduced such foreign imports as Enrique Villegas (Argentine) and Joe Saye (Scotland).

Blossom Dearie Returns To Form New Vocal Unit

Blossom Dearie, arranger and singer with the Blue Stars, French vocal combo, is back in the U. S. after a long stay in Paris. The combo, which clicked here via the Mercury etching of "Lullaby of Birdland," was set to open at Birdland, N. Y. jazz nitery, two weeks ago, but the date was cancelled because the rest of the unit couldn't clear their work visas in time. Miss Dearie is the only American citizen in the group.

She's now scouting for personnel to form a new vocal group here. She returned to the U. S. with her husband, tenor-saxist Bobby Jaspar.

VARIETY DISK JOCKEY POLL

This compilation is designed to indicate those records rising in popularity as well as those on top. Ratings are computed on the basis of ten points for a No. 1 mention, nine for a No. 2, and so on down to one point. Wherever possible, only records with two or more mentions are listed, even though their total points are less in some cases than those which receive only one mention. Cities and jockeys will vary from week to week to present a comprehensive picture of all sectors of the country regionally.

'Popular Satchmo'

N. Y. Daily News on May 25, 1956 so captioned its editorial:

"Louis (Satchmo) Armstrong, our king of jazz trumpetry, drew a welcome the other day at Accra, Gold Coast, that rocked half of Africa. Some 10,000 people stormed out to the airport to roar loving greetings at our great American musician, who just happens to be a Negro.

"Our loudest B-sharp to you, Ambassador Armstrong. Hep folk all over the world will be noting that your reception was in high contrast to the ones those Commie squares are drawing these days."

Unique in a Reshuffle Of Distribs in 5 Areas

In a move to strengthen its distributor lineup around the country, RKO-Unique reshuffled five of its branches last week.

M&S took over from James H. Martin in Chicago, Leslie replaced Seabord in the Connecticut area, Lyric in Buffalo replaced Melody, Pan-American will cover the Jacksonville - Miami area replacing Benkley and Sandell, who took over from Heilicher in Minneapolis.

In the disking field, label is stepping into the rock 'n' roll sweepstakes this week with the Jo-ann Campbell coupling of "Where Ever You Go" and "Coming Home Late Tonight." Diskery also plans to add new rock 'n' roll names to its roster.

Haley & Comets for Brit.

London, May 29.

Bill Haley and his Comets, a band whose records have consistently hit the top selling disk charts in Britain, are due to make a variety tour here. London agents, Lew & Leslie Grade, have clinched the deal, which is scheduled to be some four to five weeks' duration.

Commencing date is given as Feb. 6 next year, and the tour will include variety theatres, concerts and tv appearances.

Sandell Adds Omaha

Herb Sandell, recently appointed by MGM Records to handle its distribution in the Minneapolis territory, will expand his orbit to rep the diskery in the Omaha area as well.

The Omaha territory was previously handled by Murphy Sales.

Petrillo-Read

to play any role whatsoever at the convention.

Union observers believe that the only factor that could stay Petrillo's hand is the new wave of Congressional criticism of the AFM chieftain. Petrillo, however, has not retreated in the face of this type of attack in the past and will likely ignore it again.

The disciplinary action against Read, if and when executed, will bar him from the AFM for one year and from any office for two years after reinstatement. His return to AFM membership would be contingent on his conduct during the period of his suspension. Read and his followers are on the carpet for seeking to "seize control" of their local.

Other Local 47 members subject to expulsion are Uan Rasey, Ray Toland, Warren D. Barker, John Clyman, William Atkinson, Jack Dumont, William Ulyate, Earl Evans, Marshall Cram and Martin Berman. The recommendation for this group is expulsion and reinstatement after one day. They too would be ineligible to hold any office for two years after their readmission. These members will not lose any insurance and death benefits and will not be required to pay an initiation fee when returned to membership.

Near East Click Cues Woo of Dizzy In Latin Lands; Satchmo's O'seas Coin

Armstrong 'Too High'

State Dept. offered Armstrong first crack at going overseas under its sponsorship but couldn't meet the band's asking price. Gillespie, on the other hand, put together a new orch for the trek and the sidemen worked for scale or a bit more.

On his regular commercially booked gigs, Satchmo gets close to $5,000 a night. He was willing to go down to a $1,500 nightly guarantee for the State Dept. so that he could cover his overhead, but the figure was still too high.

Bob Burrell to Col

Bob Burrell has joined Columbia Records as assistant to Don Law in the sales promotion of the country & western division. Assignment is part of Col's new plan to spark up its c&w operation.

An ex-Capitol Records' staffer, Burrell will headquarter in Atlanta. He'll report to Dick Linke, Col's pop singles promotion manager.

Success of the Dizzy Gillespie tour of the Middle and Near East under sponsorship of the State Dept. may result in a similar goodwill swing by the orch through South America. The State Dept., which works in conjunction with the International Exchange Program of the American National Theatre & Academy, is currently mulling the prospects of a Gillespie hop to the Latino countries.

Orch returned to the U. S. last week after a two-month tour which kicked off in Abadan, Iran, March 25. Gillespie traveled with 15 sidemen and two vocalists, Dotty Saulter and Herb Lance. The tooters received more than scale. Initial outlay for the tour cost ANTA $92,000, but final boxoffice tally of the dates played are not yet in. It's expected to bring the initial cost to a minimum. Marshall Stearns, of the Institute of Jazz Studies, accompanied the band and opened up each program with phonograph lectures.

Meantime, Louis Armstrong has stretched his overseas swing to Africa. Last week, Armstrong drew 10,000 persons at a concert in the largest park in Accra, Gold Coast. He returned to the U. S. Sunday (27). (Story of planned film presentation of the Armstrong tour by Ed Murrow and Fred Friendly is on page 1.)

Armstrong Beats 16G Nut

London, May 29.

Despite a nightly operating nut in excess of $16,000 and having to take care of the deficiencies in the reciprocal Freddie Randall exchange to the U. S., Lee Gordon and Benn Reyes have wound up with a profit on their Louis Armstrong package here in London and the provinces. This was their first British operation, modelled on the lines of their Australian undertaking, and active negotiations are on for a further presentation in the summer. Details are expected to be announced within a week.

On the 10 nights at the Empress Hall Arena, the Louis Armstrong show, on a twice nightly basis, grossed around $140,000, although first performances rarely exceeded 50% of capacity. It was the take on the first houses, however, that provided the margin of profit. According to Reyes, the tour could not have paid off on a once nightly operation.

The seven one-night stands in the provinces and Dublin grossed around a further $100,000, and the out-of-town results followed the London pattern. Second shows were virtually at capacity level, but opening performances were around 50% of maximum.

In London alone, upwards of $36,000 was spent on direct advertising on the 10-day stand and a further $22,000 was spent in publicizing the one-nighters. These sums contributed substantially to the heavy operating costs which, in London, included $2,000-a night arena rental.

Cancel Sheffield Date

Sheffield, Eng., May 22.

Posters announcing personal appearances here of Louis Armstrong and his All Stars were covered with the word "Cancelled" on Sunday (20). Booking agents began returning money to 4,000 customers who had paid for that night's concerts.

Gerald Cohen, Sheffield agent who arranged the visits, said he understood Armstrong had been given a 16-day permit by the British Ministry of Labor and the Musicians' Union. The Sheffield visit would have extended the period to 17 days, he said. He received news of the cancellation only at the last minute.

MGM Wraps 'Swan'

MGM Records has packaged the soundtrack score from the Metro pic, "The Swan," which stars Grace Kelly and Alec Guinness. Set marks diskery's 44th soundtracker since it started operating in 1947.

Musical score for "The Swan" was written by Bronislaw Kaper. Johnny Green batons the MGM studio orch. Album will be tied in with the current release of the film as well as with the special featurette, "Wedding in Monaco," also on release.

Inside Stuff—Music

Two new songs by Charles Kalman, composer-son of the late Emmerich Kalman, with words by Gerhard Neumann, are set for release by two German publishers. One song, "Ich werde Dir immer treu sein" (I'll Be Always Faithful to You), will be launched by Takt & Ton publishing house led by Heino Gaze. The other, "Eine Frau tut so viel aus Liebe" (A Woman Does So Much Because Of Love), is being published by Edition Canzonetta (Werner Bochman). Both items are medium foxtrots. A third song, "Das kleine welsse Haus" (Little White House), which he did in collab with Heino Gaze, will probably be published by Peter Schaffers' firm. In addition, he's still working on a new musical play (still untitled) in collab with Peter Goldbaum which is set for next season. Kalman, who is American national, is due to arrive in N. Y. the end of May.

An American tune had to travel to Germany to stir up some U. S. diskery action. The song, "Das Ist Musik," made the rounds about a year ago as "Crazy Music," but only bagged one record (Lawrence Welk on Coral) and nothing happened to it. Joy Music, which publishes "Music" here, sent the song over to Francis, Day & Hunter, its overseas affiliate, and forgot about it. A German group, Horts Wende Tanz-Solisten and Das Rouand Trio, gave it a Deutsche workover and cut it on the Polydor label.

When the U. S. companies got wind of the German disclick the scramble began. Cadence hit the market first this week with a Bill Hayes grooving. Capitol Records is rushing out a version and Decca is gearing for release of the original slicing via its German diskery tie. The song was written by Phil Springer and Sid Wayne.

The recent election of Paul Cunningham as ASCAP's prexy occasioned a tribute to him on the floor of the U. S. Senate which was included in the Congressional Record. Sen. William Langer (R., N. D.) delivered the speech which said that the election of Cunningham gives "public recognition to his tireless efforts on behalf of the nation's outstanding composers, to secure for them a measure of economic security and the protection for their creative property to which they are entitled under the Constitution." That was a reference to Cunningham's campaigning for the revision of the Copyright Act to remove the licensing exemption from jukeboxes. In the past few years, as ASCAP's Washington rep, Cunningham became w.k. to most of the leading Senators and Congressmen.

Decca Records has entered into a tieup with Ballantine Books on the new Burl Ives album. "Down To The Sea In Ships," which is being promoted in conjunction with the paper-bound Ballantine collection of "Burl Ives Sea Songs." One page of the book will plug the Decca set while the album liner will publicize the book.

Decca has a promotion going with Farrar, Strauss & Cudahy, publishers of Nelson Algren's new novel, "A Walk On The Wild Side." Algren titled his book after one of Ives' sides, "Wild Side of Life."

Oakland

able, since he was not only singing solos for all the companies but also doing duets with Murray, singing in the Lyric Trio with Albert Campbell and Henry Burr, and taking top tenor with the Heidelberg Quintet—himself, Murray, Steve Porter, John Bieling and Bill Hooley.

Global Sales

Regardless of sales figures, Oakland's records went big throughout the English-speaking world. Catalogs of the English, Australian and New Zealand Columbia companies always referred to him as "sweet-voiced Will Oakland."

He once recalled that making an Edison cylinder of "Just Before the Battle, Mother," replete with a male chorus, the sound of rapid-fire horse trotting, bugle calls, etc., occupied two days and almost drove him and everybody else concerned crazy.

The tenor with the high voice was as vague concerning his age as on details of his recording career. He told this biographer in 1949 he was born in 1878, but a few minutes later changed the year to 1880. During the remaining eight years of his life he aged very gradually and not in strict chronological order.

Oakland said he quit making records because all the phono companies notified him that if he sang on radio he would make no more platters. Fact is, he never made a Victor or Columbia record after 1916, several years before radio, but did continue to sing occasionally for Edison. There was never any doubt of his radio success.

A couple of years ago he issued a limited edition LP record containing spoken reminiscences of his show biz life and dubbings of more than a dozen of his old records. At the time of his death he was planning a similar platter, packaging the voices of famous minstrels with whom he had been associated. Presumably one of the lot was Al Jolson.

Whatever the defects of his memory, there was nothing wrong with Will Oakland's technique and his capacity for friendship. He retained his high notes unto the last, although it was obvious at times he was working his way up to them cautiously instead of taking them with his former gay abandon. He was one of the real greats of his day.

The city council after a hearing denied a dancehall permit here sought by William B. Martin for a spot formerly known as the Rainbow Gardens. The hearing and denial were under a new ordinance providing for refusal of a dancehall permit where it might be a nuisance in the neighborhood, even through the area is zoned to allow terpalaces.

Spot had been closed since last August.

Local 47 Defies Petrillo

oppose "compulsory" contributions to Trust Fund; change constitution to submit contracts in pix, radio, tv, and records to members for ratification; reverse ruling putting former $54 reuse payment on transcribed shows into trust fund.

Strongly anti-Petrillo meeting virtually blueprinted each statement delegates are to make to convention, instructed them to read to convention the vote of confidence in Read, and made a strong protest against returning "unwanted, disloyal officers who are subservient to Petrillo" to office. Also passed was a resolution demanding suspension of theatre defense fund collections until they fell below $2,000,000.

Final details for instructions to delegates were hammered out at a board of directors meeting Friday (25) that saw the rebel faction acceding to the orders of the AFM International executive board but continuing to belabor the "loyalist" faction. Te Groen and Paul were restored, as ordered by the IEB, to their positions as president and recording secretary and reinstated to the payroll from which they had been dropped some nine weeks ago.

However, the rebel-controlled board also voted to give Read a $250 weekly salary as vicepresident with special duties (the office normally carries no salary), the amount equaling that paid to te Groen. Paul's pay is $9,100 annually.

Rebels also demanded that Phil Fischer, AFM International studio rep, resign as one of the three delegates to the AFM convention in Atlantic City June 11-14, and the board decided that if he failed to resign, expenses to the convention would be paid for only two delegates. Te Groen, Paul and Fischer were elected convention delegates two years ago for a two-year period.

Read and board member John Clyman, both facing expulsion under terms of the IEB order, continue to hold office since the disciplinary action has been stayed pending appeals to the convention. However, even without them, the rebels still have six votes on the 12-man board, other directors facing expulsion having resigned a week earlier to be replaced by Read supporters.

Glory Goes Poetry

Glory Records, indie rhythm & blues label, is branching out into the album field with the spoken word. Kickoff album is "Poetry of the Negro," read by Sidney Poitier and Doris Belack. Among the poets included are Langston Hughes, James Weldon Johnson and Paul Laurence Dunbar.

Phil Rose, who heads up Glory, is currently mapping out plans for similar LP releases.

A Job Is a Job

Hollywood, May 29.

Rare circumstances of a musician promoting the sale of a disk that copies his own work has occurred at Capitol. Guitarist George Russell, who is earning a steady living as deejay promotion manager for Capitol, helped Terry York cut a demonstration record of "Old Enough," published by Dena Music and the disk was taken to the Coast plattery which picked up the tune for Margaret Whiting.

They liked the arrangement so much that they copied it—but another guitarist took Russell's place for the official recording session.

Elvis Presley

outs for Presley's Twin Cities' performance, Diehl asserted that he had been asking around and found that one big reason for the small attendance was that "Moms and Dads had seen you on tv and didn't like your unnecessary bump-and-grind routine. If more Moms and Dads had seen you, I bet not even the scattered 6,000 would have turned up at your shows.

"You disillusioned many of your fans needlessly. Why, Elvis, do you resort to your 'Pelvis Presley' routine? You'd better drop it before more and more people drop you. Of course, there'll always be a few crackpots to screech, 'Ooohh, Elvis' when you do your hip-wriggle bit. By now you should know that in show biz nothing grows in dirt. Clean it up—and you'll probably clean up."

In a Detroit date at the 5,000-seat Fox, he played three performances attracting 11,900 persons out of possible capacity of 15,000. The Fox gross for the day was a very fat $16,184. In an Omaha stand Sunday (20), Presley drew 7,000 fans for a $14,000 gross in two shows. It was far from capacity. The night before, in Lincoln, he lured half a house at the U. of Nebraska Coliseum.

This past weekend (26-27) in Columbus and Dayton (O.) heavy rains greeted his four performances in the two cities. Presley's show grossed $8,481 during two evening performances Saturday at the 3,964-seat Veteran Memorial Aud, Columbus. He grossed $7,208 in afternoon and evening shows Sunday in the 4,000-seat U. of Dayton Field House. Top for all shows was $2.50.

Haley 16G, San Antonio

San Antonio, May 29.

Gross boxoffice take for the Bill Haley & His Comets "Rock 'n' Roll" show at Municipal Auditorium last week was approximately $16,000, topping by $2,000, the total for the two performances by Elvis Presley. This time, tickets were higher, choice seats bringing $3.50.

With the audience overwhelmingly teenage, such free spending for this type of entertainment is a headache for the town's motion picture exhibitors, whose biz is off from last year.

tory and should be released as single platters. In several cases, already, sides originally cut for albums have stepped out as solid single disclicks. Most notable have been Julie London's "Cry Me a River" on the Liberty label and Somethin' Smith's "It a Sin to Tell a Lie" for Epic.

In many instances, too, artists have been able to sell on albums while they've meant practically nothing to the singles market. Their album successes, however, have been strong enough to build them as good bets for in-person engagements. Top example is Chris Connor, who started out as a click album etcher for Bethlehem Records and is now similarly scoring for Atlantic.

Others who are getting a special album push with a view toward a single breakthrough later are Ann Gilbert (Groove), Jackie Cain & Roy Kral (ABC - Paramount), Martha Hayes (Jubilee), Morgana King (Wing) and Diahann Carroll (RCA Victor).

Sammy Kaye's 8 Weeks

Sammy Kaye takes off on an eight-week personal appearance trek Friday (1). Dates on the tour will include private parties, ballrooms, college and concert stands.

June is already booked solid and the July dates are now being set up. Orch kicks off at the Civic Center, Lansing, Mich.

Teeners Figure In Haley Riots On Rock 'n' Roll

Atlanta, May 29.

Five teenage boys were arrested as a result of fights at a rock 'n' roll concert at Ponce de Leon Park, baseball home of the Atlanta Crackers, where 10,000 gathered for show headed by Bill Haley & His Comets Thursday 24) night. Another teenage boy was hit in the head by a flying beer bottle.

Police reported they arrested the five youths in separate instances. Spectators said it was hard to figure out who was doing the fighting and who was dancing in the aisles. Things, obviously, were pretty lively throughout the show. However, when 11 p.m. rolled around and the performers shut up shop things were quiet, relatively speaking. All of the arrests were in the white section of the segregated audience, described as predominantly teenagers.

Dances featuring recording artists have been banned at the Municial Aud in a move against juvenile delinquency. Sponsors of Thursday night's show had billed it as a "concert" with dancing out. And they said the ruckus at the ball park was no more than would occur at an ordinary baseball or football game.

Show was staged by B. B. Beamon, Negro promoter. It was an hour late getting started due to wiring difficulties. In addition to Haley and his gang, some 12 artists in the r&r tradition had featured spots on the show.

Anti R&R

Birmingham, May 29.

This town, which was the site of the hooligan attack on Nat King Cole several weeks ago, again was stirred up by a musical event last week when Bill Haley & His Comets played the Auditorium here. Although Haley's is a white act, the White Citizens Council group picketed the date because rock 'n' roll music was featured. A group of kids, however, picketed the pickets in favor of Haley.

Hilton, Sheraton $55,000,000 Deals Presage a Hike in Talent Buying

The two major hotel chains in the U.S., the Hilton and the Sheraton, have added to their holdings considerably with a pair of deals. These involve takeover of the Eppley chain by Sheraton, and the absorption of the Netherland Plaza Hotel, Cincinnati, and the Terrace Plaza Hotel and office building in the same city. Amount of the latter transaction is $25,000,000, while more than $30,000,000 is involved in the Sheraton-Eppley deal.

Both chains are entertainment conscious, with the Sheraton confining its talent operations mainly to cocktail units and intimate type entertainment. while the Hilton chain has a more flexible policy giving individual managers and division heads a latitude that permits single piano players in large scale floorshows encasing names.

Although the amount of talent used on the Eppley division is virtually negligble, talent agencies anticipate that a greater talent buying will take place on that chain.

The Eppley hotels, taking in 22 properties, include the William Penn, Pittsburgh, the largest unit in the setup; the Seelbach, Louisville, and the Fontanelle, Omaha. Latter will continue to be operated by Eugene C. Eppley under lease from Sheraton. Eppley inns will operate as a separate division. Bulk of their hotels are in the midwest.

Sheraton deal calls for outright ownership of 19 of the Eppley properties and leases on the remaining three. With the Eppley takeover, Sheraton chain will control 24,360 rooms in 54 hostels in the U. S. and Canada. Gross sales of the two systems are running around $240,000,000 annually. Under construction by Sheraton are units in Binghamton (highway hotel), Dallas, Philadelphia, Portland, Ore., and Tarrytown, N. Y. Latter two will also be highway hotels to compete with motels.

The Hilton acquisition brings that chains network up to 25 hotels in 20 cities in the U.S. and inns in Puerto Rico, Mexico, Spain and Turkey. Total is 27,912 rooms. Hilton also has three hotels in Japan, Thailand and Italy with a total of 1,150 rooms. Under construction by Hilton are units in Cuba, Mexico, West Germany, Canada and Egypet with a total of 3,250 rooms.

Omaha City Dads Learn About Show Biz as Borge Brings 'Em Sub-Rent $800

Omaha, May 29.

Omaha City Aud Commission just gained experience in its venture into the show promotion biz last week when Victor Borge's show brought the local officials about $800 profit—less than a local promoter would have paid in rent.

Figures listed by Commission Chairman Joseph Barker Jr. were 4,437 customers with a gross gate of $13,600. on 75-25 basis, city got about $3,500 and advertising and other expenses totaled $2,650.

Local promoters, who squawked loudly when city grabbed Borge, pointed out that a private sponsor would have paid about $1,000 rent.

Barker said the Commission will meet in near future to decide policy. "We're not in show business," he said. "We may take on another event or we may never take on another." Commission had planned to use profits to improve aud facilities and possibly create a "cushion" for a future promotion.

Elephants Never Forget; Pulls Trainer from Jail

Salem, O., May 29.

Salem police were forced to release a King Bros. Circus elephant trainer and truckdriver from jail last week to help round up two elephants which had wandered away from their lot while the attendant left to watch them was sleeping soundly in a circus truck. Both animals were found two blocks from the circus site. Police then returned the trainer to jail after the hunt. This was only one in a series of elephant mishaps that had eastern Ohio officials in a turmoil. The elephants had wandered off twice before.

The circus moved to Greenville, Pa., after performances in Salem, but the elephants were left in Salem because their trainer, A. C. Towne, 18, was in jail. After the pachyderms were rounded up, police ordered them loaded on the truck and taken out of town.

Gale's New Rock 'n' Roll Heatwave Barnstormer

A new rock 'n' roll unit is being formed for a summer tour. New outfit, patterned along the lines of the high-grossing Feld Bros. unit, will have Al Hibbler, Carl Perkins, Teen Agers, Illinois Jacquet Orch, Bobby Charles, Shirley & Lee, Cleftones and others. Layout is set to roll July 2 at Columbia, S. C., and will be on the road for five weeks.

The Gale Agency is assembling the package and will book the show. Previous unit, headed by Bill Haley & Comets, will disband June 5 at Charleston, W. Va., and thus the new package will have a degree of exclusivity during the summer run.

Vegas Dunes May Get Greenlight For Greenfelt

Las Vegas, May 29.

A special session of the Clark County Licensing Board yesterday (Mon.) was expected to result in favorable consideration of a bid seeking to reopen the casino of the Dunes. Greenfelt action at the spa, under Bill Miller, Major Riddle and Bob Rice, was okayed last week (21) by the Nevada Tax Commission, and was passed onto the county board for final approval.

Under normal conditions, the Dunes ops would have to wait until June 10, the next regularly scheduled meeting of the County Board. But chairman (Sheriff) Butch Leypoldt said that because reopening of he Dunes would mean employment for about 300 persons, he felt a special session to act on the hotel's license was warranted. County Board rarely, if ever, has ever taken a course opposite to the Tax Commission, so approval was expected.

Miller, general manager of the Dunes, said if the county agency grants the gambling license, the Dunes will swing open its casino this Friday (1). It's not expected that key supper room shows will be booked for some time and, according to Miller, these will be musical revues built here sans big names, and will be kept under a

N.Y. Supreme Court Denies Agents' Injunction Vs. AGVA in 2d Setback

A group of agents acting on behalf of members of the Associated Agents of America were denied an injunction in N. Y. Supreme Court against the American Guild of Variety Artists, which took the position that it will not negotiate with the AAA. Last week, Justice Samuel Di Falco ruled that the percenters had failed to set forth a course of action on a basis that would hold that AGVA had any duty to negotiate with the agency org.

This is the second pleading by the AAA. First was dismissed some months ago on the basis that the complaint had not been properly drawn and that the persons involved, rather than the organization, should do the pleading. Complaint, therefore, was redrawn and Paul Lester, acting on behalf of several agents, sought an injunction which would forbid AGVA from refusing to deal with the organization and thus force AAA members to take out a union franchise in order to book acts controlled by the union.

Justice Di Falco also stated that if the organization has no recourse in a court of law, then it is also evident that there can be no representative action on its behalf. "If the individual members may possess a cause of action for a private wrong," he said, "the factual allegations in support thereof must be set forth. While in a true representative action the same wrongs buttress the claims of those who bring the action as to themselves and as to those similarly situated, there can be no such representation as to any private wrongs done to these plaintiffs without a specific statements of facts supporting a claimed wrong to those complaining parties, including those who are named and those who are represented. In its present form the action is not maintainable."

Borge Pulls (1) $22,000 In Cleve. and (2) a Load Of Beefs on 'Inaudibility'

Cleveland, May 29.

Victor Borge drew about $22,000 and a storm of complaints from customers on grounds of inaudibility during his one-man show at 10,000-capacity Public Hall Saturday (26). Crude four-horn amplifying system, which piano comedian used on revolving platform, proved totally inadequate for in-the-round performance. Half the time he couldn't be understood or heard. Faulty amplifiers sputtered, gurgled and created such distracting echo that about 2,000 irate ticket-buyers in balcony threatened a riot.

At Borge's apologetic suggestion, they stormed downstairs looking for better seats but acoustics were just as bad. A number of them demanded refunds from Giocomo Bernardi, local booker, who talked them out of it.

Hall officials blamed Borge's manager and Bernardi for unfavorable reactions, saying both were forewarned that their portable p.a. would be unsatisfactory. When advised to use auditorium's foolproof sound system, they reputedly turned down offer.

Borge and Cleveland booker netted profit on show, which had potentiality of $35,000 at $4.40 top, but it was an ear-splitting fiasco as far as local Borge fans were concerned.

Martha Raye in 8-Week % Deal at Beachcomber

Martha Raye has been booked for an eight-week deal to headline the Beachcomber, Miami Beach, starting July 20. She'll work the spot on percentage, just as she did when she took over the Clover Club, Miami. Deal was worked out by the William Morris Agency.

For the past few years Miss Raye has been playing the bulk of her nitery dates in the summer because of her tv commitments. Balance of the show with Miss Raye at the Beachcomber hasn't been lined up yet.

Arthur Lesser Eyes Mex. Olympia a La Palladium

Arthur Lesser, personal rep for Patachou, is shuttling between Chicago, where the French comedienne is at the Palmer House, and New York, where the former Gotham showman plans to reestablish his base. He has been latterly headquartered in Paris.

Lesser has his eye on the new Olympia, Mexico City, a 1,600-seater, as a North American music hall flagship akin to London's Palladium for name variety attractions. He became interested while Patachou was at the Hotel del Prado's Versailles Room where she returns June 15, after Chicago, for three more weeks on top of her recent six-week stand.

Lesser and Jack Hylton have a new revue planned for London this fall costarring Patachou and British comedian Tommy Trinder.

Pearl Bailey N.Y. Waldorf Pinchhit for Belafonte

Harry Belafonte's opening at the Starlight Roof of the Waldorf-Astoria, N.Y., has been postponed until the singer gets over a siege of laryngitis. He was slated to bow Monday (28).

Spot was taken by Pearl Bailey, who had been working the downstairs Empire Room. She'll fill in until Belafonte is recovered.

My Dear Jeri:

It would be most unfair to allow this opportunity to go by without thanking you sincerely for the wonderful job you did in the Cocoanut Grove on Tuesday evening, May 1, substituting for Miss Jane Froman who was ill. I have never heard a performer register so solidly with an audience and the fact that they didn't let you off after your act without additional songs is a great tribute to your fine quality as an entertainer. In addition, the fact that you came over here so quickly, you didn't even have time for a rehearsal, makes you so much more outstanding.

To a rising star, to a gracious lady - a gracious bow from all of us here in the Cocoanut Grove.

SAME ROOMS, 'OTHER VOICES'

Razing of N.Y.'s Third Ave. 'El' Scraps An Iron Curtain for 'Old World' Cafes

Demolition of the Third Ave. 'El' seems to be a symbolic lifting of an iron curtain that has obscured Yorkville cafe owners from the general run of customers. These bonifaces believe that they are the first to benefit from the razing of that iron structure inasmuch as it opens a new facet of nightlife to many New Yorkers.

For some it's also a symbolic event. For example, at the Viennese Lantern, it's the second Iron Curtain to go out of their life, the original razing having taken place when the Soviet vacated the waltz country. For the ops at the Chardas, with a Hungarian motif, it's a portent that the curtain may soon go in that occupied country.

But notwithstanding the political issues in the old countries, the Yorkville cafes present a delightful bit of cafegoing. The Mitteleuropeans have devised a modus operandi that is attracting an increasing number of cafegoers to that eastern section of town. Now that street meetings of hate merchants are a rare event, Yorkville is getting a wider audience. The combination of food, atmosphere and a European-styled entertainment is catching on.

The Chardas is a comparative baby in the area, being only in its third year, but it's already a staple in the section, with a lure comprising hot and cold running Magyar violins, cymbalom players and singers with international flavor. Bela Babai works like an authentic Gypsy violinist. He imparts a fine native flavor to the fiddle, and an all-string backing gives the spot a lot of atmosphere. Alternate crew is the Maxie Fransko Trio, another fiddle lead, and with a cymbalom and piano backing which also raises a Gypsy storm over Yorkville.

Tibor Rakossy, longterm emcee and lead tenor, is a vet of Budapest operettas and imparts a lot of flavor in his songs. Soocha Renay sets an international pace for herself with tunes from France, Vi-

Eskimo Family Wins 50G Judgment Vs. Promoter As Court Holds Cold Quiz

Boston, May 29.

A judgment of $50,000 was won in Municipal Court here last week by an Eskimo family of five against Mrs. Margaret Irwin, wife of a Pennsylvania sports promoter, for fraud and breach of contract in prevailing on them to appear as "The Eskimo Family" at the Sportsman's Show at Mechanics Hall, Boston, and other exhibition halls at underscale pay.

Mrs. Esther Mayokok, mother of four, said her records showed they worked 60 weeks at an average of 80 hours per week and should have been paid 75c per hour, plus overtime. She complained that the five Eskimos received $30 weekly each. The judgment included $5,000 for attorney's fees and $5,000 on a general charge of fraud.

Mrs. Mayokok contented they were entitled to time and a half like anyone else.

During the court case, the Boston temperature dropped to 40 degrees. Judge Elias F. Shamon asked the mother, "Is it colder here than in Alaska?" She replied, "I was shivering just a little while ago.

The jurist asked, "What do you do in Alaska when it gets cold?" Said Mrs. Mayokok, "We put on more furs."

Amsterdam in the Swim

Morey Amsterdam has been signed for the first week of the Elliott Murphy Aquashow to open June 19 at the Flushing Meadows Amphitheatre, Flushing, N. Y. Max Roth of the Bernard Burke Agency is currently setting other acts.

There will be weekly changes of headliners as in previous years, with the production to remain for the season.

Eckstine's Quick Repeat In British Vaude Houses

Liverpool, May 29.

Billy Eckstine will play an additional five British vaude dates on his current tour, including a repeat week from Aug. 6 at the Empire, Glasgow.

Singer is now set for July dates at the Opera House (Belfast) Theatre Royal (Dublin), Regal (Great Yarmouth) and Empire (Sunderland.

A repeat date so soon after his recent engagement is unusual for Glasgow Empire bookings. Eckstine clicked at the Scot vaudery last week (May 21). Apart from being tribute to his draw, the return booking also points to current urgent shortage of strong vaude acts in the United Kingdom.

Teamsters Join AGVA in Philly On Circus Picket

Philadelphia, May 29.

Picket lines greeted the Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus on its arrival here yesterday (Mon.) as the American Guild of Variety Artists and the powerful Brotherhood of Teamsters linked forces to maintain a day-and-night cordon around the Big Top.

Jackie Bright, national administrative secretary of AGVA, came here Friday (25) to direct the fight against the circus. Dave Beck, Teamsters' national president in town for a dinner in his honor, said the picketing would go on "24 hours a day until the circus is organized."

Union pickets were withdrawn at the matinee show yesterday to permit the entertainment of 6,000 orphaned and underprivileged youngsters by a local department store and automobile dealer.

The lines re-formed immediately afterwards, however. Bright declared that the circus management had refused to bargain and that performers were working under conditions of "peonage." The AGVA official said his union was ready to go before any group or individual for arbitration.

The union apparently abandoned plans here to run an opposition show to the circus, as it did in Boston.

CAFE OPS IN MASS. SEEK ASCAP 'RELIEF'

Boston, May 29.

Hub nitery owners are in the midst of an organization drive sparked by Ralph Morgan, ex-head here of American Guild of Variety Artists, on a bill, already favorably reported on by the legislature, which would in effect end in Massachusetts the annual licensing of music by ASCAP.

An org meeting was held at the Mayfair. Nitery ops seek to get clear from the annual fee to ASCAP according to classification. The fee, which affects clubs, theatres and restaurants, sometimes runs as high as $1,200 a year.

Legislation is fashioned after a law now on the statute books in Florida and Nevada. It would not, the bill's sponsors say, imperil the rights of composers, authors and publishers given to them under Federal copyright law, but would end the ASCAP licensing system. Similar efforts in the past have been unsuccessful.

Bill Tabbert and the Alcettys set for the Palmer House, Chicago, revue starting Oct. 11 for 12 weeks, with Merriel Abbott now in New York pacting other talent for the show.

PLUSHY HOTELS' 'DEPARTURE' ACT

By JOE COHEN

Offbeat bookings have paid off for the New York hotel rooms and are likely to spread to other class spots. The inns have been buying a lot of talent unfamiliar to the swank hostel belt. In a few cases, some of the names have been in hotel rooms on comparatively rare occasions, and certainly never before in a situation like the Waldorf-Astoria, Pierre and Plaza Hotels.

For example, the Empire Room of the Waldorf closed last week with Pearl Bailey, a firsttimer in this spot and who had been pulling excellent business. During this season, the Waldorf also booked Benny Goodman. Maurice Chevalier, a firsttimer here, was certainly not a risk for uppercrust patronage, but coming on top of a run in a legit house, and adopting a one-show format during his engagement, certainly seemed like a risky proposition. Indications point to the fact that the Waldorf will not abandon the offbeat policy. Evidence of that is seen in the pacting of Ted Lewis, who will bring his battered hat and collection of entertainers into the Starlight Roof on July 2.

Also playing the angles this season has been Stanley Melba, entertainment director for the Pierre Hotel. Melba has bought such

Rotary's $25,000 1-Niter-of-Names

The Rotary International will spend approximately $25,000 on its convention show to be held June 4 at the Convention Hall, Philadelphia. Arthur Knorr, former producer at the Roxy Theatre, N. Y., and currently a tele packager, will do the staging and booking.

Knorr has set the Gus Haenschen orch, Rise Stevens, Bert Parks, Rolly Rolls, Beatrice Kraft, Enid Mosier and her Steel Band, Mata & Hari, Quaker City String Band, Los Romeros with Teresita, Quinteto Allegro, and others. Knorr is using rear projection in lieu of scenery. He staged previous shindigs for the Rotary conventions in New York and Atlantic City. Night previous to this show, the convention will hear the Philadelphia Symphony conducted by Eugene Ormandy.

Larry Gengo to MCA As Sennes Mulls N.Y. Pullout

Larry Gengo, N. Y. head of the Frank Sennes Agency, has resigned to go with Music Corp. of America. He joins MCA on June 4 in the act department under Dave Baumgarten. Gengo was an indie for several years before joining the Sennes organization.

Status of the Sennes office in New York is still uncertain. Sennes, who has headoffices in Cleveland, is also operator of the Moulin Rouge, Hollywood. He'll be in New York around June 15 to further survey the situation and will probably decide then whether the branch office will continue.

Bill Kenny's U.S. Dates After Tour in Britain

Glasgow, May 29.

Bill Kenny is topping here in vaude with an instrumental Ink Spots trio as backing. Group comprises Everett Barksdale on guitar, Andy Maize on piano, and Harry Prather on bass. Kenny has a 10-weeks' tour skedded, with the Edinburgh Empire slated for June 4 week.

On his return to the U.S. in the fall he has dates pencilled in for Latin Quarter, N.Y., Gatineau Club, Ottawa, and El Morocco, Montreal. He'll also probably play the Town Casino, Buffalo.

Houdini Trick Backfires On Brit. Escapologist

Stockport, Eng., May 29.

James Crossini, an escapologist, tried to improve on one of Houdini's famous specialities here, and almost lost his life.

Watched by large street crowds outside the Royal Theatre, he found he could not escape from a blazing petrol-soaked straitjacket. Rondart, another performer, showered him in sand and water, and eventually extinguished the flames. Trouble started when a downdraught of air blew the flames back on to Crossini's face. He was hanging by his heels, and his hair caught fire.

Crossini appeared at later performances swathed in bandages.

Florida Ciro's To Meet the Heat The Lounge Way

The remaining Florida largeseat niteries may try a new method of operation this season. Dick Pearson, who'll run Ciro's, Miami Beach, indicates that he'll keep open the large room only during periods when highpowered names are available to him. Rest of the time, he'll operate the smaller lounge only. Through this reduced overhead he hopes to be able to build up to a profit.

Pearson was in New York last week on a talent hunt. He has already signed Frank Parker to open the spot on June 26 to start his summer season. During the hot months, according to Pearson, there's a different breed of vacationer from the usual winter season tourist. He feels that giving them names can induce a healthy trade. Competition during the hot span is slower, and Pearson thinks that he can make a go of the spot with a different type of headliner than that which is necessary for the height of the season.

Pearson says that niteries must operate differently than the hotels. The inns, he pointed out, have a lot of rooms working for them, and deficits can be made up in that direction. However, for a nitery, the cafe trade is the only source of revenue, and therefore he feels that it's the better part of valor to operate the expensive big rooms only when there's something to sell. He says it's the sole means of survival for the Florida niteries. With no gambling for added revenue, careful operation is a necessity.

A.C. STEEL PIER SETS NAME ORCH ROSTER

Atlantic City's Steel Pier, which some time ago lined up the vaude talent, has virtually completed the roster of bands going into its music hall.

Opening with the Sauter-Finegan crew which played over the weekend, Decoration Day stretch has Hal McIntyre, with subsequent weekend going to Lee Vincent. Full weeks go into effect June 15 with Elliott Lawrence, and follow with Tony Pastor, Woody Herman, Billy May, Richard Maltby, Buddy Morrow, Stan Kenton, Ralph Marterie, Sammy Kaye, Gene Krupa, Ralph Flanagan, with the next three weeks still open. Pier's entertainment closes Sept. 16.

Lib SRO 15G, Seattle

Seattle, May 29.

The Liberace show pulled capacity in one-nighter at the Civic Auditorium last week. The 5,000-seater was scaled to $5 and got great $14,900.

Attraction was under aegis of Hugh Becket.

Arthur M. Wirtz's "Hollywood Ice Revue" will be taken off the boards. Some of the stops this show has made in the past will be divided between "Ice Follies" and "Ice Capades." At Madison Square Garden, N. Y., "Ice Follies" will go into that building for the first time in seven years on Jan. 15 and will remain to Jan. 27.

Reasons for the closing of the show weren't immediately available. However, the shuttering gives rise to reports heard in New York and elsewhere that Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus, currently in Philadelphia, may shut down its summer tour and restage the shindig for winter showings in some of the major cities under hardtop auspices.

The shift by the circus to a winter tour would give the arenas a substitute for "Hollywood Ice Revue" to fill up playing time. At the same time, such a move take the big showshops away from the "whammy" of some arenas having to play three icers in any given season.

For the past few years, Wirtz's show has been running into some tough booking situations because it had been late in getting started. In some instances, it was the third show in a town and thus was in an extremely disadvantageous position.

The Wirtz show has been on the boards for about 18 years, and until a few years ago had Sonja Henie as its headliner. After Miss Henie left the show, the grosses fell off to some extent in a few cities. However, the generally lower nut (Miss Henie got $3,000 per performance and a slice of the profits) put Wirtz ahead of the game despite lower grosses.

There are some who think that Wirtz is divesting himself of his interests because of the pending Federal antitrust suit against the International Boxing Club. Wirtz is an important IBC shareholder and has a slice of Madison Square

Moscow State Circus In London More 'Human' Than UK's Animal Accent

London, May 29.

For sheer polish, the Moscow State Circus, which opened a three-week run at the 8,000-seater Harringay Arena on Whitsun Monday (21), would be hard to beat. But in most respects its format is substantially different from the typical British circuses which are featured during the Christmas holiday season.

Human performers play a far larger part in the proceedings than performing animals. A British circus without lions and tigers would be almost unthinkable, but the Russians are content to rely on a dozen bears and a brace of horses. Overall, the show doesn't suffer in consequence.

In the main, the show is identical with that reviewed from Paris in VARIETY on April 18, and individual acts merit the same acclaim. Oleg Popov's clowning, the aerial acrobatics of Helene Sinkovska and Victor Lisin, the high wire acrobatics of Tsovkra Troupe and the high speed stunting by Alexandre Serge's company of equestrian performers are among highlights. In each case, as noted from Paris, the performers have that little extra to offer to distinguish them from the normal run of entertainers. And that is the main reason for their success.

On opening day, (a national holiday), the company gave three shows, but thereafter are appearing once nightly. The house is scaled from a top of $2.15 down to 70c.

Billy Ward's Dominoes, after a term with Music Corp. of America, have returned to Joe Glaser's Associated Booking Corp. for a term deal.

Tin Pan Alley's 'Schizo on 52d Street'; AFM by Day, 'Disk Name' Cafe by Nite

By HERM SCHOENFELD

The rollerskating rink on West 52d St., once known as the Gay Blades, is now leading a double life. By day, it's the exchange floor of the New York musicians' Local 802; by night, it's the new pop-priced spot, Tin Pan Alley, named after the legendary capital of the music biz and Broadway's first disk-name club.

Preem of Tin Pan Alley last Friday night (25) indicated that it can fill a gap on the Manhattan show biz-scale. Ever since the disappearance of the stage presentations from the Broadway theatres, particularly the Paramount, there has been no large Broadway showcase for the top pop singers. Tin Pan Alley, with its 2,000-plus capacity and its policy of booking the leading disk singers on a one-niter basis, now gives the N.Y. kids a chance to catch the names in person.

This edifice, of course, was not designed for vocalists and it certainly doesn't offer the most flattering framework for an act. The bandstand is set midway between the ends of this hangar-like tavern and the acoustics favor the area directly in front of the microphone. At either end, it's a case of catch-as-catch-can.

The decor, what there is of it, is on the let's-rough-it side. Picnic tables and chairs are massed on the floor of this has-been rink with a fairly large wide open area left for hoofing. College boys, decked in conventional waiter's suit, handle the table service on a pay-as-you-eat basis.

Beer, but no hard liquor, is available at a reasonable tab—25c per bottle. The rest of the menu, similarly, lists prices more akin to a cafeteria than a night club. The only relationship to a cafe is the cover charge—or entrance fee—which is $1.84 on weekends and about 40c less for weekdays.

There's no doubt that Tin Pan Alley is going to be tough on the ballad singer. It might be a case here of sink or scream. A whispered nuance is more likely to be lost in the never-ending rumble of interior pedestrian traffic.

Pat Boone, the young Dot Records artist, kicked off this spot's lineup of disk names with some vigorous belting that had the kids massed around the bandstand during his performance. The few times that he essayed some soft crooning, the noise level increased perceptibly. When he stayed close to the rock 'n' roll numbers, the crowd stayed close to him.

Boone generally hit a click pace through his half-hour routine which was, in fact, a hit parade of rock 'n' roll numbers such as "The Great Pretender," "Blue Suede Shoes," "Tutti Frutti," etc. With this type of song, it doesn't matter if the lyric isnt projected with perfect lucidity.

Between the two-a-night performances of the disk names, Tin Pan Alley has two bands dishing up a varied menu of dansapation rhythms, from jitterbug to mambo. Basically, in fact, this spot is a ballroom operation where the kids can find partners and a place to dance.

Jimmy Sedlar shows solid promise as one of the two bandleaders alternating on the stand. A good trumpeter, Sedlar also knows how to belt a song effectively and showed enough stuff to hold the crowd during his vocal stints. Pert Judy Kaye also registers nicely as the band's thrush. Bob Walters' Tin Pan Alleycats also manufacture danceable music for the customers.

On opening night, plenty of talent managers were on hand casing the joint for their clients. It's a place where extra scratch can be picked up when a name is in N.Y. for a video or recording date. Problem for the spot arises, however, in the question whether there are enough big names available.

During the first couple of weeks after Boone, such names as Joni James, Tony Bennett, Johnny Desmond, Mills Bros., Alan Dale, Don Cornell, Betty Madigan, Cathy Carr, Jerry Vale, Bob Manning and The Treniers have been set. What happens, the question is, when this roster is exhausted and the repeat bookings begin?

Wirtz Freezes Icer

Garden as well as leases and ownerships of several other arenas.

However, the more immediate reason is the almost insurmountable booking snarls that result from a third major show hitting any given city and the virtual impossibility of routing three big-league icers through the country in a manner that permits all of them the proper spacing to enable them to come out ahead.

In Chicago, a Wirtz spokesman declared that the layout had been operating profitably and that good bookings were available. However, Wirtz has been busy with other matters, including the takeover of a Chi realty block which includes the Bismark Hotel and the Palace Theatre. He has scattered interests in other fields. Some of the icer's principals are to be absorbed by "Ice Follies."

Operetta House for W. Berlin

Berlin, May 22.

That West Berlin, after 10 postwar years still has no operetta theatre of its own, may be remedied soon. Since the old Metropol Theatre is now in this city's Soviet Sector (East Berlin), plans often have been mulled for a new house here.

Latest attempt to give West Berlin a new operetta house has been made by six Berlin operetta composers (Will Meisel, Hans Carste, Friedrich Schroeder, Gerhard Winkler, Karlheinz Gutheim and Hugo Hirsch), who have sent a memo to the Senate. They pointed out the Theater am Nollendorplatz, now a cinema, can easily be enlarged to 1,350 seats.

A tour of theatres in the British provinces is currently being lined up for Lionel Hampton. Bandleader is currently touring in Israel and will be in France starting June 15. He'll start the English tour in September and is expected to return to the U. S. either late October or November.

Joe Glaser's Associated Booking Corp. is lining up the dates.

enna and some special material from the Brill Bldg.

Across the street from the Chardas is the Viennese Lantern, which offers an international type of entertainment. Its roster of performers include such divers types as Sirat, an East Indian singer; Vicki Autier, from France; Helene Aimee, from Mexico; Monica Boyar, a Central American chirp, and others from various sectors of the globe.

The net result of this section has been an infusion of new interest that is reflected in niteries throughout the country. These spots sport alumni that have been making good in the regulation styled niteries. It's an active night club section with other cafes in the area offering various types of talent.

Razing of the Third Ave. 'El' and expected growth of the entire eastside area along the route of the tracks has already caused a preliminary boom in the uptown section, and other sections along that route are expecting similar hypos. Jose.

Vegas Dunes

$10,000 talent top. Meantime, main entertainment policy will be cocktail lounge combos and ballroom dancing.

Question of a Vegas spa being able to stay in business without employing top name lures was raised by Bill Deutsch, the lone Tax Commission member who refused to pass favorably on its gambling license. Deutsch, who said later he was merely trying to adhere to the Commission's new "get-tough" policy that requires all future hotels to be unquestionably financed, cited the limited bankroll of $340,000 put up by Miller, Riddle and Rice to open the gambling end of the hotel. (Ops also have a reserve of $340,000.)

Deutsch said he feels the hotel's casino hasn't been stacked with enough coin, and this coupled to a policy of "no name talent may prove disastrous for the new owners." Miller replied, however, that he is sure Vegas has outgrown the "big name craze," as far as the patron is concerned, and that the ticket holder is now more interested in good food and "just plain sound entertainment."

Same Rooms

newcomers to the swankery circuit as Constance Bennett, on her first round of nitery dates; Lilo, who after making a rep in "Can-Can" got herself an expensive act and did a record-breaking biz at the room; Robert Clary, who has been playing the intimeries, and who is making a bid for the larger rooms (current at the Pierre's Cotillion); Caterina Valente, who opens the Pierre season in September.

Indications point to the likelihood that the Plaza will be on the same search for newcomers to its Persian Room. For example, Eartha Kitt has been pacted for next season.

For the bulk of the newcomers into the hotel rooms, the acts are graduates of the nitery wheels and have achieved reputations in that field. Legit and films have contributed the others. Thus the hotel has a reputation to draw on, and that sometimes is sufficient to pull enough business for one engagement at least. Receptivity of the audience and amount of couverts, of course, determine whether the performer gets a return trip.

The offbeat tries have been beneficial to the hotels in several respects. Aside from the upturn of business, the inns have enlarged their roster of eligible acts. They can provide a greater variety of talent and draw upon new sources of revenue since different acts lure different categories of customers.

HORACE McMAHON
With Geene Courtney & Charles Reynolds
Sketch
15 Mins.
Palace, N.Y.

Horace McMahon, whose entry on stage is generally accomped by applause, is a competent actor who has been in dozens of films, has had an important role in the legiter, "Detective Story" among others, and has appeared in many vaude flyers during his career.

In this attempt at the Palace, he's seeking to revive what is virtually a lost skill—the one-act playlet that used to be a mainstay on the vaude circuits of a former era. Obviously it's a tall order. Playwrights no longer think in terms of vehicles for vaude, and the standard patterns of play construction do not apply. The playwright has to get to the heart of the subject very shortly with little buildup and the dialog has to be in terms of action.

McMahon's entry, "Three Time Loser," meets most of these requirements. Only drawback is the need of additional editing to cut down a few minutes. The sketch is productive of some fine thesping by the star and his colleagues, Geene Courtney and Charles Reynolds.

McMahon has been sent up for three stretches and a next time commits him to a life term. He seeks money from Miss Courtney, recipient of many favors in the past. She has since remarried and, in response to McMahon's plea for $10,000 so that he can set himself up in a business, she produces only $500. Her husband, Reynolds, an elderly and jealous banker, supplies the rest in return for a condition which commits his wife to virtual slavery. She elects to resume with McMahon instead.

Basically, it's a good vaude vehicle that can hold its own in any similar situation. It needs a bit of pruning so that some of the exposition is eliminated, and which would permit the more action-laden sequences to predominate. However, there's entertainment in this sketch for every segment of audience and it does draw excellent hands on the basis of performance. Act has potential on a major video variety show.

Act was written by James P. Davis, a N.Y. Daily News staffer, who has good conception of the requirements of this medium, and staging is such that the maximum dramatic values are obtained. Set of a hotel room is okay. Jose.

ANDY STEWART
Comedy
12 Mins.
Empire, Glasgow

Robust little comedian with the auld lang syne dialect has potential for success if he can strike out on a line of his own, and not be a mere amalgam of other comedy stars.

As is, he's relying at moment mainly on impressions of established comedy artistes. Using as a basis a nonsensical Scot-accented tune called "Oh, Ye Cannae Shove Yer Granny Aff A Bus," he impersonates this as it would be rendered by a local Scot girl, a crooner and by Johnnie Ray in his much-copied "Cry" style. Comedian's flair for impressions is of a good standard, and he scores with a take-off of the new deadpan Scot comedian Chic Murray and his explaining-the-obvious style of patter. Winds this bit by using Murray's signature song, "China Doll."

Comedian has hard-bitten cheeky face, with combo of Mickey Rooney forwardness and Joe E. Brown mouth, and could use a lot of new patter and gags to suit such a face instead of stressing the impressions. Has potential for wider vaude and tv bookings if properly shaped and stage personality sharpened. Gord.

VAGABOUNDERS (3)
Trampoline
8 Mins.
Ak-Sar-Ben, Omaha

Vagabounders are a youthful, hard-working team with good trampoline acrobatics that make them fine for vaude or fair dates. Boy is the standout performer, while his wife, a double for Jayne Mansfield, serves as more than window dressing. Kids have a cute gimmick in the boy catching her in adagio poses when she completes a trick.

Added punch comes when their youngster, a 3-year-old, joins mom and pop for a little bouncing on the mattress. Trunip.

POMPOFF, THEDY & FAMILY
Comedy
11 Mins.
Palace, N. Y.

Pompoff, Thedy & Family is an import from Spain which takes the form of an accomplished musical novelty suitable for virtually any largeseat cafe, outdoor and theatre situations. It's a well-drilled act which utilizes magic, several instruments, and comedy all tied together with skill and showmanship.

The comedy is of the European school. There are two comics and a straight, latter being used mainly as a musical support at the piano, plus a few odd chores that facilitates the work of the others. The comics are excellent pantomimists with a lot of surprise antics that gets the crowd continually. It's an excellently blueprinted turn that applies the grand comedy that can carry in huge halls, coupled with subtlety best appreciated by adult audiences. It's a turn for all age groups and for virtually every theatrical situation, including tv. Jose.

JACKIE KAHANE
Comedy
40 Mins.
Bradford Roof, Boston

Jackie Kahane, around for some time in Canada and fringe U. S. cities, but not yet documented in VARIETY, is a crewcutted little chap who can handle comedy and pathos in the same stint and make it come out fine all around. Using offbeat material, he gags and clowns in the usual fashion displaying great pickup on the repartee end pointing everything towards his big bit, a straight from-the-shoulder talk between a clown and a mythical stage struck kid. Pulling a stool up to the mike, he takes a spot, sits down and nestles a makeup kit in his lap. While applying the makeup, he gets off an appealing spiel to the kid about the frustrations of show biz. A telephone call interrupts and the clown is told there's a big agent from faraway out front to see him.

He winds up inviting the kid to come out front and "see me knock 'em dead" and launches into a special material song on show biz. Kahane comes on with a conductor's money changing apparatus around his belt and offers quarters and halfs for laughs, blending this in with a special material song roaming the ringside and passing out the change. He dispenses about $6 a night in this fashion, and writes it off with his song, "I Still Get a Feeling that it Pays to Pay for Your Laughs."

Kahane does some tricky bits with a trumpet on "Beguine," and yoks it up with a Russian number. On his offbeat kick, he calls in a Martian spaceship, invites all the passengers for the ride, while the band plays "Martian" music, not audible to human ears. Kahane weaves this fantasy bit to nice round.

Comic makes the most of a natural aud appeal and looks to be a good bet for all rooms. Guy.

JACKIE LITTLE
Songs
12 Mins.
City Auditorium, Omaha

(Miss) Jackie Little is a good-looking, blonde vocalist well equipped with voice and showmanship. Although her black, plain dress could be improved upon, it was proper enough for the aud that turned out for Elvis Presley.

Miss Little's selection of four songs proved her versatility and she looms as a good bet to climb in her field. Trump.

RONNY SHELDON
Songs
12 Mins.
Chaudiere, Ottawa

Ronny Sheldon has a fine set of pipes but is sorely in need of an act. During the month he has been in the Chaudiere Club's Rose Room as line chanter, this is his first solo stint and from the sound angle, he's clicko.

If, with experience and training, he gains the confidence and slickness a chant act needs to please the tablesitters, Sheldon will be a good bet for niteries and video. Gorm.

ANNY FRATELLINI
Songs
20 Mins.
Le Carroll's, Paris

Anny Fratellini is a pert, fresh looking girl with a taking, clownish face probably harking back to her parentage which is that of the famed Fratellini clowns. She displays this sawdust background in her trouper aspects. As a singer she still needs to be redone couturewise, and though voice has some guile and zest it is still unformed and needs more work and control. She is definitely a show personality and when, she learns the rudiments of mike presence and the proper songalog to match her ebullient looks and personality, might well emerge a specialized star singer. She also finishes with circus shenanigans of playing various instruments and then two little accordions. This might be salvaged for an offbeat encore but windup with cartwheels etc. could be easily pared with no loss.

Hubby Philippe Brun backs her in the instrumentalist parts of the act. When girl is honed to her highest possibilities she could be a telling U. S. entry for specialized boites. Mosk.

RICHARD WILSON
Songs
10 Mins.
Apollo, N. Y.

An Apollo firsttimer, this "Chance of a Lifetime" champ's pipes suggest a wholesome pro future. Richard Wilson, a likeable Negro baritone with plenty of youth to compensate for the mild rough spots, does "Foggy Day," "Young and Foolish," "World On A String" and "Dance All Night" encore.

At the Apollo this type of performer is generally up against it, particularly when the pewsters expect all rhythm & blues. Wilson is no exception for this audience, but he shows that he knows his music, with nice jazz routining on "Foggy" and "String." "Dance All Night," from "My Fair Lady" score, is where he breaks slightly; doesn't hold onto rich baritone quality throughout, and road is made tougher by inadequate backstopping of Paul Williams band. Art.

FOUR MINTS
Songs
25 Mins.
Carmichael's, Birmingham

Young singers from Texas show plenty of versatility in their quick switches from a smooth ballad to a rock 'n' roll done with gyrations. Male quartet puts plenty of pep into own composition, "Busy Body Rock," which they recorded on the Lin label and plenty of feeling into the spiritual "Swing Low Sweet Chariot."

Act is spiced with the guitar playing by James Wilson, lead singer, and the trumpet playing by Aubie McSwain, baritone. Al Warr, oldest of the group, is emcee and bass. Gene Warr is first tenor. The 4 Mints are second generation in the quartet field, and have been singing together all their lives, having started on the gospel singing circuit at 13. Fred.

AL JACKSON & THE FAT MEN
Songs-Comedy
12 Mins.
Apollo, N.Y.

Biggest fatso of the lot, Al Jackson shows up pretty well in solo, even though he's reputed to have rejected further one-man stands for the embrace of the three other stouts. Not especially because he works his routining that way, but Jackson seems to be the only successful performer of the Negro quartet. He's stage hep, has a good baritone voice and his monologs have pace and substance, but the other refugees from Sigmund Klein's huskies department aren't much in vocal unison and usually aren't positive about what to do with hands and faces.

After a warmly-received solo entre, Jackson teams with The Fat Men in "Without a Song," he at one mike and others bundled around a second. They continue with "Teach Me Tonight," and again Jax comes off best. Collection of impressions, where lyric technique plays second fiddle to accuracy of imitation, is only place where support makes out. Leader, about like Jackie Gleason in dimensions, with or without any assistance, is good for vaude dates and less-discerning nitery stands. Art.

MARGA LLERGO
Songs
25 Mins.
Le Carroll's, Paris

Hefty Mexican singer may well be described as the "last of the red hot mamacitas" from down under. She has a bombast and belting voice that fills a club to crescendo heights. All this fervor is backed by an excellent voice and she suddenly bursts into rhythmic carioca dances that display a fine pair of gams under the avoirdupois. She has the trouper quality and has entered her fine phase and looks more than ready for U. S. club unveiling.

Her versatility and voice could make her of equal usage for U. S. revue, club or more subdued boites going for the rhythmic Latino American songs. Mosk.

House Reviews

Music Hall, N. Y.

"Metropolis," produced by Leon Leonidoff, with the Rockettes, Three Houcs, Pat Henning, Ed Powell, Corps de Ballet, Choral Ensemble; settings, James Stewart Morcom; costumes, designed by Frank Spencer, executed by Louise Bayer; lighting effects, Eugene Braun; special lyrics, Albert Stillman; Music Hall Symphony, directed by Raymond Paige; "Bhowani Junction" (M-G), reviewed in VARIETY, May 9, 1956.

Hustle and bustle that's the hallmark of New York's contemporary scene have been spectacularly recreated in "Metropolis," a Leon Leonidoff production. It's a rich tapestry of Gotham that should prove delightful entertainment to natives and hinterlanders alike.

High spot is a traffic "jam session" in which the Rockettes emerge from the hood of a car as 36 (count 'em) sparkplugs to ignite an eyecatching display of imaginative precision dancing. Accentuating the effectiveness of the sequence as well as others to follow are the fine settings of James Stewart Morcom, the Frank Spencer costumes and Eugene Braun's lighting effects.

Sandwiched in the session are a couple of vaude turns, the Three Houcs and comedian Pat Henning. While the size of this huge theatre occasionally militates against the success of a juggling turn, with small props, the Houcs (two femmes and a male) take it in their stride to give a fascinating display of hoop tossing. Trio also draws fancy mitts via lightning dexterity with Indian clubs.

Less impressive is Henning, who runs through some fair impreshes of Bette Davis, Wallace Beery, Charles Boyer, Lionel Barrymore, etc. His draft board routine wins okay results until he quotes the doctor as saying: "I'm afraid you'll have to go to the mountains for your kidneys." The reply: "I didn't know they were up there." That's a sample of his so-so material.

"Block Party" is a colorful setting for the Music Hall Dancing Ensemble to make with rock 'n' roll via a "Blue Suede Shoes" number. It paves the way for an impressive "Glory Road," soloed by Ed Powell. Windup has the corps de ballet prancing a "Ballet Romantique" spectacle in which they're later joined by the entire company.

Hour-long layout is introed by the overture to "William Tell." Familiar to both the audience and the musicians, it's flawlessly played by the Hall Symphony orch under Raymond Paige's direction. Gilb.

Apollo, N. Y.

Clovers (5), Al Jackson & The Fat Men (4), Paul Williams Band (11), McHarris & Delores, Pee Wee Crayton, Richard Wilson, Apus & Estrelita; "Bottom of Bottle" (20th).

This is one of those cards that's "almost but not quite." The Apollo has one of those weeks when all of the mainstays have just enough wrong with them to take a measure of the enjoyment out of the performances. With the Clovers it's a case of the wrong repertoire most of the time. With Al Jackson and the Fat Men, it's that he doesn't need the extra help (see New Acts). As for comedy songsters, Apus & Estrelita, he's fine but she's awkward, thus dulling the glitter of his half.

The Clovers quintet is sharp in "Devil or Angel," and "Lovey Dovey" and "Good Lovin'" aren't bad either, but the rest of the log simply lacks zing. For as veteran a rhythm-blues group as this, the shadily innuendoed body movements are little more than juvenile slapstick.

McHarris & Delores are okay tapsters, he being sharper than she. Pee Wee Crayton is an undistinctive hillbilly rhythm & blueser, except that the electric guitar finale (a blues piece he wrote himself) is topnotch. Richard Wilson, unappreciated here though looking okay for other spots, is in New Acts. Then there's Apus & Estrelita. After the routine picks up pace, he draws some off-color yocks that keep the house in a high degree of responsiveness. She's okay on the vocals, straight or otherwise, but n.s.h. when playing straight for her partner.

Paul Williams 11-man unit is sharp delivering the brand of raucous r&b Harlem vaudites demand. Art.

Palace Works Up Steam At Its 7th Anni; Too Closely Geared to Geriatric Set?

Opening of the anni show of the Palace Theatre last week (25) recalls the preem of the house at its resurrection of stageshows seven years ago. The lines were around the corner, the audience was enthusiastic to the fever point, and the feeling that the oldtime vaude devotees had at last found a home still applies today.

However, there are some vast differences. In the intervening years, booker Danny Friendly has learned a lot about the house and its audience and can pick up a show that's almost always a crowd pleaser. The grosses have held a steady level and the doubts cast in the direction of the Palace's staying powers with stageshows has long since been dispelled.

One of the drawbacks, though, lies in the fact that the audience is culled from the elderly group. The shows must be set up to please the geriatric set, and only occasionally can these social security recipients be given a new turn that will continue the breed. Nonetheless, in its seven-year span, the Palace has hit its quota of new talent. It's been an excellent showcase for a lot of performers who have since gone on to other sections of the industry.

Friendly has exceeded himself budgetarily and entertainmentwise with this layout. The headliners include Pat Rooney, who was onstage at the Palace revival; Smith & Dale in a new sketch, and Horace McMahon, heading a three-trouper outfit in a sketch further described under New Acts. In addition, Mae Barnes has come in from the intimery and the rest of the outfit does excellently in its allotted time.

Palace, N. Y.

Rooney has an unchanging act. He's still as delighted to see the audience as they are to see him and his hardy bits, "Daughter of Rosie O'Grady" and "Tea For Two," plus his recollection of Joe Frisco, create an audience clamor.

Smith & Dale's "The Tax Consultant" is in the tradition of the other items in the S&D catalog. It's somewhat reminiscent of "Dr. Kronkheit" and has virtually as many laughs. These kids, who have been together for 50 years, have produced as many laughs for stageshow attendees as any act on the boards. The Palace, however, seems to have taken over an S&D tradition. Geene Courtney, who has been the third member of the party on the "Kronkheit" sketch, is in a thespic capacity with the McMahon troupe. By themselves S&D are still great.

Mae Barnes is one of the energetic songsters on the regular panel of the Bon Soir nitery. Sepian excites the mob with her renditions of "Deed I Do," "Nobody's Sweetheart," a special material number and also some incidental dancing. She's a way to a hot respons.

Helene & Howard also hit a high measure of applause with their comedy dancing. It's a good novelty on the bill that utilizes a small amount of mayhem to take this act out of the normal category of comedy ballroomers and they do handsomely.

Openers are Mitzi's Lucky Girls, a seven-member troupe that goes in for formations, tumbling and baton twirling for picturesque effects. Walter Walters Jr., who bears the name of a ventriloquist of a former day, throws his voice effectively with material designed exclusively for ventriloquy exercises. Pompoff, Thedy & Family are under New Acts.

Myron Roman is the regular custodian of the baton, and he's able to give the acts a considerable lift from his post in the pit. Wendell Corey, one of the toppers in the screen accompaniment, "The Bold and The Brave," made a brief personal appearance for the preem show, and Army band added to the festive atmosphere of the occasion. Dave Bines' staging is excellent. Jose.

Latin Quarter, N. Y.

Johnnie Ray, Wazzan Troupe, Metropolitan Sextette, Connie Warner, Harold & Lola, Nicolai & Knight, Rita Noble, James Cosenza, Latin Quarter Dancers & Showgirls, Jo Lombardi Orch; conceived and directed by Lou Walters; choreography and staging, Natalie Komorova; special songs and lyrics, Walters, Art Waner; $6 minimum.

If there are any doubting Thomases who still consider Johnnie Ray a flash-in-the-platter novelty, a visit to the Latin Quarter will quickly erase that notion. A gander of Ray at work and even a cursory observation of the audience will prove that Ray is a magnetic performer, with a style that is different, yet convincing and appealing. He starts slowly, like a pitcher warming up, gains momentum in the middle innings, and closes with a devastating flourish.

The 30-minute workout, from "Who's Sorry Now" to the bluesy "Whiskey and Gin," is as hypnotic and revealing as a revival meeting. With his hair disheveled and obviously worn by his concentrated and determined efforts, Ray begged off to a thunderous reception on opening night. The "crying" quality of his voice is still quite evident and, despite the many humorous carbons, is nonetheless contagious. His 10-song contribution encompasses old favorites as well as the song clicks especially identified with The Weeper. "Cry" and "Little White Cloud That Cried" remain blockbusters in the Ray repertoire. He scores, too, with Ray-styled renditions of "September Song," "Alexander's Ragtime Band," "Ain't Misbehavin'" and "As Time Goes By." His modest, almost humble, intros and acknowledgements appear genuine and add considerably to his general acceptance.

Ray alone can keep the turnstiles clicking at Lou Walters' Gotham landmark, but the showwise boniface has nevertheless surrounded his star with a lavish, fast-paced revue that maintains the LQ's quality reputation. The Wazzan Troupe, familiar to LQ regulars, never fails to impress its dervish-paced acrobatics. Harold & Lola, also LQ repeats, stand out in their cobra dance.

A little bit of culture, Walters apparently reasons, will never hurt a nitery aud, and as presented by the Metropolitan Sextette—Alicia de La Cruz, Chester Ludgin, Mignon Dunn, James Cosenza, Richard Sharretts and Betty Wolf—is highly palatable. The longhair group wisely sticks to familiar operatic arias which, through frequent airings, have become as familiar as pop tunes. The mezzo soprano is especially effective vocally in an excerpt from "Carmen." Team of Nicolai & Knight prove that grownups are as susceptible to marionettes as children.

The gayly costumed LQ hoofers and the "mannequins tres jolie" are effective bait for visiting conventioneers as well as expense-account and anni-celebrating New Yorkers. All in all, the show conceived and directed by Walters is top-draw nitery entertainment. Jo Lombardi and his crew, as per usual, contribute to the proceedings with excellent showbacking and music for customer dansapation. Holl.

Hotel Roosevelt, N. O.

New Orleans, May 25.

Joanne Wheatley (with Hal Kanner), Marshall & Farrell, Tina & Coca, George Rank Orch (14); $2.50 minimum.

New layout is pleasing package of variety headlined by Joanne Wheatley, who looks as good as she sings, and George Rank and his versatile musical crew.

The shapely Miss Wheatley, a big fave here, has an act of real entertainment scope that rates the class rooms and provides the better things in song-showmanship. Her mature stylings are purveyed with an able assist from pianist-arranger-conductor-husband Hal Kanner.

Chanteuse offers wide array of tunes, all slickly arranged. Her mixture blends bright, bouncy items with slower tempos to garner top results. Throughout her rad'ant personality is there to kindle interest. Pipes range from big to a whisper. She opens with a spirited "My Song" and shifts to deep ballad style with "Unchained Melody" and "Autumn Leaves" followed by "Lover Come Back to Me," "Love and Marriage," a softshoe song duet with Kanner, and "Hymn de L'Amour." Kanner's voice is heard frequently during songstress' stint in duet interludes to give turn a pleasant flavor.

Teeing off the acts are Tina & Coca, youthful Spanish dance imports. They're an exciting pair of flamenco artists who romp through a fast-paced mixture of heel stomping and castanet clicking. Their authentic costuming and warmth add to impact. They net plenty of palm-pounding.

Marshall & Farrell provide the laughs on the bill. Their routines are in the payoff category. Lads look more like a couple of intellectuals than comics but everything they do or say collects plenty of guffaws. They're a refreshing departure from the knockabout and slapstick variety of funsters, relying primarily on built-up situations, songs, impressions and satire to score heavily.

Rank's orch is a capable outfit, playing arrangements sans the furbelows that too many bands add to obscure the basic theme. Crew keeps customers happy throughout the dance sessions. Rank's trumpeting is a high spot of the entertainment and his crew a well-integrated group that has been put together with an eye as well as ear to showmanship values. Liuz.

Chase Club, St. Louis

St. Louis, May 22.

Jonathan Winters, Bonnie Sisters (3), Jody Gray, Buddy Moreno Orch (12); $1-$1.50 cover.

For this session Harold Koplar has switched the booking from a single act to a threesome and with Jonathan Winters headlining this package, customers are receiving a tiptop variety of entertainment.

In the opening slot Jody Gray, a shapely brunet looker, whets the appetite of the customers with a sock marimba routine that winds up with some neat tap steps and acro stuff as she hammers out "Sheik of Araby." Her interp of "St. Louis Blues," first time it has been played on the marimba in this spot wins a hefty and well deserved mitt.

The Bonnie Sisters, two blondes and a brunet, dish out a straight warbling with some fine harmony and their first recording, "Cry Baby," cops a solid hand. Sandwiched in are "Live Till We Die," "My Loving Baby," "Not Much" and "Riverside."

The well upholstered Winters with his droll tall tales keeps the chair warmers chuckling and guffawing as he mimics his characters in yarns of the Marines at Paris Island and in the South Pacific, a gas station attendant on the Pennsylvania turnpike and a woman driving a car for the first time. His description of horror movies, fishermen at a trout stream, those doing surf casting and the guy who gets nothing but headaches while his wife goofs up the outing, fracture the customers and he returns for another bellylaugh via an African safari. Sahu.

Thunderbird, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, May 28.

"China Doll Revue," with Ming & Ling, Toy & Wing, Sing Lee Sing Family (7), Tong Bros. (3), Ruth Chio, Mai Tai Sing, China Dolls (8), produced by Tom Ball; Barney Rawlings, Al Jahns Orch (10), $2 minimum.

Tom Ball's "China Doll Revue" will create plenty of talk along the Strip and thus aid in bringing in the crowds for two frames beat upon seeing an exotic, offbeat production.

Staging of the revue has been neatl done, with Chinese motif settings in the background acting as scrim in front of the bandstand. Everything moves speedily, culminating in Ming & Ling, whose electric comedics spur almost continous yocks. Ling wins palms for his impreshes, warbling Fisher, Como, Ray, Ink Spots, and Jolson, while his pop, Ming, supplies all the cornball breakups.

Toy & Wing move into straight modern ballrooming after doffing kimonos for tux and gown. Flashback to the Castles is nimbly footed, the Joe Frisco takeoff merits mitting, but the femme's trick stepping while on toe shoes gains the top reception.

Sing Lee Sing Family caused much on a previous journey to another nitery here, and should repeat the favorable buzz this trip. Father and mother do acro and fine balancing tricks while the four girls, stepped up in sizes and ages, break it up via chirps and terps. The little boy takes bows in Davy Crockett outfit for more appreciative palms. Three Tong Bros. have some startling tricks in gymnastics, pyramids, contortions, head-to-head balances, roping in gasps and oversize kudosing.

China Dolls have three choreos, all of the Eastern manner with moderne overlays. Agile Ruth Chio is featured in spins and some acro, and looker Mai Tai Sing is the very provocative parader. Al Jahns has it rough with all the scores and almost a full hour of batonning his musickers, but manages capably. Will.

Hotel Pierre, N. Y.

Robert Clary, Rey & Gomez, Stanley Melba Orch, Alan Logan Combo; $2-$2.50 cover.

It's often the case that when a talented performer along the intimate nitery circuit hits a big room like the Cotillion for the first time, he gets "lost" in its size—the act is too small for the room. With Robert Clary, a veteran of Gotham's intimery route, the effect is just the reverse. It's as if the diminutive Frenchman had been cramped all these years; in his first big-room appearance, he's an unqualified click, expanding in stature as a performer to project to a large audience in far better fashion than he ever did to a small one.

Fully aware of the change—he gagged the stint as a "concert" in "this small, intimate room"—Clary takes full command of his surroundings. He's got a strong voice; he capers and uses the full amount of his floor space; he uses lots of physical humor and most important, his personality projects throughout the room. There's nothing sock about this turn—his material is only fair and it's his personality that carries the turn—but it builds in a sort of unspectacular fashion to the point where it's a begoff.

Clary is a singer-comic, mixing his straight-type special material showtune with comedy numbers and an occasional sketch. He looks like a Chevalierean Jerry Lewis, and projects the same kind of impishness as the latter. As noted, the material isn't overly strong—it just manages to carry its own weight—but the personality projects far beyond the subject matter, and it's this that makes him a click. Opening and closing numbers, in fact, could be dropped from the routine; they are "Lucky Pierre" and "Vive la Vie Francaise" and are rather watery special material pieces. But "Bien," a "love song" which he does as a comic contortion bit; "Standing on the Corner," an ingratiating version of the Frank Loesser "Fella" tune; the "New Faces" number; "I'm in Love With Miss Logan"; "Calypso Blues" and a fine sketch of a stonefaced danceband vocalist are all done in top-drawer style.

Federico Rey & Pilar Gomez, as the openers, have expanded what was fundamentally a Spanish dance turn to include some good terp satire. First half of the stint is still the Spanish folk dancing, done par excellence both in the duet numbers and in Rey's solo bolero. Latter half is a satire of the Latin American dance fad in Paris in 1910 and '20, and both Rey and Miss Gomez show a flair for comedy (and some graceful ballrooming too) that deserves further experiment. Stanley Melba orch, under the baton of Joseph Sudy, cuts a difficult show without a hitch, and makes with smooth dansapation. Alan Logan combo alternates on the terping with equal distinction. Chan.

New Frontier, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, May 28.

Janis Paige (with Jerry Madison & Fred Hanson), Darvas & Julia, Johnny Puleo & Harmonica Gang (6), Venus Starlets (12), Marge Baker, Jack Tiegen, Rene De Haven, Garwood Van Orch (14); $2 minimum.

Adventurers along the Vegas Street of Dreams will take to Janis Paige like they take to the tables in the casinos. She's a prime example of winning a high stake—the hard way. The stake is her present niche in show biz being cheered for a month in the New Frontier's Venus Room.

Entrance setup, "It's Always Jan," is sung by her onstage escorts, Jerry Madison and Fred Hanson, with her first tune, "I'm Gonna Live Till I Die," belted forcefully. A special by Jack Brooks contrives a saucy fantasy on the Bridey Murphy premise, which regresses her to 1888 as a bordello doll. "Pajama Game" medley is tops, with the two guys aiding in warbling and terps, "Hernando's Hideaway" and "I'll Never Be Jealous." Coming on for extra kudosing is "Hey There," as a carbon of the Broadway production.

Pace and mood changer, "The Man Who Got Away," discloses another facet of the Paige personality. Covering her costume change for the finale, Madison does a good job on "You Do Something To Me," and Hanson puts over a modern eccentric bit of terping. The Paige return is based on three periods of "Beach Modesty" — 1900, "Roaring '20s," and latest vogue in brief gold lame, whistle-baiting the finale which curtains to special lyrics of "Hey There." Jonathan Lucas has done a fine job of choreography, and Harry Froman batons effectively the solid Garwood Van crew.

Darvas & Julia are high voltage performers in every breathtaking exhib of adagio-contortion. All tricks are superb, but the finish is one of the very big nitery thrills. Darvas catapults Julia from a high elevation with his supple partner landing in a split 15 feet distant.

Johnny Puleo & Harmonica Gang are handed the task of priming but manage to get underway fast. Puleo's panto patsy, as always, is the focal point of the sextet's antics, with any serious harmonica puffings bowing to slapstick. They do hit well, however, with "Peg O' My Heart" and "Orpheus." Otherwise, it's little Johnny all the way.

Dorothy Dorben's "Heat Wave" for the Venus Starlets' opener is strong. The midway "Undersea Ballet" is one of the best pieces of nitery choreography, balletic style, ever dreamed up for a Vegas Strip spot. Featured in both productions are Marge Baker, Jack Tiegen and Rene De Haven, doing some very adept solo forms. Will.

Gatineau, Ottawa

Ottawa, May 28.

Joan Weber, Joe E. Ross, Los Majos (3), Pat Morgan, Lindsay-Day Dancers (6), Champ Champagne Orch (8); $1 admission.

In a year or so, Joan Weber has been transformed from a shy, nervous beginner with potential ability and a sudden smash tune into a top canary with class, confidence, savvy and plenty impact. In the 1955 spring, Miss Weber played another Ottawa nitery, a few weeks after she clicked with "Let Me Go, Lover" on television. The change that is evident in her current stint at the Gatineau Club is a tribute to the people who showed confidence in her a year ago.

Smartly gowned, Miss Weber exhibits nice stacking and slick grooming plus clicko staging and savvy. Unlike her original stanza when she used "Let Me Go" style on every song, she now makes every item individual and distinctive, selling directly to the table-sitters with socko handling. After bits like "Tender Trap," "If I Had My Way," "Cry Me A River," "Mr. Wonderful" and of course "Let Me Go," she has a hard time getting away from solid mitting.

Joe E. Ross who looks and sounds like the late Wallace Beery and naturally does an aping of him, works an okay session of gab comedy. Sounding like his pipes are corroded, Ross uses plenty of gags, some blue, but this mob buys them. A veteran comic, Ross shows the timing fitted to audience reaction and gets his material across aptly.

Los Majos, Spanish terp group, has a flashy session of heel-pounding and castanet clicking to good returns. The trio (femme and two males) does a lot of the terping sans accompaniment, impact abetted by femme's looks and build, with effective staging throughout.

Held over are Pat Morgan, botto chanter who works single and with the Lindsay-Day Dancers in a smash production with "Guys & Dolls" tunes. Champ Champagne band showbacks and plays for dancing. Yvonne handles the 88 and warble in the lounge. Gorm.

Le Carroll's, Paris

Paris, May 29.

Anny Fratellini, Marga Llergo, Maria & Ronnie, Rita Renoir, Miki, Rudy Castell Orch (7); $5 minimum.

L. Carroll's nitery still shows a rare manner of picking its select floorshow and with the dansation of the Rudy Castell Orch remains a pop late spot. Boite will be refurbished next September with an early show instituted to have it on from 10:30 to the wee hours to placate early-comers who have clamored for entertainment. Show now starts at about 12.30 a.m.

Topliners are chantoosies Anny Fratellini and Marga Llergo with former showing a pert freshness and latter a bombast and presence (see New Acts). Maria & Ronnie supply an elegant erotic act as sepia girl in sheerest undies welcomes the iceman as they go into a hot suggestive dance. This adequately fills the current small boite shifts to the strip and sensually type acts.

This is further compounded by Rita Renoir, who does an offbeat strip in coming out in crinoline and sitting in a rocker reading the Marquis De Sade. To her aunt's calling she goes into a peel and then a frenzied shake dance. This is good on the eyes and risibilities and in the idiom of the "naughty Paree" tag. All are well introed by fine looking U.S. femcee Miki. Mosk.

Bon Soir, N. Y.

Tony & Eddie, Bibi Osterwald, Phil Leeds, Jimmy Daniels, Three Flames, Lynn Berge; $5 minimum.

The Bon Soir continues as one of the brightest afterdark spots in the Greenwich Village sector with this new layout. Accent, as usual, is on comedy and song and headliners Tony & Eddie, Bibi Osterwald and Phil Leeds dish it out in hefty helpings.

Although the aforementioned trio have appeared here and/or neighboring spots many times before, they remain fresh and exuberant as they pound their stuff home. Tony & Eddie for the most part stick to their tried and tested material in their record miming act and it still works. Here again are the impressions of pop disk artists, the Bing Crosby-Mary Martin duet of "Wait Till The Sun Shines Nellie," "Indian Love Call" and some Olsen & Johnson-styled nonsense. The something new is a carbon of Rosemary Clooney's etching of "Hey There." It's a socko wrapper-upper with plenty of visual yocks. The boys should do something about their recorded sound equipment. It virtually blasts you out of the cellar.

Big-voiced Bibi Osterwald has refashioned her repertoire with an eye to variety and pace. Its a likeable songbag which mixes comedy songs, rhythm and ballads for good impact. She's best when in the raucous groove such as "Hard Hearted Hannah," "The Nobody's Doin' It Dance" and "You Either Got It Or You Ain't." Also effective is her standard satiric piece, "One Stinkin' Magnolia." For a change of pace, she has a pleasant special material ballad, "It Ain't New York Anymore."

Doubling from the Broadway legiter, "The Matchmaker," Phil Leeds lends a soft but hilarious tone to the evening. He strikes the funnybone with a patter line that's quiet and sure. Opening night crowd was in his hands all the way. He also scores with a one-tune shot, "I've Got The Nothing To Sing The Blues About Blues."

Room's host, Jimmy Daniels, opens the show with a neatly fashioned songalog of standards. Most of the keyboard backing and interlude work was nicely supplied by Lynn Berge, subbing for Connie Berrie. She was slated to take over last night (Tues.). The Three Flames have been sliced to a duo for the next couple of weeks while combo's leader, Tiger Haynes is out-of-town with "New Faces of 1956." He'll rejoin the group when the revue hits Broadway. Meantime, the piano and bass hit a hard and energetic beat. Gros.

Hotel Muehlebach, K. C.

Kansas City, May 23.

Jane Morgan, Dick Smith, Tommy Reed Orch (8); $1-$1.50 cover.

Jane Morgan, the blonde singer who first had a date here just a year ago is now coupled on the bill with comic-impersonator Dick Smith, in for the first time. Two make it a long show rounding out 45 minutes and building to a desirable warmth at the Morgan finale. Tommy Reed is in for his regular stint on the m.c. chores with his orch backing highly acceptable.

Smith takes the quiet approach, easing into the works with some punchy comic lines and quickly getting into his list of impressions. One series is as seen on today's tv, and along with Godfrey, Jimmy Durante, a Gillette fight, Harry Truman, Winston Churchill and others he wraps up a running list of vocal sound effects. Second series takes customers down memory lane of silent films and early talkers with impressions of Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore, Al Jolson and others for a surprisingly strong response.

As before, Miss Morgan proves the epitome of the chanteuse label, wrapping up a considerable list of songs in English and French and generously interspersed with special material. She opens with "Je Chante," very apropos with English-French lyrics, does "Poor People of Paris" as is to be expected, and switches to current pop in "I Could Have Danced All Night." A medley of American songs sung in French is good as it has always been with her, and "Love Me or Leave Me" is given the torch treatment. "A New [illegible] from Paris" is a special bit which she embellishes with a [illegible] chic chapeaux and gloves. "Why?" done straight. [illegible] out it all she adds a [illegible] charm that comes across [illegible] and mike effectively. [illegible]

Savoy Hotel, London

London, May 24.

Mimi Benzell & Co. (David Carter, Hal Linden) with Leon Leonardi, Ian Stewart's Savoy Orphaens, Francisco Cavez Latin-American Rhythm; $5.75 minimum.

Apart from a slight reduction in the size of the supporting cast, Mimi Benzell's "A Night on the Town" package, which is in for a month at this ace hotel, is identical to the show she presented last fall at the Pierre Hotel, in New York. And if it does not make quite the same impact here, it will be due more to the peculiarities of the room than to any shortcomings in the performers.

Every facet of the presentation bears the hallmark of precision production. This is as much its weakness as its strength. Every gesture and every nuance has clearly been tried and treated, and the resultant show is robbed of any spontaneity. But there are many compensating factors, notably the slick professionalism which is very much to the fore throughout the 40-minute run.

By her rating as a high-ranking coloratura soprano, Miss Benzell adds class and tone to the cabaret scene, and although she shows she hasn't lost touch with the high notes since she forsook the Met Opera, the routine is styled to popular tastes, with an adroit blending of the classical and the popular. The contrast is well made by balancing operatic arias with a showtune selection and an entry of the calibre of "Where Are the Stage Door Johnnies?"

Miss Benzell, a petite brunet, takes the contrasting vocal styles easily in her stride, and is as much at home in coyly ogling the gents occupying the ringside tables with a "Kiss Me" song as when hitting the high notes of "La Boheme." And there's plenty of showmanship in her delivery and in her free-style movement around the rising stage.

In David Tihmar's production, the two male singer-dancers, David Carter and Hal Linden, are an integral part of the act, and carry a large part of the proceedings with commendable credit. Leon Leonardi, the star's personal musical director, takes over at the ivories to insure split-second precision showcasing by an Stewart's resident combo, augmented by an additional violin. Lively rhythm sessions are filled by the Francisco Cavez Latin-American group. Myro.

Blinstrub's, Boston

Boston, May 22.

Jackie Miles, Dee & Vince Abbot, Les Blue & Yvette, Martels & Mignon (3), Merkeys (3), Jan Wells, Michael Gaylord (10), Lou Weir; $2.50 minimum.

Jackie Miles, standup comic with the subtle way of weaving hilarious tales for yock effect that has brought him big following in this area, essays his first whack at the outsize nitery with this booking at Blinstrub's 1,700-seater. Opening night of his week's stint proves something of a test, with Mike Gaylord asking the big [illegible] to hold down [illegible] conversations.

Customers here have been fed a steady diet of belters and top [illegible] all season. Miles is first comic to get the top spot and he overcomes the vastness of the big room which has spelled sudden death to comics, working up slowly and saving his best stuff for last to nab a rousing ovation and three encores.

Opening part of Miles' act had to contend with femme party table gabbing, but others in the [illegible] hissed the offenders to quiet. Minor outbreaks as Miles [illegible] up were squelched by fans. Comedian has sock [illegible] of [illegible] Autry, long version of a [illegible] in an Army routine [illegible] laughs with Miles localizing to fit the area, and a [illegible] routine [illegible] things have changed around [illegible] since the box with the [illegible] frame [illegible] proves slick.

[illegible] of Crosby and [illegible] and routine [illegible] [illegible] Miles' [illegible] [illegible] to back [illegible]

[illegible] & Vince Abbot open the show with [illegible] well executed [illegible] number, winding up [illegible] Charleston [illegible] vintage [illegible] with [illegible] in white gown [illegible] segueing into [illegible] for [illegible] Les Blue & Yvette [illegible] unicycle, has blonde [illegible] working with clubs and styling while male partner emotes atop unicycle with juggling routines.

Martels & Mignon, two hefty lads and a femme, go over big with their tossing of the distaffer high into the air and all over the stage. Interwoven for aud gasps are stands in which one lad holds femme upside down by head in palm of one hand. Throw up and reverse of femme, who comes down to land in sitting position on outstretched arms of lads, is clincher.

Jan Wells, another Godfrey chirper, gets off the usual starry-eyed tribute to AG and gives forth with a high "No Arms Can Ever Hold You" and "I'm Gonna Live." Femme works mostly with low spots and has some nice patter. Aud gives her good response. Opening with "High on a Windy Hill," followed by "No, Not Much," she displays good showmanship. Encore of "Love Is Many Splendored Thing" gets nice mitting.

Merkeys, three lads in sailor costumes, have the aud on chair edges all the way with their zany contortions on the parallel bars. They strut around the stage in outlandish positions, swing from the bars like monkeys and wrap up with a triple swinging routine that brings heavy palm whacking.

Mike Gaylord cuts a slick show and backs up the acts in nice fashion, also furnishing music for the dance sets. Lou Weir is fine in the organ interludes. Guy.

Beverly Hills, Newport

Newport, Ky., May 25.

Georgia Gibbs, Maria Neglia, Lenny Colyer, Donn Arden Dancers (10), Dean Campbell, Gardner Benedict Orch (10), Jimmy Wilber Trio, Larry Vincent; $3 minimum, $4 Sat.

Ringsiders at kickoff by this two-frame lineup greeted Georgia Gibbs like a long-lost sister. It's the seventh visit by her nibs to northern Kentucky's ace nitery. She contributes a TNT half-hour song cycle to a pleasing 75-minute floorshow.

Lenny Colyer, a newcomer, in the opening spot tops 18 minutes of gags and imitations with a standout takeoff of Liberace.

Maria Neglia, another newcomer, in a fleeting quarter-hour registers solidly as a violinist and personality. Prettily filling in a white dress, the concert artist smacks over one number without use of a bow, and magnets attention throughout with roly-poly blue eyes.

Miss Gibbs warms 'em up quickly with "Changes Made" and "Autumn Leaves," adds enthusiasm with take-on ways while doing some of her other recorded hits and characterizations, and signs off with "Tweedley Dee."

Donn Arden Dancers increase favor on three new routines, beautifully dressed, well executed and spiced with sex appeal. Gals have tenor Dean Campbell doing okay as vocal supporter.

Gardner Benedict's crew, returned from a vacation via the Ted Lewis revue and band engagement of the past fortnight, supplies its usually swell showbacking. Koll.

Chaudiere, Ottawa

Ottawa, May 22.

Joe Maize & Chordsmen (4), Herbie Sells, Ronny Sheldon, Poster Burnell Lorelies (6), with Ronny Sheldon & Georgia-Fay Kennedy, Harry Pozy Orch (8); $1 admission.

Although they're into the Rope Room at the Chaudiere Club on the heels of the Coofers, the similar comedy of Joe Maize & Chordsmen doesn't clash. Their music and zany antics are different enough to let the customers forget the other group and give the Maize organization a great score. Maize uses Spanish and Hawaiian guitars, bass fiddle and accordion with slick toning and tight scripting at a high speed. Staging is [illegible] with a wealth of fresh comedy material and okay musical ability.

The bill also has Herbie Sells, one of [illegible] smartest impressionists to play this town. He does more than a score of apings, most of [illegible] in chant. [illegible] from table [illegible] [illegible] session [illegible] his bid [illegible] runs overlong, stretching the crew to more than 80 minutes [illegible] room accustomed to a 45-minute session heretofore only [illegible] the chorus [illegible] Ronny Sheldon [illegible] chores this week in a solo [illegible] which showcases his able piping, and not so able staging savvy. Held over are Poster Burnell Lovelies, [illegible] Harry Pozy plays for show and dancing. Gorm.

Le Cupidon, N. Y.

Jackie Heller, Sheila Reynolds, Dave Rogers Trio, Luis Ortiz Trio; $5 minimum.

Le Cupidon has an in-between show that's as effective entertainment as many of the more highpowered name displays. A talent delegation headed by Jackie Heller and Sheila Reynolds provides a tuneful divertissement that keeps the customers interested.

Heller is one of the youngish vets on the song circuit. The smallish tenor has the showmanship of the era of the Jolson genre rigged to modern songs. Even the oldies that he brings in have the zip of the oldtime songsellers tailored with modern arrangements that hit throughout his turn. He's a strong starter with "Almost Like Being in Love" and goes through "September Song," a medley from "Can Can," "Danced All Night" and hits his peak with "Birth of the Blues." Heller gets a strong measure of applause.

Miss Reynolds, a returnee to this cafe, has effectively tailored her turn to intimery requirements. She has learned to take the measure of a room so that she can sing with her full voice or step down to the confidential tones. Result is a turn that hits it off excellently. Miss Reynolds has a wide song variety that embraces "Street Where You Live," "Roofs of Paris" and her big ones, "I Believe" and "Granada." Wide diversification of her tune types brings ample returns.

The backing is by Dave Rogers Trio, and relief is by Luis Ortiz Trio, who can also provide enough terp incentive to fill the floor. A comparatively new fixture in this room is Joe Hoffman, a vet maitre d' who has seen service in many of the town's top spots. Jose.

Amato's, Portland, Ore.

Portland, Ore., May 22.

Oscar Cartier, George Wong Troupe (6), Ben Yos.'s Colleens (4), Herman Jobelman Orch (6); no minimum, $1.50 cover.

New fare at this plush nitery is lacking in marquee value but definitely not in entertainment. Opening nighters thoroughly enjoying the international variety show.

Oscar Cartier, French comic, is more than pleasing in the deuce. Handsome guy talks with an accent that lists as an asset to the stint. Cartier has an individual styling that is easy, soft, yet dry and subtle. His material is good and he works hard all the way. Situation stuff is best.

Cartier is a good comic; his delivery is deceiving at first, but grows on the crowd.

The Ben Yost Colleens get things under way with some nifty display of pace and discipline along with top chirping. Three brunets and one redhead fill the gorgeous gowns nicely. Girls move about handily and make for good listening and watching.

Doris Hartnagel knocks ringsiders for a loop with her trained operatic voice. Betty Joyce, Julie Matildote and Dobie Cole also have neat pipes. Miss Dobie handles the announcing and cute stuff, topdrawer. Best bets are "Dressing Room" bit of opera vs. jazz. Gals earned solid returns throughout.

The George Wong Troupe click big in closing slot with sensational contortion, acro and balancing. Four guys and two cute gals execute some of the most difficult and eye-grabbing tricks ever seen in these parts. Outfit works in solos, duos, trios, quartets and fivers. Layout is fast, well staged, and strictly bigtime. Troupe begs off with still plenty of palm whacking filling the hall. Stubholders like the new 50-minute show.

Herman Jobelman and his house crew play their usually top show and for dance sets. Fece.

Steuben's, Boston

Boston, May 22.

Dr. Giovanni, Don Dennis, Johnny Conrad Dancers (4), Tony Bruno Orch (5), Harry Fink Trio; $2.50 minimum.

Dr. Giovanni lives up to his billing as "world's greatest [illegible] [illegible] stooges [illegible] from the aud, wallets, watches and suspenders fly all over the lot. Ending a holdover two-weeker, which had Arnold Borak putting up the ropes in Joe [illegible] Max Schneider's pleasant theatrical nitery, Dr. Giovanni displays boff showmanship in handling his subjects, and amazes with his dexterity.

Using effective patter in a bantering vein, he whips watches off wrists and wallets from inside pockets in lightning sweeps of his [illegible], unbeknownst to [illegible] but in full view of the aud which is kept in hysterics.

Johnny Conrad Dancers, caught earlier this season at Blinstrub's, do three sets of impressionistic barefoot numbers, scoring heavily with jungle voodoo terping, in which Conrad leaps high over the heads of his three slick femmes and tosses them about with mad abandon.

Don Dennis, singing emcee, scores with new offerings, a medley of songs from "My Fair Lady." Wins big palms with "I Could Have Danced All Night"; takes "I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face" for a nice ride to the high notes and signs off with "On the Street Where You Live" for solid mitt. New incoming two-week show is repeat with Herb & Betty Warner, duet, and the Rudenkos, jugglers. Guy.

Haus Carow, Berlin

Berlin, May 22.

Ethel Reschke, Ursula Mauri, Erich Everty, Fredy Sieg, Maecki Trio, Jonny Gueldner, Horst Jung Orch (6); no cover or minimum.

Erich Carow's "Haus am See" (House at the Lake, named after the Wannsee Lake on which it is situated) commands attention for two special reasons: first, it's now celebrating its first anni; secondly, it's W-Berlin's only restaurant with a cabaret show which is doing sans politics. (This in contrast to the Porcupines whose forte is political programs.)

Vet Berlin cabaret pioneer Carow has done a brilliant job in bringing alive a cabaret which, although located some 15 miles from the centre of Berlin, draws large audiences. Many obviously come for sentimental reasons as it is a piece of Old-Berlin. Carow knows his customers. The place has "stimmung" and atmosphere (with community singing, swaying, etc.) and the eye-arresting scenery behind the large glass windows, enhances this spot to make perfect dining, drinking and late evening dancing.

Carow, now 64, looks back on a long career. He started out as a comedian during WW 1. In 1923, he established his "Carow's Lachbuehne" (Laughing Stage) which throughout the years—until 1943 when it was bombed out—maintained its position and reputation as one of Berlin's leading cabarets. (The written dedications by Chaplin, Harold Lloyd, Asta Nielsen, etc. in the lobby are Carow's most treasured tokens). Last May, he inaugurated this newly built house, investing some about $80,000 in the venture. Ultra-modern 600-seater stands in quite a contrast to the program and the mood here. It's mainly a spot for elderly people who have a soft spot for old Berlin. It has no hot music, no jive dancing, no nudity. Carow follows the old-Berlin style, with music mainly consisting of the old melodies by Lincke and Kollo and he has the right idea in doing so. Nevertheless it's also a good place for overseas and W-Germany tourist who undoubtedly will enjoy the difference. No admission, incidentally, but upped prices on beverages and menus.

Jonny Gueldner, vet local emcee, introduces Ursula Mauri, local radio and stage thrush who contributes two well-applauded songs. Erich Everty okay ventriloquist; Fredy Sieg with old-Berlin songs. Sieg, now 78, has been with Carow for 25 years without contract. Ethel Reschke, best known of the acts, contributes four ballads, which she sells in appealing style. Maecki Trio, parody group, has present-day character, ranging from the extremely popular free-style wrestling to the Monaco wedding. Carow himself handles the overall direction. Hans.

Club Crescendo, Houston

Houston, May 23.

Raul & Eva Reyes, Jose Ortiz Orch (6).

Terping, warbling and comedy of Raul & Eva Reyes in Latino vein are made to order for this house, which favors rhumbas, sambas, et al. when the show is not on. Act gets off quickly with gal going through the audience and [illegible] headed men [illegible] "[illegible]amen" antics that establish rapport.

From there on, 30-minute act serves up a Latin-American smorgasbord that ranges from comic tango to audience participation Calypso rendition of "All That Glitters Is Not Gold." Veteran team is making a repeat performance in the room and opening night audience was warm and quick to palm.

Closing number, serious terp job to "Breeze and I," was a nice change of pace from the antics of the rest of the show. Lasting about three minutes, it evoked substained palms. Latin tempos are well supplied by Jose Ortiz unit. Fors.

Mardi Gras, Reno

Reno, May 25.

Kirby Stone Four, Don Haven Hi-Fis (5), Eddie Gomez Quintet with Nilda Terrace.

This is a new entertainment concept, at least around here, and it remains to be seen how it will go. Based on the success of lounge entertainment in the other spots, the idea seems good. The Golden has remodeled its theatre-restaurant into a kind of theatre-lounge, but without the usual bar which surrounds the stage. Entertainment is continuous from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. with the three units trading off—the Gomez Quintet goes from 6 to midnight, Kirby Stone Four from 9 to 3, and the Haven Hi-Fis, midnight to 6 in the morn. Customers can eat or drink anytime during the 12 hours of continuous show.

Talent menu is nicely balanced. Kirby Stone is the act in the arrangement and is well fitted for the type of operation this is going to be. The brand of humor seems to be easily digested by a roomful or a few tables.

Made up of nonsensical bits scattered through their musical arrangements, plus some clever routines which they juggle through the evening, the foursome will have no trouble doing its six hours (or really three with a half-hour off every hour). Group is greatly supported by Larry Foster, a fine impressionist and singer. Foster hasn't the usual bag of impressions either, and after he gets through singing ala Eckstine or Cole, he proves successful as a voice in his own right.

Eddie Hall is the brat in the group, slugged "Li'l Poison." Michael Gardner is the opposite, straight out of a seance, and Kirby Stone tries to keep organization in all this while handling the comedy routines. Every kind of laugh is available among the quartet.

Don Haven's Hi-Fis blast off at midnight, well-timed and sure to keep things moving through the late hours. Essentially rock 'n' roll, the quintet makes plenty of noise. Haven handles a lot of vocals with a fitting fog voice, and each of the men gets a chance to romp through a solo on occasion—drummer, sax, trumpet and guitar, with Haven on bass.

The evening starts quietly and modestly with the Eddie Gomez Quintet. Gomez keeps a Latin pace but flies off on a blues theme once in a while as in "Birth of the Blues." On these he flails to an effective climax in a very American way except for his accent. Sex walks on the scene in the shape of Nilda Terrace, who sings as she slings in a tight gown. She puts more of the idea across with movement than with any lyrical messages.

This new show policy should fit in well with the round-the-clock summer trade and there's no reason why it cant be taken in as a show rounders' rendezvous or an all-evening hangout. It's future is being watched with interest. It could be a boon to lounge entertainment, which is already enjoying unprecedented success. Mark.

Ritz Carlton, Montreal

Montreal, May 25.

Josephine Premice (with Chino Pozo), Johnny Gallant, Joe Settano Trio; $1.50-$2 cover.

Firmly established as one of the regulars in the Ritz Cafe, Josephine Premice winds up the season in this boite. If the SRO biz continues as evidenced opening night, this attractive room should finish with the best returns since its inception several years ago.

Backed by the skin beats of Chino Pozo, the piano of Johnny Gallant, and the bass player from the Settano Trio, Miss Premice provides a lively 35-minute session that opens with "Adam and Evil Blues" and closes with "Bess Me" by Montrealer Roy Welvin. Despite fact she tries to intro several new numbers [illegible] the patrons almost [illegible] for such old faves as "Fancy Living," "Guatemala" and others which she has been doing for many seasons but which never seem to weary the customers. In between obligations, attractive chanteuse manages to inject such clicks as "This Is Love, Mr. Brown?," "Lush Life" and "Charge It." The latter has just enough innuendo without going blue to please everyone.

As with every appearance Miss Premice has made in Montreal since she first appeared as an interp hoofer, there has been obvious improvement showwise and present stint is no exception. Supporting roles in a musical and a straight play in past year have done much to build her assurance and manner. Newt.

enjoy the shows and for me who lost money."

If all 70 businessmen had supported the theatre regularly, instead of only eight, Orke wouldn't have had to close the theatre, he asserted.

"Because a theatre is essential to a community it is necessary that many share in the responsibility of maintaining it as a business stimulator and for the young people," declared Orke. "Because we have been unable to arouse that necessary extra interest we cannot afford to stay open any longer."

In some other of the territory's communities, however, businessmen continue to come to exhibitors' aid so that the towns will not lose their only theatres. Morgan, Minn., plan to help the theatreowner with occasional sponsored shows and the sale of annual tickets on an installment basis and will consider other ways to stimula'e patronage.

At Iroquois, S. D., the commercial club will sponsor the theatre under a new ownership by rallying patronage for it. Hope, N. D., merchants also have promised to cooperate to try to keep the town's one theatre from operating in the red.

Newport Jazz Festival to American Jazz Festival. This year marks the third staging of the event which drew some 30,000 last year.

George Wein, who operates the Boston jazz nitery, Storyville, and who lectures on jazz at Boston U., said 150 of "the biggest names in jazz" will appear at the Newport finals this year. Already inked are Louis Armstrong, Count Basie orch, Dizzy Gillespie, Dave Brubeck orch, Sarah Vaughan, Duke Ellington orch. Art Tatum, Ella Fitzgerald, Miles Davis, Anita O'Day, Gerry Mulligan, Eddie Condon, Chico Hamilton, Teddy Wilson, Roy Eldridge, Ben Webster, Jutta Hipp, Friedrich Gulda, Toshiko Akiyoshi. George Shearing cancelled out because of other commitments, Wein said, and Miss Fitzgerald was added.

Ducats for the jazz bash in July have been pegged at $3-$4-$5 for each of the three evening concerts. Free afternoon forums will be held. Belcourt mansion will not be used this year for forums and conferences as it was last year. All events will be outdoors in Freebody Park.

The festival is getting treatment in three July slicks, by Cleveland Amory in Holiday, by Mrs. Louis Lorillard and Richard Gamin in Collier's and in Playboy by Wein.

While directors of the festival had first looked to other communities of the approximate size of Newport after decision to quit the R. I. town, big city offers have been coming in and the thinking of the directors now is towards the possibility of staging the jazz bash in a metropolis.

Regarding the Boston proposal, only question being asked by the directors seems to be: "Is Boston ready for it yet?" It was expected that some lively pros and cons on feasibility of having a jazz bash of this size and scope would be forthcoming as soon as Boston newspapers got wind of the Chamber of Commerce's interest in bringing the festival to the Hub.

Boston's jazz set is expected to start an allout movement to push toward bringing the festival home beginning this week. Wein also revealed that the Boston Arts Festival this year, June 16-23, has made arrangements to feature a "jazz night."

pleted "supervisory streamlining" in the field aimed at effecting "market intensification."

At Metro, a general economic policy has been in effect for several months. It does not involve, for the most part, layoffs, but when certain employees leave the company via resignations, death, or retirement, no replacements are made.

The industry underwent a similar experience following the postwar boom. Staffs were trimmed considerably. However, with the advent of widescreen and CinemaScope, the boxoffice flourished again and the staffs were rebuilt to peak levels.

For several years now, despite the booming b.o., the major companies have been considering ways and means of streamlining, especially since the decrease in the number of pictures released annually does not require the large staffs carried on the payroll. With the industry undergoing an almost revolutionary method in operation, there are many who feel that the time for streamlining is now at hand.

"In the past year the Russians have conducted brief negotiations with Americans on two other film productions in the Soviet Union. These were in the nature of documentary films. In each case, the Russians insisted on provisions which would have granted them the final right of editing the film. Neither film project reached fruition because of this Soviet demand. . . .

"In principle, Todd and the Russians agreed to joint-production of five feature films in the Todd-AO system over the next five years. The first, if final agreement to go ahead is reached, would be a non-controversial 'Evening of Soviet Entertainment' [illegible] vaudeville show on film."

Ak-Sar-Ben Show
(AK-SAR-BEN, OMAHA)

Omaha, May. 22.

Wayne King Orch (14), Crew Cuts (4), Bobby Monahan, Vagabounders, Doris Stockton.

Second Ak-Sar-Ben (Omaha civic org) revue of season for members (of which there are 23,000) points up a show biz problem of these days: How far should a recording group go in attempting to bolster its disk sales? The example pops up in this instance because the Crew Cuts, obviously hoping to plug as many of their releases as possible, stayed on for 15 numbers and a tiring 45 minutes. That's okay and appropriate in ballrooms, where boys have been doing one-night stands in those sectors and the aud is teenage style. But Ak members are the society of this part of country, more of the 40-50ish and aren't about to clap hands and sing along, as the Crew Cuts suggested.

Crew Cuts, boasting a fine soloist in Johnny Perkins, are a hot item and should do well in vaude and nitery dates—if they arrange their act to fit. However, their comedy is strictly so-so.

On the other hand, Wayne King and his orch hit the spot so far as Ak is concerned. Clever violin introes and clarinet melodies drew big mitts. Maestro also is an affable emcee, apparently enjoying the acts as much as the outfronters.

Third-billed Bobby Monahan failed to register in his comic stint, undoubtedly because much of his material had been heard here before. Squat lad has routine impreshes of Vaughn Monroe, Walter Winchell, Eckstine and Peter Lorre. Closing bit of Laughton's "Hunchback of Notre Dame" seemed entirely out of place for a laugh act.

Doris Stockton sold well as a marimba expert and the Vagabounders, trampoline, are under New Acts. King trotted out his vocalist, Barbara Beck, for three excellent numbers. Trump.

Sixth. Only a very few top names get those lush fees.

Row Over Identical Repudiations; Equity Election Climax This Week

With Actors Equity due to vote Friday (1) in its liveliest election in years, a violent row broke out last week over repudiated endorsements of the independent ticket and charges that the nominating committee that picked the regular slate had been controlled by a clique.

A special meeting of the council, called only the day before on petition of members supporting the regular ticket, was held last Friday (25). It was a stormy session, in which the vote was 16-15 in favor of issuing to the membership a statement by 60 members repudiating their published endorsement of the indie slate.

The statement by the 60 explained that they had not intended to "endorse" the indies, but had merely signed a nominating petition for the second slate because they "believe there should be a choice of candidates." In issuing the statement, the council noted that "supporters of the independent ticket offered for publication the above names in good faith, under the assumption that all those who signed the independent nominating petitions supported the entire ticket and, by signing, automatically authorized the use of their names."

A second statement, issued by the indie supporters, referred to the repudiation by the 60 as the "neatest trick of the week." The group's statement said in part, "Last week the Equity magazine carried the names of over 240 members who had nominated the independent ticket. While the magazine was still being delivered in the mails, strange as it may seem, several members whose names appeared decided that they really didn't mean to endorse the nominees at all. Some of them even re-

Show Tents Grow Up; Lloyds Will Insure 'Em; $30,250 'Typical' Policy

Tent theatres have apparently made the big time. Lloyds of London has agreed to underwrite an insurance policy specifically designed for canvastop coverage.

Lloyds came into the picture after several tepee producers complained that existing American policies provided inadequate coverage. Accountants Edward O. Lutz and Robert M. Carr, executive directors of the Musical Arena Theatre Assn., agreed to allow the New York insurance brokerage firm of Boyar & Oring to work out a policy for submission to Lloyds. The specifications set down by the brokerage outfit were accepted by the British company.

The policy is based on $60,250 coverage for a "typical" tent operation, [illegible] premium of [illegible] months' coverage and $2[illegible] for four months' coverage. The insurance for various reasons, including windstorm, cyclone and tornado, and the declaration of a state of emergency prohibiting the public from using roads because of destruction caused by certain specific perils.

To Open Show Tent In Montreal This Summer

A 600-seat tent theatre is planned for Montreal this summer. It'll be operated by Joy Thomson, owner of the Montreal Playhouse, Montreal. James Winslow, former managing director of the Myrtle Beach (S. C.) Playhouse, will be director, and the staff will also include Bruce Raymond as general business manager and J. R. Masters as publicist.

The tent will operate on a star policy. It'll be constructed so as to permit future expansion to 1,000 seats. The Stage & Arena Guild of America will be New York rep for the operation.

Grips' Verse Mash Notes To Jan (Anna) Clayton

The backstage crew at the N. Y. City Center has a pen pal in Jan Clayton. The correspondence is entirely in original poetry.

The grips send a weekly account of behind-the-scenes events at the theatre and the actress-singer responds with what's new in the San Fernando Valley. Miss Clayton, who recently played the femme lead, Anna Leonowens, in a City Center revival of "King and I," is regularly starred on the "Lassie" television series, and does occasional films.

The stagehands admit Miss Clayton is the biggest crush of anyone who's starred at the City Center. But they're not releasing any of the verses for publication.

St. Louis, May 29.

"Pajama Game," $116,500, three weeks.

Coconut Grove, Miami, Ends Big Year [illegible]

Miami's [illegible] theatre, the Coconut Grove Playhouse, shutters this week after a 26 week's operation with a guest name policy. The 300-seater will be enlarged this summer, major reconstruction expansion of the stage to accommodate musical comedy as well as straight plays. Also a cabaret may be added to the cocktail lounge and restaurant.

The initial season saw the original cast of the controversial "Waiting For Godot," which was a flop during its two-week run, but was recast and reshaped to become a current Broadway entry. The Playhouse was in-the-black with Tallulah Bankhead in "Streetcar Named Desire" for three capacity weeks. Other clicks were Beatrice Lillie, Linda Darnell in "Tea and Sympathy," Billie Burke in "Solid Gold Cadillac," Judith Anderson in "Black Chiffon" and Victor Borge with his solo show.

Next season's plans call for more guest stars, plus possible tryouts of a musical and new plays. George Engle is owner-operator of the spot.

SHOWS & TALENT BIG IN '55-'56

By HOBE MORRISON

By general consent, this has been the best Broadway season in many years. By the standard of critical quality, popular approval or boxoffice return, the statement applies.

It's been a season of fine plays, distinguished performances, tasteful and skillful production—and commensurate critical, popular and financial success. There have been meritorious contributions by newcomers, in authorship, performance, staging and management, and continuing accomplishment by established names.

The ratio of hits and flops has been relatively good (see separate listing). The boxoffice has been rigorous, not only on Broadway but also on the road (see separate story for details). In the significant category of number of playing weeks, the situation has been favorable.

There has been a total of approximately $4,734,000 invested in Broadway productions during the season, plus about $1,400,000 dropped on tryout flops. That excludes City Center, Comedie Francaise, D'Oyly Carte and such "specials." Thus far, around $2,416,000 has been earned back, including not only the amount recouped on failures and not-yet-classifiable productions, but in partial returns on the hits. In several instances, the prospective profit should go a long way toward eliminating the overall deficit.

The season has been notable for the number of film deals, especially in a flurry of pre-production setups. Among the shows thus involved were "Inkontul of Roses," "No Time for Sergeants," "Desk Set," "Chalk Garden," "Handful of Rain," "The Lark" "Great Sebastians" (with a prior pre-production

Chi's Season Up; $3,892,800 Gross

Chicago, May 29.

The just-ending local legit season registered a small gain in total gross over the 1954-55 semester, even though there were 10 weeks less of playing time at the Loop's six theatres.

The 17 productions that berthed in Chicago during the closing June 1 to May 31 span accounted for a total of 140 playing weeks and a gross of $3,892,800. There were exactly the same number of arrivals in the 1954-55 cycle, representing an aggregate of 150 weeks for a gross of $3,569,495.

Record High Season Legit Gross; $58,000,000 Total for B'way, Road

By JESSE GROSS

Business on Broadway and the road rocketed to over $58,000,000 total gross for the 1955-56 legit season. It was a record cumulative take for the nine semesters that VARIETY has been tabulating its b.o. reports.

The total represents a jump of $4,996,800 over the previous season's $53,209,200 high Broadway registered the biggest increase, soaring $3,265,300 to a peak $35,353,100. Out-of-town receipts climbed $1,731,500 to place third in the VARIETY seasonal scoreboard with a $22,853,500 tally. That brought the combined New York-hinterland 52-week total as of last Saturday (26) to $58,200,600.

Broadway was notable in the unusually large number of shows that drew legitgoer support for moderate runs. That's reflected in the 1,239 playing weeks racked up by 60 new entries and 24 holdovers from previous seasons. In comparison, the 1954-55 tally on playing weeks was 1,139 for 63 new offerings and 20 holdovers.

The '55-'56 Broadway gross was hyped by such such hefty straight play grossers as "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," "Diary of Anne Frank," "Middle of the Night" and "No Time for Sergeants." Ditto for such musicals as "Damn Yankees," "My Fair Lady," "Most Happy Fella" and "Mr. Wonderful." The

$103,300 Damage Suit Vs. Belafonte-Kennedy

Chicago, May 29.

Singer Harry Belafonte and producer Jay Richard Kennedy are defendants in a $103,300 breach of contract suit filed in Superior Court here last week by John Antonello, Kansas City theatrical owner and backer.

The action claims the defendants failed to fulfill a contract to bring in their "Sing, Man, Sing" revue to the Municipal Auditorium, Kansas City, May 7. He asked $100,000 for damages to his rep as a promoter and $3,300 as the amount he would have netted from the one-nighter.

Package Upbeat On Silo Circuit

The strawhat circuit is evolving into a touring route for summer productions. That's reflected in the increasing number of packages slated for the silo trail this season.

Augmenting the already hefty lineup of New York-assembled shows, in some instances including two editions of the same entry, are several new tourers. Most of these are being sent out by personal manager Hillard Elkins, who's branched out as a frontrunner in the dispatching of barn presentations. Elkins has lined up several name performers for his latest ventures.

He's set Mae West for "Come on Up, Ring Twice" Chico Marx for "Fifth Season," Red Buttons for "Tender Trap" and Robert Q. Lewis for "What's the Rush," new revue current at the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Playhouse. Elkins manages Lee Adams, Mike Stewart and Charles Strouse, the writers of "Rush." Appearing with Lewis in the show will be Judy Johnson and Don Liberto, who appear with him on his tv program.

Miss West previously played the summer circuit in 1952 in "Come on Up," which Elkins agented. The manager is also teaming with Oscar Olesen to send out two packages of "Bus Stop." Olesen was company manager on the Broadway production of the William Inge play. A package of "Desperate Hours," starring Edith Atwater, Albert Dekker and Richard Carlisle, is being put together by the Stage and Arena Guild of America.

Dorothy Chernuck and Omar K. Leeman, producers of the Corning (N. Y.) Glass Theatre are sending out folksinger Richard Dyer-Bennet, The Eva Jessye Choir and the Johnnie Eaton and his Princetonians jazz combo in a package tagged "Here's Music."

Mass. Senate Approves Shubert Theatre Probe; Comm. to Assign Funds

Boston, May 29.

The Massachusetts Senate approved last week a resolution calling for a legislative investigation of the Shubert Theatrical enterprises in Boston, and sent it to the Ways & Means Committee to determine how much should be allowed to conduct the probe.

A move to have the scope of the inquiry widened to cover all the Shubert interests and activities in Boston is being sought by Sen. Daniel Rudstein, of Dorchester, sponsor of the measure. The legislator said that the probe, which would be authorized under the terms of his resolution, would go into a number of matters not ordinarily investigated by a U. S. Congressional committee. "A Congressional investigation of an alleged violation of the freedom of the press by the Shubert interests is being held in abeyance until J. J. Shubert returns from Europe.)

"It is my intention to go far beyond the question of whether the Shuberts trespassed upon the freedom of the press and to determine whether new laws should be enacted to correct conditions which are not in the public interest," Rudstein declared.

The bill was filed by the State Senator as the result of a controversy which developed when Elliot Norton, Boston Post drama critic, was dropped from the Shubert press list following a double pan of "Wonder Heart." The sidelights was subsequently reinstated after a series of page one articles in the Post.

Rudstein said he expected the probe will be under way before the close of the present legislative session.

Off-Broadway Shows

The Littlest Revue

Phoenix Theatre (T Edward Hambleton & Norris Houghton), by arrangement with Ben Bagley, presents two-act revue (29 scenes) conceived, cast and assembled by Ben Bagley. Features Beverley Bozeman, Joel Grey, Tammy Grimes, Dorothy Jarnac, George Marcy, Tommy Morton, Charlotte Rae, Larry Storch. Songs mostly by Ogden Nash and Vernon Duke plus John Latouche, Kenward Elmslie, Sol Berkowitz, Sheldon Harnick, Lee Adams, Charles Strouse, John Strauss, Sidney Shaw, Edward Sauter, Sammy Cahn & Michael Brown; sketches by Nat Hiken & Billy Friedberg; Eudora Welty, Don Meyer, Mike Stewart, George Baxt, Bud McCreery, Allan Manings & Bob Van Scoyk. Directed by Paul Lammers; dances, Charles Weidman; settings, Klaus Holm; costumes, Alvin Colt; musical director, Will Irvin; orchestrations, John Strauss. Opened May 22, '56; $3.45 top.

"The Littlest Revue" just misses being really a big show. Result is a big "E" for effort and an "N" for "nervous hit." It has many bright things, mostly clever people but somehow doesn't have the socko b.o. impact necessary to consummate producer Ben Bagley's ambitions to "bring this one uptown." Even in its present off-Broadway environs it will enjoy mixed audience and boxoffice reactions.

For some reason a revue appears to be one of the most hazardous latterday legit undetakings. In the era of the Cohan revues and the sundry "Passing Shows" (under the Shuberts' aegis) the standards weren't as high as when Dwight Deere Wiman and Tom Weatherly started ushering in the "Little Shows." These were an extension of what two bright young men off a Morningside Heights campus, Lorenz Hart and Richard Rodgers, essayed with their first and second "Garrick Gaieties."

Thereafter it became an almost loaded Broadway challenge to essay a revue. Even with Beatrice Lillie and Jack Haley "Inside USA" was not on solid paydirt ground.

So the safest formula for offbeat personalities and material, with talent compensating for pretention, seems to be an off-Broadway venture such as "The Littlest Revue."

All the cast names perform with skill and to offtimes effective results but, by and large, their talents are on a par with their material. It is there that the artisans of the "Little Shows" and the "Garrick Gaieties" had the advantage.

Charlotte Rae is a funny gal, as she has proved in the saloons. Joel Grey who, incidentally, was a cute-looking youngster with his old schnoz (he appears to have bobbed it a bit) is a limbre lad in everything he does. Larry Storch is another vet of the bistros and the image orthicons, as is Dorothy Jarnac. In truth most of the cast seem as flexible for Le Ruban Bleu and the Blue Angel, for Las Vegas and the Copa, and for the vaudfilms and the vaudeos, as in this 2d Ave. legit stand.

Given a takeoff opportunity on the Helen Traubels-gone-Rancho Vegas, Miss Rae makes more of that than when her material is not as potent. Ever the sprite of terpsichore, the physically fluid Dorothy Jarnac makes much of "Opus 9"—a sort of Dali dance routine.

The sketches and numbers are topical but more often cleverer in theme than in execution. The gamut runs from the 3d Ave. "el" to installment aviation tourism; from "The 2d Ave. and 12th St. Rag" to "Give My Regards to Moll St.," from a satire on Dr. Norman Vincent Peale to "the man in the gray flannel space suit"; from a ribald Elizabethan concept (one of the better Duke-Latouche numbers) to UN protocol as regards an amatory princeling in the East 43d St. environs; from Eudora Welty's excellent "Bye-Bye Brevoort" to a N.Y. Times want ad blackout. Then too there are dances from calypso to some forthright and imaginative hoofology.

"The Littlest Revue" holds some bright things but unfortunately not enough of them. Abel.

A Doll's House

Greenwich Mews Theatre revival of drama in three acts by Henrik Ibsen. Adapted and staged by Miriam Goldina; setting, Robert Motley; costumes, Ann Howard; lighting, Adrian Hall. At Greenwich Mews, N. Y., May 26, '56. Admission by contribution.

Cast: Leon Van Dike, Maurine Holbert, Charlotte Acheson, Howard Wierum, Miriam Craig, Michael Lewin, James B. McMahon.

Some day an adventuresome writer will usher in a new era in the drama with a play in which a husband will abandon his wife, children and sanctified hearth. Until such time, Henrik Ibsen's "A Doll's House," in which Nora slams the door behind her with a resounding thud, will continue to be the prime example of justified domestic breakup. Since it has been unreasonable to find Ibsen's leaving thinking pretty old hat, it's refreshing that the Greenwich Mews revival escapes being the standard rehash of a "classic."

Miriam Goldina's adaptation can be credited with a good deal of the script's freshness, being relaxedly unhackneyed and, for theatre purposes, a considerable improvement over William Archer's scholarly translation. Miss Goldina's staging, too, has vivacity, although occasionally some of the lesser players succumb to a brooding introspection that fights the generally good tempo.

Luckily, the two principals are competent and unstuffy. As that early emancipated woman, Nora (the time is 1879), Maurine Holbert has the birdlike qualities required, as well as good perception of the sheltered wife's and mother's deeper resources. The actress transposes carefully and movingly from the twinkle-toed, almost scatterbrained, wife of the early scenes to the mature woman able to forsake her home for great principle.

Usually the smug husband is too ridiculously fatuous by present

Behave Beastly to Critics — Echo To Shubert Boston Fuss

At the recent Congressional committee hearing in Washington on the subject of alleged attempts by the Shuberts to control critical comment on shows playing their theatres, one of the principal witnesses was Elliot Norton, Boston Post critic whose removal from the Shubert press list in Boston touched off the entire investigation.

The aisle-sitter told committee members that immediately after the Shubert action against him, he had received a telephone call from a representative of the Playwrights Co., whose production of "Ponder Heart" he had panned, thereby igniting J. J. Shubert, who had long been steaming over what he considered Norton's severe notices.

The call was to assure Norton that the Playwrights had had nothing to do with, or even been informed in advance of the Shubert retaliation. "After all," the caller explained, "we're pros."

Season Total Gross

D'Oyly Carte and Comedie Francaise imports and the City Center presentations of "Streetcar Named Desire," "King and I" and Marcel Marceau were other top coin-getters. The Broadway total, incidentally, also takes in the Phoenix Theatre productions.

Principal road money-makers were the two touring companies of "Teahouse of the August Moon," plus the post-Broadway tour of the N. Y. production. Also the post-Broadway hikes of "Plain and Fancy," "Bad Seed" and "Silk Stockings." The second companies of "Pajama Game" and "Damn Yankees" also piled up hefty ticket sales, while the recent Los Angeles production of "Rosalinda" nabbed quick returns. The pre-Broadway treks of "Wonderful," "Lady" and "Fella" were other top grossers.

Hinterland houses showcased 103 productions during the '55-'56 season for a total of 864 playing weeks. The tally on road shows the previous semester was 94 for a total of 879 playing weeks. The '55-'56 rundown included 11 holdovers from the previous season, 43 pre-Broadway tryouts, 24 touring productions (including post-Broadway hikes), eight tryout flops and 17 Coast productions.

Of the road lineup, eight of the touring entries (including two from the previous season) are still running, as are three of the Coast entries. Two other shows are on pre-Broadway hikes. The Broadway lineup includes six holdovers from previous seasons and 19 of the '55-'56 entries.

The comparative gross totals, with playing weeks in parenthesis, for Broadway for the last nine seasons have been as follows:

'47-'48	$28,826,500	(1,325)
'48-'49	$28,840,700	(1,231)
'49-'50	$28,614,500	(1,156)

Notable personal clicks have been registered in the author and composer field by Christopher Fry-Jean Giraudoux, Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett-Anne Frank, Ira Levin-Mac Hyman, Enid Bagnold, Michael V. Gazzo, Lillian Hellman-Jean Anouilh, Carolyn Green, Paddy Chayefsky, and Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe.

In the actor and singer field, outstanding hits (figuring critical and popular reaction) have been made by Helen Hayes, Michael Redgrave, Marcel Marceau, Joseph Schildkraut, Susan Strasberg, Joyce Grenfell, Andy Griffith, Shirley Booth, Siobhan McKenna, Shelley Winters, Julie Harris, Margaret Sullavan, Robert Preston, Ruth Gordon, Eileen Herlie, Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, Nancy Walker, Anthony Quayle, Edward G. Robinson, David Wayne, Rex Harrison, Julie Andrews, Earle Hyman, Bert Lahr, Robert Weede and Jan Clayton.

Top directorial stints have been turned in by Harold Clurman, Garson Kanin, Tyrone Guthrie and Moss Hart. Standout producers, taking into account not merely boxoffice success, but creative judgment, taste and conviction, have been Kermit Bloomgarden (also in partnership with Lynn Loesser), Herman Levin, Robert L. Joseph, Maurice Evans (in partnership with Emmett Rogers), Irene M. Selznick, Jay Julien, and David Merrick (in partnership with the Theatre Guild).

Despite the inevitable tendency toward yes-and-no straddles in some cases, the critics generally have risen to the challenge of an unusual season. As usual, Brooks Atkinson, of the Times, and Walter F. Kerr, of the Herald Tribune, have set the standard in readability, style, clarity, perception and discrimination.

Barbara Ashley will sing the role of Lady Thiang in "King and I" at the Pitt Civic Light Opera the week of July 2, then Lalume in "Kismet" the week of July 16.

Complainants Severely Hit, Must Pay Full Fees for Flimsy Suit

The copyright infringement suit over "No Time For Sergeants" was tossed out of court last week, with the plaintiffs liable for costs and attorney fees. Judge William B. Herlands granted a defense motion for dismissal with the consent of the plaintiffs. The case was in N. Y. Federal Court.

Named as defendants were producers Maurice Evans and Emmett Rodgers, playwright Ira Levin, original novelist Mac Hyman and the publisher of the book, Random House. Plaintiffs were Sherwin S. Cloth, author of a magazine which "Sergeants" was claimed to have been infringed, and Lev Gleason Publications, publisher of a mag called Reader's Scope.

In moving for dismissal of the suit, the defendants' attorney, Thomas A. Shaw, of Breed, Abbott & Morgan, argued, "This action bears all the earmarks of an utterly unmeritorious and reckless action brought for the purpose of harassing the defendants." The costs in the case amount to something over $200, and a total of about $7,500 in fees for the various defendants' attorneys.

The defense brief asking summary dismissal of the suit noted that the latrine joke which was the sole basis for the infringement claim is in the public domain, having been not only in common circulation in the Army during World War II, but having appeared in print in a training camp publication and been used onstage in an Army show. The brief also pointed out that Cloth's mag sketch did not appear in the issue of Reader's Scope as alleged.

In addition, it was brought out, plaintiff Lev Gleason was unable to produce a single copy of the magazine, although one was photostated from the N. Y. Public Library and another is said to exist in the Library of Congress. It was also noted that Cloth had disposed of all rights to the mag sketch to Reader's Scope and was therefore not an interested party in the suit, that Gleason had known little about the action and had never read the "Sergeants" book or seen the play.

Both Levin and Hyman had sworn that they had never seen Cloth's mag sketch or seen or heard of Reader's Scope magazine. Cloth is said to be a freelance author and gag man. His attorney is Andrew J. Feinman.

The infringement suit against "Sergeants" is more or less similar to numerous other such abortive actions against successful Broadway plays in recent years. Some of the others have involved "Tea and Sympathy," "State of the Union," "Man Who Came to Dinner." There have been no known claims of the sort involving payment of damages or settlement, but in several instances the plaintiffs have pleaded poverty to avoid assessment for costs and attorney fees.

P.A.s' Musical Chairs

Pressagents Leo Freedman and Abner Klipstein are staggering their vacation schedules this summer. Freedman planes June 4 for a motor tour of Normandy and Brittany. He's due back Aug. 1.

Klipstein, currently handling press for the N. Y. City Center's spring musical comedy season, will sub for Freedman as p.a. of "Middle of the Night." As required by union rules, he'll have an associate for the double-show period, and Ted Goldsmith is slated to take the assignment, resigning his present assignment with the pre-Broadway tryout, "Thieves' Paradise," to do so.

For the latter part of the summer, Goldsmith will publicize the Pittsburgh Civic Light Opera season. If the City Center musical comedy series extends beyond its scheduled closing June 17, Klipstein will have to get another associate to replace Goldsmith, as "Middle of the Night" will continue through June 30, when it lays off to give star Edward G. Robinson a vacation.

Meanwhile, Klipstein has booked flight July 29 for a vacation in Israel, returning Sept. 3.

Off-Broadway Shows

The Littlest Revue

Phoenix Theatre (T Edward Hambleton & Norris Houghton), by arrangement with Ben Bagley, presents two-act revue (29 scenes,) conceived, cast and assembled by Ben Bagley. Features Beverley Bozeman, Joel Grey, Tammy Grimes, Dorothy Jarnac, George Marcy, Tommy Morton, Charlotte Rae, Larry Storch. Songs mostly by Ogden Nash and Vernon Duke plus John Latouche, Kenward Elmslie, Sol Berkowitz, Sheldon Harnick, Lee Adams, Charles Strouse, John Strauss, Sidney Shaw, Edward Sauter, Sammy Cahn & Michael Brown; sketches by Nat Hiken & Billy Friedberg; Eudora Welty, Don Meyer, Mike Stewart, George Baxt, Bud McCreery, Allan Manings & Bob Van Scoyk. Directed by Paul Lammers; dances, Charles Weidman; settings, Klaus Holm; costumes, Alvin Colt; musical director, Will Irvin; orchestrations, John Strauss. Opened May 22, '56; $3.45 top.

"The Littlest Revue" just misses being really a big show. Result is a big "E" for effort and an "N" for "nervous hit." It has many bright things, mostly clever people but somehow doesn't have the socko b.o. impact necessary to consummate producer Ben Bagley's ambitions to "bring this one uptown." Even in its present off-Broadway environs it will enjoy mixed audience and boxoffice reactions.

For some reason a revue appears to be one of the most hazardous latterday legit undetakings. In the era of the Cohan revues and the sundry "Passing Shows" (under the Shuberts' aegis) the standards weren't as high as when Dwight Deere Wiman and Tom Weatherly started ushering in the "Little Shows." These were an extension of what two bright young men off a Morningside Heights campus, Lorenz Hart and Richard Rodgers, essayed with their first and second "Garrick Gaieties."

Thereafter it became an almost loaded Broadway challenge to essay a revue. Even with Beatrice Lillie and Jack Haley "Inside USA" was not on solid paydirt ground.

So the safest formula for offbeat personalities and material, with talent compensating for pretention, seems to be an off-Broadway venture such as "The Littlest Revue."

All the cast names perform with skill and, to ofttimes effective results, but, by and large, their talents are on a par with their material. It is there that the artisans of the "Little Shows" and the "Garrick Gaieties" had the advantage.

Charlotte Rae is a funny gal, as she has proved in the saloons. Joel Grey who, incidentally, was a cute-looking youngster with his old schnoz (he appears to have bobbed it a bit) is a limbre lad in everything he does. Larry Storch is another vet of the bistros and the image orthicons, as is Dorothy Jarnac. In truth most of the cast seem as flexible for Le Ruban Bleu and the Blue Angel, for Las Vegas and the Copa, and for the vaudfilms and the vaudeos, as in this 2d Ave. legit stand.

Given a takeoff opportunity on the Helen Traubels-gone-Rancho Vegas, Miss Rae makes more of that than when her material is not as potent. Ever the sprite of terpsichore, the physically fluid Dorothy Jarnac makes much of "Opus 9"—a sort of Dali dance routine.

The sketches and numbers are topical but more often cleverer in theme than in execution. The gamut runs from the 3d Ave. "el" to installment aviation tourism; from "The 2d Ave. and 12th St. Rag" to "Give My Regards to Mott St.," from a satire on Dr. Norman Vincent Peale to "the man in the gray flannel space suit"; from a ribald Elizabethan concept (one of the better Duke-Latouche numbers) to UN protocol as regards an amatory princeling in the East 43d St. environs; from Eudora Welty's excellent "Bye-Bye Brevoort" to a N.Y. Times want ad blackout. Then too there are dances from calypso to some fortnight and imaginative hoofology.

"The Littlest Revue" holds some bright things but unfortunately not enough of them. Abel.

A Doll's House

Greenwich Mews Theatre revival of drama in three acts by Henrik Ibsen. Adapted and staged by Miriam Goldina; setting, Robert Motley; costumes, Ann Howard; lighting, Adrian Hall. At Greenwich Mews, N. Y., May 26, '56. Admission by contribution.

Cast: Leon Van Dike, Maurine Holbert, Charlotte Acheson, Howard Wierum, Miriam Craig, Michael Lewin, James B. McMahon.

Some day an adventuresome writer will usher in a new era in the drama with a play in which a husband will abandon his wife, children and sanctified hearth. Until such time, Henrik Ibsen's "A Doll's House," in which Nora slams the door behind her with a resounding thud, will continue to be the prime example of justified domestic breakup. Since it has become fashionable to find Ibsen's once-daring thinking pretty old hat, it's refreshing that the Greenwich Mews revival escapes being the standard rehash of a "classic."

Miriam Goldina's adaptation can be credited with a good deal of the script's freshness, being relaxedly unhackneyed and, for theatre purposes, a considerable improvement over William Archer's scholarly translation. Miss Goldina's staging, too, has vivacity, although occasionally some of the lesser players succumb to a brooding introspection that fights the generally good tempo.

Luckily, the two principals are competent and unstuffy. As that early emancipated woman, Nora (the time is 1879), Maurine Holbert has the birdlike qualities required, as well as good perception of the sheltered wife's and mother's deeper resources. The actress transposes carefully and movingly from the twinkle-toed, almost scatterbrained, wife of the early scenes to the mature woman able to forsake her home for great principle.

Usually the smug husband is too ridiculously fatuous by present

PROFESSIONALS DON'T

Behave Beastly to Critics — Echo To Shubert Boston Fuss

At the recent Congressional committee hearing in Washington on the subject of alleged attempts by the Shuberts to control critical comment on shows playing their theatres, one of the principal witnesses was Elliot Norton, Boston Post critic whose removal from the Shubert press list in Boston touched off the entire investigation.

The aisle-sitter told committee members that immediately after the Shubert action against him, he had received a telephone call from a representative of the Playwrights Co., whose production of "Ponder Heart" he had panned, thereby igniting J. J. Shubert, who had long been steaming over what he considered Norton's severe notices.

The call was to assure Norton that the Playwrights had had nothing to do with, or even been informed in advance of the Shubert retaliation "After all," the caller explained, "we're pros."

Season Total Gross

D'Oyly Carte and Comedie Francaise imports and the City Center presentations of "Streetcar Named Desire," "King and I" and Marcel Marceau were other top coin-getters. The Broadway total, incidentally, also takes in the Phoenix Theatre productions.

Principal road money-makers were the two touring companies of "Teahouse of the August Moon," plus the post-Broadway tour of the N. Y. production. Also the post-Broadway hikes of "Plain and Fancy," "Bad Seed" and "Silk Stockings." The second companies of "Pajama Game" and "Damn Yankees" also piled up hefty ticket sales, while the recent Los Angeles production of "Rosalinda" nabbed quick returns. The pre-Broadway treks of "Wonderful," "Lady" and "Fella" were other top grossers.

Hinterland houses showcased 103 productions during the '55-'56 season for a total of 864 playing weeks. The tally on road shows the previous semester was 94 for a total of 879 playing weeks. The '55-'56 rundown included 11 holdovers from the previous season, 43 pre-Broadway tryouts, 24 touring productions (including post-Broadway hikes), eight tryout flops and 17 Coast productions.

Of the road lineup, eight of the touring entries (including two from the previous season) are still running, as are three of the Coast entries. Two other shows are on pre-Broadway hikes. The Broadway lineup includes six holdovers from previous seasons and 19 of the '55-'56 entries.

The comparative gross totals, with playing weeks in parenthesis, for Broadway for the last nine seasons have been as follows:

'47-'48	$28,826,500	(1,325)
'48-'49	$28,840,700	(1,231)
'49-'50	$28,614,500	(1,156)
'50-'51	$27,886,000	(1,139)
'51-'52	$29,223,000	(1,072)
'52-'53	$26,126,400	(1,012)
'53-'54	$30,169,200	(1,081)
'54-'55	$32,087,800	(1,139)
'55-'56	$35,353,100	(1,239)

Complainants Severely Hit, Must Pay Full Fees for Flimsy Suit

The copyright infringement suit over "No Time For Sergeants" was tossed out of court last week, with the plaintiffs liable for costs and attorney fees. Judge William B. Herlands granted a defense motion for dismissal with the consent of the plaintiffs. The case was in N. Y. Federal Court.

Named as defendants were producers Maurice Evans and Emmett Rodgers, playwright Ira Levin, original novelist Mac Hyman and the publisher of the book, Random House. Plaintiffs were Sherwin S. Cloth, author of a magazine which "Sergeants" was claimed to have been infringed, and Lev Gleason Publications, publisher of a mag called Reader's Scope.

In moving for dismissal of the suit, the defendants' attorney, Thomas A. Shaw, of Breed, Abbott & Morgan, argued, "This action bears all the earmarks of an utterly unmeritorious and reckless action brought for the purpose of harassing the defendants." The costs in the case amount to something over $200, and a total of about $7,500 in fees for the various defendants' attorneys.

The defense brief asking summary dismissal of the suit noted that the latrine joke which was the sole basis for the infringement claim is in the public domain, having been not only in common circulation in the Army during World War II, but having appeared in print in a training camp publication and been used onstage in an Army show. The brief also pointed out that Cloth's mag sketch did not appear in the issue of Reader's Scope as alleged.

In addition, it was brought out, plaintiff Lev Gleason was unable to produce a single copy of the magazine, although one was photostated from the N. Y. Public Library and another is said to exist in the Library of Congress. It was also noted that Cloth had disposed of all rights to the mag sketch to Reader's Scope and was therefore not an interested party in the suit, that Gleason had known little about the action and had never read the "Sergeants" book or seen the play.

Both Levin and Hyman had sworn that they had never seen Cloth's mag sketch or seen or heard of Reader's Scope magazine. Cloth is said to be a freelance author and gag man. His attorney is Andrew J. Feinman.

The infringement suit against "Sergeants" is more or less similar to numerous other such abortive actions against successful Broadway plays in recent years. Some of the others have involved "Tea and Sympathy," "State of the Union," "Man Who Came to Dinner." There have been no known claims of the sort involving payment of damages or settlement, but in several instances the plaintiffs have pleaded poverty to avoid assessment for costs and attorney fees.

P.A.s' Musical Chairs

Pressagents Leo Freedman and Abner Klipstein are staggering their vacation schedules this summer. Freedman planes June 4 for a motor tour of Normandy and Brittany. He's due back Aug. 1.

Klipstein, currently handling press for the N. Y. City Center's spring musical comedy season, will sub for Freedman as p.a. of "Middle of the Night." As required by union rules, he'll have an associate for the double-show period, and Ted Goldsmith is slated to take the assignment, resigning his present assignment with the pre-Broadway tryout, "Thieves' Paradise," to do so.

For the latter part of the summer, Goldsmith will publicize the Pittsburgh Civic Light Opera season. If the City Center musical comedy series extends beyond its scheduled closing June 17, Klipstein will have to get another associate to replace Goldsmith, as "Middle of the Night" will continue through June 30, when it lays off to give star Edward G. Robinson a vacation.

Meanwhile, Klipstein has booked flight July 29 for a vacation in Israel, returning Sept. 3.

deal for the tv rights), "Time Limit" and "Affair of Honor."

Notable personal clicks have been registered in the author and composer field by Christopher Fry-Jean Giraudoux, Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett-Anne Frank, Ira Levin-Mac Hyman, Enid Bagnold, Michael V. Gazzo, Lillian Hellman-Jean Anouilh, Carolyn Green, Paddy Chayefsky, and Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe.

In the actor and singer field, outstanding hits (figuring critical and popular reaction) have been made by Helen Hayes, Michael Redgrave, Marcel Marceau, Joseph Schildkraut, Susan Strasberg, Joyce Grenfell, Andy Griffith, Shirley Booth, Siobhan McKenna, Shelley Winters, Julie Harris, Margaret Sullavan, Robert Preston, Ruth Gordon, Eileen Herlie, Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, Nancy Walker, Anthony Quayle, Edward G. Robinson, David Wayne, Rex Harrison, Julie Andrews, Earle Hyman, Bert Lahr, Robert Weede and Jan Clayton.

Top directorial stints have been turned in by Harold Clurman, Garson Kanin, Tyrone Guthrie and Moss Hart. Standout producers, taking into account not merely boxoffice success, but creative judgment, taste and conviction, have been Kermit Bloomgarden (also in partnership with Lynn Loesser), Herman Levin, Robert L. Joseph, Maurice Evans (in partnership with Emmett Rogers), Irene M. Selznick, Jay Julien, and David Merrick (in partnership with the Theatre Guild).

Despite the inevitable tendency toward yes-and-no straddles in some cases, the critics generally have risen to the challenge of an unusual season. As usual, Brooks Atkinson, of the Times, and Walter F. Kerr, of the Herald Tribune, have set the standard in readability, style, clarity, perception and discrimination.

Barbara Ashley will sing the role of Lady Thiang in "King and I" at the Pitt Civic Light Opera the week of July 2, then Lalume in "Kismet" the week of July 16.

S.F. Ballet, G&S Feature Schedule at Corning, N.Y.

Co-producers Omar K. Lerman and Dorothy Chernuck have announced an expanded, festival-type program for their third summer season at the Corning Glass Theatre, Corning, N. Y.

Topping the schedule is the first eastern U. S. performance of the San Francisco Ballet prior to its three-week stand at Jacob's Pillow. Other specials on the 10-week schedule include a Gilbert & Sullivan production with 2 members of the D'Oyly Carte Opera Co.; folk singer Richard Dyer-Bennett with the Eva Jessye Choir; The Princetonians, a new jazz group, and, tentatively, Chester Morris in "The Desperate Hours."

Filling out the season will be one-week stock productions of "Where's Charlie," "Bus Stop," "Tea and Sympathy," "Anastasia," "Anniversary Waltz," and "Tender Trap."

Elliot Norton, Boston Post drama critic, will be among 13 persons to receive honorary degrees June 12 from Suffolk U. for "unusual services in their respective professions." Presentations will be at commencement exercises at the Boston Opera House.

Romanoff and Juliet

London, May 22.

Linnit & Dunfee presentation of a comedy in three acts, by Peter Ustinov. Stars Ustinov, Frederick Valk; features Michael David, Katy Vail. Staged by Denis Carey; decor, Jean Denis Malcles. At Piccadilly Theatre, London, May 17, '56; $2.50 top.

Soldiers.....Joe Gibbons, David Lodge
General ..... Peter Ustinov
Hooper Moulsworth ..... John Phillips
Vadim Romanoff ..... Frederick Valk
Igor Romanoff ..... Michael David
Juliet ..... Katy Vail
Spy .....David Hurst
Beulah Moulsworth.... Jacqueline Lacey
Evdokia Romanoff.....Mariamie Deeming
Capt. Zlotochienki .....Delphi Lawrence
Freddie Vanderstutt..... William Greene
Archbishop ..... Edward Atienza

If not the best play Peter Ustinov has yet written, "Romanoff and Juliet" is certainly his most mature effort. It is an adult piece of political satire, abounding with wit and bubbling over with amusing situations and dialog.

Here is a potential b.o. smash for London, which might well be repeated on Broadway, provided American audiences are prepared to laugh at themselves. And they ought, for they would find it both rewarding and diverting.

In many ways Ustinov ignores conventional theatrical form and on that account the play doesn't have too much substance. It is not the sort of play that lends itself to deep analysis. Despite the author's shrewd powers of observation, "Romanoff" is really a superficial but enjoyable comedy. At times, Ustinov tries with some success to be epigrammatic, and an impish sense of humor permeates the whole production.

"Romanoff and Juliet" is far removed from the Shakespeare classic, which obviously inspired it. In place of the Montagues and Capulets, it takes the American and Russian ambassadors for the basic conflict. In the smallest state in Europe, over which Ustinov presides, the son of the Soviet envoy falls in love with the daughter of the American representative. That, to all intents and purposes, is the plot, but the possibilities are enormous and the author has seized on them with infectious gusto.

To an appreciable extent, the play's success is due to Ustinov's own impeccable acting. He wrote the part for himself and clearly knew what he was up to. Moreover, his gestures, timing and little mannerisms put more into the part than he created on paper. A scene in which he tries to maintain the "balance of feebleness" between the rival big powers, by revealing the other's secrets, is a tongue-twisting comedy gem.

In his treatment of the conflict between the U. S. and the Soviet Union, the author allows his satire to take a free and obvious course. Each is pilloried in turn, but finally both emerge with an acceptable measure of humanity and understanding. Truly, a case of having the best of both possible worlds. Or the worst?

The two ambassadors are played with telling effect by Frederick Valk and John Phillips. The former is not too happily served with a scene in which he recalls the pre-Revolutionary glories of St. Petersburg, but that apart, performs with obvious sincerity.

The young lovers are nicely played by Michael David and Katy Vail, and David Hurst gives a necessarily broad interpretation of a Russian spy who seeks asylum in a monastery. Edward Atienza shines in a final-act scene as a hard-of-hearing Archbishop tricked into marrying the runaway lovers, and Joe Gibbons and David Lodge deserve a high rating for their virile performances as two soldiers.

The situation in which Delphi Lawrence as a Russian naval captain and William Greene as an American tycoon come to claim their partners and eventually link up romantically, is somewhat contrived, although not unamusing. Jacqueline Lacey and Marianne Deeming as the wives of the ambassadors round off a very good cast.

Denis Carey has done a firstrate job of staging the comedy, making the admirable use of a three-way set, allowing the interiors of both ambassadorial homes to be used either singly or simultaneously. Jean Denis Malcles rates credit for the set and costumes.

Gigi

London, May 24.

Donald Albery (in association with Alexander Ince) presentation of comedy in two acts (six scenes), adapted by Anita Loos from short story by Colette. Stars Leslie Caron. Staged by Peter Hall; decor, Disley Jones. At New Theatre, London, May 23, '56; $2.35 top.

Gigi ..... Leslie Caron
Mme. Alvarez ..... Ena Burrill
Andree ..... Kathleen Michael
Gaston Lachaille ..... Tony Britton
Victor ..... Esme Percy
Alicia de St. Ephlam.... Estelle Winwood
Sidonie ..... Jessie Evans

It's easy to see why Audrey Hepburn made such a standout personal hit when she originated the role of Gigi on Broadway. It's not so easy to believe that Leslie Caron will repeat that personal triumph, even though she has exceptional name value to keep the show running.

In place of the elfin charm Miss Hepburn must have exuded, Miss Caron plays the Gigi role with the gusto and enthusiasm of a gawky tomboy. There is too much of the dancer and not enough of the actress in many of her movements.

That she has potential acting talent is not disputed, but her diction is inadequate and in the first act, particularly, she has a tendency to swallow many of her words. That doesn't help in appreciation of the part or of the performer. She is clearly confident in the second half and here some of her charm and sincerity emerge.

The play itself, of course, is a mere trifle and, to the puritanically minded, unsavory. The story of a scheming grandmother and aunt who set about to train a 16-year old schoolgirl for the life of a courtesan, is neither subtle nor particularly appealing, but a light comedy touch deftly avoids making it unpleasant.

Presumably modelled on the original Broadway designs, the Disley Jones' settings have an appropriate fussy and cluttered appearance in keeping with the beginning-of-the-century period. Peter Hall's staging is a model of precise timing, and the acting is on a satisfying level.

Estelle Winwood, returning to London after an absence of 40 years, is a delight as the scheming aunt. Tony Britton is competent as the rich young suitor, and Ena Burrill and Kathleen Michael are more than adequate as the girl's grandmother and mother respectively. Esme Percy is near-perfect as a butler and Jessie Evans scores as a maid.

serted that they were not aware that the document they signed was a petition for the independent slate. That's okay. Everybody can change their mind.

"But the events of last week are difficult to explain. For example: How did the members who wired from Philadelphia know what was in the magazine before it reached them? How was it that others signed identical typed statements of 'repudiation' on the same day? What made them do it in the first place? Who threw the cue? Interesting questions? They certainly are. You're entitled to answers before you vote."

Signatures on the statement, as "supporters of the independent ticket," included Jane White, Margaret Hamilton, Fred Herbert, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Kim Hunter, Erin O'Brien Moore, Kent Smith, Elizabeth Patterson, John Ford, Peggy Wood and B. J. Keating.

Candidates on the indie slate who also signed a statement pledging their independence were Donald Cook, Pat McVey, Dorothy Sands, Lucia Victor, Ruth Matteson, Leo Kayworth, Stephen Douglas, Sara Bettis, Roddy McDowall, Norma Doggett, Bibi Osterwald and Gordon Woodburn. Not available when the statement was issued were candidates Earle Hyman, Robert Neukum and Eddie Foy Jr.

Nominating committee members who said they "deeply resent the baseless charge that the regular ticket was formed or is controlled by a clique" were Osceola Archer, John Drew Devereaux, Helen Gallagher, Robert Preston, Whitford Kane, Jenny Workman, Viveca Lindfors, Edward Becker, Frank Silvera and Eddie Weston.

Other committee members who reportedly refused to sign the statement included Judson Laire, Eli Wallach, William Prince, Leo Kayworth (a member of the opposition indie ticket) and B. J. Keating (a signer of the statement supporting the indie ticket).

standards, but Howard Wierum has dignity, dimension and depth, and his inkling of self-recognition at the close, giving glimmer of hope, is a useful touch. In a sombre way, James B. McMahon is affecting as a doomed family friend, but Michael Lewin, as the unscrupulous bank clerk who threatens the family's security, and Charlotte Acheson, as Nora's friend of school-days, tend to submerge in inner torment.

Saturday nights at the Mews they're hanging out the SRO sign, so perhaps Ibsen isn't dead after all.

Three Times Three

Walt Witcover & Douglas Lutz production of three one-act plays, including a comedlettina by George Bernard Shaw, a farce by John Maddison Morton, and a comedy by John Heywood. Staged by Witcover; production design, Zvi Geyra. At Channin Auditorium, May 23, '56; $3.00 top.

Casts: Jerry Stiller, Anne Meara, Charles Nelson Reilly.

Nothing's more ponderous than a heavy-handed joke, unless it's three heavy-handed jokes. Since the one-acters under the collective title "Three Times Three," at the Chanin Building's airy 50th floor auditorium, have had risible results in prior incarnations, the presumption must be that something's amiss with the present production.

Not that anybody would claim George Bernard Shaw's "How He Lied to Her Husband" to be a whirlwind of laughter, for in the Shaw lexicon it's puny. Too, Victorian John Maddison Morton's little spoof, "Box and Cox," has acquired, as the French say, a certain age.

But 16th century John Heywood's gamey "A Merrye Playe" still shows signs of bawdy sparkle and, properly tackled, might get the side-aching laughter. However, it isn't happening here.

Part of the essence of farce playing is that while the actors work furiously, they should make it look easy. Except for rare moments, in "Three" they make it look hard, though each constantly threatens to be better. But the fewer the laughs the more they strain, and vice-versa.

Director and co-producer Walt Witcover has spared no pains to resuscitate waning moments, even resorting to the chamber pot. With designer Zvi Geyra's colorful help, he has kept the stage picture pleasing, but only occasionally has he elicited the necessary deft style.

In Shaw's "comedlettina" with the usual twist, Charles Nelson Reilly and Anne Meara, as lover and adored one, seem at their happiest. In "Box and Cox," Reilly scores with some subtle by-play, while Jerry Stiller's deadpan technic begins to click.

As a lusty wife in "A Merrye Play," Heywood's lark of Elizabethan domesticity, Miss Meara is vigorously uninhibited, while Stiller, as her doltish husband, does the necessary clowning. But it looks like three strikes and out.

Pictures in the Hallway

Poetry Center production of concert reading in two acts of autobiography by Sean O'Casey. Staged by Stuart Vaughan; adapted by Paul Shyre. At Kaufmann Concert Hall, N. Y., May 27, '56; $2.50 top.

Cast: Rae Allen, George Brenlin, Aline MacMahon, Paul Shyre, Robert Geiringer, Staats Cotsworth.

The reading two months ago of "I Knock At the Door," the first Sean O'Casey's autobiographical novels, had such an air of pleasant surprise that it was inveitable a sequel would follow. Paul Shyre's adaptation of Vol. II, "Pictures In the Hallway," is almost as agreeable, and it mightn't be too much to hope that the town might have segments of all six books read in due course, for the figure of Sean O'Casey looms larger with the passing days and his work seems sure to endure.

"Pictures" takes the weak-eyed, great-souled Johnny Casside into his adolescent years, with the first taste of drudging work, early intimations of the stridency of political man, and flushed tinglings of the warmth and joy of sexual discovery. Although penned as prose, the language has the concept of poetry and very often its rhythm. In a two-hour reading, much depends on the adapter's selectivity, and early portions seem less well-chosen than previously, but then Shyre gets to O'Casey's emotional content with its many probing truths.

The same cast and format are used as in the earlier effort. Again Aline MacMahon is the mother, although this time a couple of amusing character vignettes are also thrown her way, and George Brenlin is the eager Johnny.

Staats Cotsworth narrates, as well as reading several bits, Rae Allen does a bevy of winsome lassies (this is a much better outing for Miss Allen), while Shyre and Robert Geiringer are variously ministers, dung-dodgers or just plain Irishmen.

As before, the actors are seated at lecterns before a blue sky and evoctive strain emanate from the wings. Director Stuart Vaughan has aroused more strife and volume than previously, possibly to accent the grating religious and secular conflicts breaking in on Johnny's increasing awareness. Miss MacMahon, however, maintains motherhood's compassionate calm, until it seems that she has heretofore been merely waiting until she might at last play Johnny Cassidy's mother.

Sometime soon somebody is going to mount these autobiographical segments commercially (50c increase this trip at the Kaufman Concert Hall). If they'll trust the judgment that has informed the readings to date, the results should be salutary.

The Ivory Branch

TSR Theatre Co. & Carole M. Phillips production of a new drama in two acts by Sara Reavin. Stars Diana Barrymore, Muriel Rahn. Staged by Bill Whiting; setting, Barry Buchter; lighting, Ed Peterson; technical director, Richard E. Nelson. At Provincetown Playhouse, N.Y., May 26, '56; $3.45 top.

Cast: Hal Burdick, Clayton Corbin, Muriel Rahn, Diana Barrymore, Edgar Bedford, Jean Schlegel, Gil Rogers, James Parker.

Trapped. That must be the sentiment of actors like Diana Barrymore and Muriel Rahn involved in as deplorable a play as Sara Reavin's "The Ivory Branch." Unlike the less victimized audience, they can't vacate the premises until the final curtain.

South of the Mason-Dixon line, a southern gal who has married a Yankee, bears a Negro child. Horrified, she exiles hubby to the north and more or less gives the baby to her childless Negro servants. Grandpappy, however, tells the belle her mother was a mulatto, thus re-splicing the marriage. Then he says maybe he's telling the truth, maybe he isn't, they'll never know.

Sporting the family voice as the turgidly-wracked wife, Miss Barrymore runs the gamut from liquid sweetness to guttural scorn. Miss Rahn has the requisite saccharine for the baby and violent derision for the rejecting mother.

No dice.

Chi Simmers; 'Inherit' Big $31,900, Belafonte $48,000 (9), 'Seed' $19,200

Chicago, May 29.

Biz in the Loop tilted up a bit last week with exit notices up on two of the three entries.

Summer schedule looks slack again this year with thus far only "Joy Ride," coming to the Shubert next Monday (4), and "Silk Stockings," due at the same house July 25 for a run.

Estimates for Last Week

'Faces' 19G, Hub; 'Teahouse' $22,800

Boston, May 29.

Legit is back in stride in the Hub, with two shows on the boards in the extended season. Current are "Teahouse of the August Moon," in for a three-week stand at the Colonial, and "New Faces of 1956," trying out at the Shubert for two weeks prior to Broadway. "Teahouse" opened to a paid preview Monday night (21) and officially Tuesday (22) to hefty advance. "New Faces" also had a paid preview on Thursday night (24) before official opening Friday night (25).

"Faces" generally made the grade with the Hub critics, most of whom felt, however, that the revue needed plenty of pruning and polishing. These two wind up the season, except for "Pajama Game" national company, which, rating technically as a next season entry. It comes into the Shubert for a June 11 opening.

Estimates for Last Week

New Faces of 1956, Shubert (R) (1st wk) ($6.25-$4.95; 1,717; $56,-179). Opened officially Friday to one rave (Maloney, Traveler), three affirmatives (Durgin, Globe; Melvin, Monitor; Hughes, Herald) and two fair (Doyle, American; Norton, Post). Grossed $19,000 for first three regular performances and one preview; continues this week.

Teahouse of the August Moon, Colonial (C) (1st wk) ($4.40-$3.85; 1,500; $38,150) (Eddie Bracken, Hugh Reilly). Opened to good advance and pulled nearly $22,800 for first seven performances and preview; continues.

'Stockings' $43,900, S.F.; 'Anastasia' OK $22,100

San Francisco, May 29.

Two touring entries, "Silk Stockings" and "Anastasia," wound up profitable Frisco runs last Saturday (26). The former show slipped a bit, but was still strong in its fifth round at the Curran. "Anastasia" continued its progressive climb for a sock third week's take at the Geary. Both shows moved to Los Angeles.

"Anniversary Waltz" took another slight dip in its 28th frame at the Alcazar.

Estimates for Last Week

Anastasia, Geary (3d wk) ($4.40; 1,550; $37,000) (Viveca Lindfors, Eugenie Leontovich). Big $22,100; previous week, $19,000.

Anniversary Waltz, Alcazar (28th wk) ($3.85; 1,147; $27,341) (Richard Eastham, Marjorie Lord). Fair $11,000, previous week, $11,200.

'SHANGRI' $18,000 IN 5, FIRST WEEK IN PHILA.

Philadelphia, May 29.

Final legit booking of the season, "Shangri-La," musical version of the late James Hilton's "Lost Horizon," got mixed critical and audience reception on its arrival at the Forrest last Wednesday (23) for a two-and-a-half-week stand.

Reviewers' opinions ranged from the very favorable notice of Murdock (Inquirer), through the modified praise of Sensenderfer (Bulletin), to the flat nix turned in by Gaghan (News). Cast changes and insufficient preparation of new leads undoubtedly hurt at the opener here.

Estimates for Last Week

Shangri-La, Forrest (1st wk) ($5.40; 1,760; $45,700) (Dennis King, Shirley Yamaguchi, Martyn Green, Harold Lang). Advance reports of show's difficulties in Boston cut down pre-opening sale. Tuner has the local legit field to itself, however; drew a so-so $18,-000 for first five performances; show was overquoted in Boston.

3d Co. 'Teahouse' $35,500 For Mpls.-St. P. Split

St. Paul, Minn, May 29.

The Larry Parks company of "Teahouse of August Moon" grossed a good $15,200 for three nights and a matinee last Thursday-Saturday (24-26) in the Auditorium theatre here. There was a $4.40 top in the 2,801-seat house.

Adds $20,300 in Mpls.

Minneapolis, May 29.

Starring Larry Parks, "Teahouse of the August Moon" for its final four local nights, Sunday-Wednesday (20-23) in the 1,850-seat Lyceum at $4.40 top grossed a hefty $20,300. Total for the entire Minneapolis engagement of 10 nights and two matinees was over $61,500 out of an approximate $70,000 potential. Even warm weather on the concluding evenings couldn't keep them away here.

Curtain falls on the local legit season with "Damn Yankees," June 4-12.

'Pajama' Passable $35,200, Fifth Week in Detroit

Detroit, May 29.

Fifth week gross of the touring "Pajama Game" dropped to $35,-200 at the 2,050-seat Shubert. Potential capacity is $53,000 at the $4 top weeknights, $5 weekends.

Fran Warren bowed out of the production Saturday (26) with Betty O'Neill replacing for final week here and the balance of the tour.

Shubert has booked "Teahouse of the August Moon" for four weeks beginning June 11.

'Teahouse' $36,800, 'Paradise' Folds In Wash. Tryout

Washington, May 29.

Capital legit was marked last week by two extremes, a smash hit and a dire flop. The hit, "Teahouse of the August Moon," starring Eli Wallach and Gene Blakely, arrived from its Philadelphia triumph with a record breaking advance sale of about $72,000 (tax excluded). It built to an s.r.o. Saturday night. Second stanza will be even bigger, according to the hefty advance, and the prize-winning comedy should be in the sellout class by next week. Cricks were unanimous in their raves.

"Thieves Paradise," on the other hand, wound up with a pitiful take, and a new low for this town. Booked in on a four-wall deal, the Myron C. Fagan drama of intrigue in the Balkans was shunned even by cuffo customers. Show's producers literally couldn't give tickets away, and drama ignominously folded Saturday (26) night. Shubert, which is not air-conditioned, shuttered for the summer.

Estimates for This Week

Teahouse of August Moon, National (1st wk) ($4.95; 1,600; $42,-406) (Eli Wallach, Gene Blakely). Opening with a record advance, the show grossed almost $36,800 for its initial stanza. Run has been extended to six weeks and may go longer.

Thieves Paradise, Shubert (single wk) ($3.30; 1,500; $28,000). A dismal flop at a record local low of $1,138. Show folded after its initial week. Crix kept pounding all week, and propaganda theme kept even cuffo customers away.

'Yankees' Homer $49,600; Winds Season in Cincy

Cincinnati, May 29.

Bobby Clark in "Damn Yankees" grossed a terrific $49,600 last week in the 2,000-seat Shubert at $5.65 top.

Engagement wound up the Cincy legit season of nine shows and 11 weeks, lightest on record. General b.o. rating was good.

Shubert. "Can-Can," at the same house, notched 15 weeks for a gross of $524,000. In the straight play bracket. "Inherit the Wind" will have notched 17 frames at the Blackstone when it exits Saturday (2), for a projected total of $481,-900.

As has been the case for some years past, three of the five theatres owned and/or leased by the J. J. Shubert empire were dark more weeks than they were lighted. The Selywn, for example, housed "Bus Stop" for five weeks as its only entry. The Harris had four entries that lasted a total of 19 weeks. The Great Northern was active 10 weeks with three short-runners.

The Shubert namesake, however, got in 39 virtually consecutive weeks as the mooring for the tuners "Can-Can" and "Pajama Game" and Harry Belafonte's "Sing, Man, Sing" two-weeker. The same dynasty's Blackstone had a relatively good season with 33 weeks notched by its five visitors.

Erlanger, operated by Marcus Heiman, did fine with its singleton, the aforementioned "Teahouse."

B'way Holding Up; 'Wonderful' 54G, 'Cat' $28,600, 'Desk' 20½G, 'Rock' 17G, 'Fanny' 36½G, 'Pipe' 31G, 'Revue' 18½G

Business on Broadway remained generally steady last week. Receipts varied $1,000 or more from the previous stanza for only five shows. The capacity lineup included "Damn Yankees," "Most Happy Fella," "My Fair Lady," and "No Time for Sergeants."

Sole opener was "Littlest Revue" at the Phoenix Theatre, while the lone closer was "Kiss Me Kate" at the City Center. Only preem this week is "Carmen Jones" at the City Center.

Met-Guild Back to School For Study of Rehearsal Economics; Tony Bliss' Unblissful Weekend

Chicago, May 29.

The Metropolitan Opera and the American Guild of Musical Artists have resumed negotiations for a new contract for principal singers and chorus. Confabs were resumed here Sunday and will continue tomorrow (Wed.) in Toronto, where the touring troupe is now playing.

Despite the Met management's previously declared restrictions on the scope of negotiations, discussions are now wide open, including demands for rehearsal restrictions, higher rehearsal rates and job security. Indications are that some compromises may be reached.

Specifically, AGMA has offered a new "formula" providing for continuation of the old $1.70 hourly chorus rehearsal rate for the first 12 hours per week and $2.70 thereafter. Also, there would be certain limits on free rehearsal for ballet. The union is still seeking two years' job security, with the management indicating it might agree to one year.

Hour Estimates

Guild considers Met's estimates for the upcoming 1956-'57 season, 348 hours of rehearsals, unrealistic since in the season now closing the Met's own estimate of 286 hours proved high, only 261 hours being used. (The ballet segment of troupe considers the Met's projection of 348 hours as a physical impossibility.) Guild has been telling Opera board members that "You've created an imaginary quota on hours and then apply our wage demands to argue you'll go broke."

The resumption of negotiations here over the weekend followed several explosive meetings. Anthony Bliss, Met president, addressed the entire company Saturday (26), explaining the organization's involved financial situation and asking AGMA's continued "cooperation." He was immediately answered in a fiery talk by AGMA attorney (and acting exec-sec) Mortimer Becker from New York. When the Met spokesman was asked if he wanted to make a rebuttal, he replied that he "wouldn't attempt to answer a campaign speech."

As a prelude to resumption of negotiations, AGMA insisted that it would not be bound by any restrictions on the scope of talks saying, "you can't expect to tie our hands in advance." Specifically, it called on Bliss to withdraw his recent letter to company members (with copies released to the press) asserting that the management would welcome renewal of confabs provided the union agreed to drop its demands for rehearsal restrictions, new rehearsal rates and job security the whole issue.

Apparently there was some confusion about the basis of resumed negotiations, for when the Met brass, including Bing, arrived from New York for the Sunday confabs there was an immediate protest over AGMA's renewal of the key demands. After a recess in which there was reportedly a row between the Sunday arrivals and the Saturday speaker (Bliss) the powwows continued on the fuil-discussion basis.

Participating for the Met, in addition to Bliss and Bing, were attorney Lincoln Lauterstein and officials Robert Herman, Max Rudolf and, apparently as an observer, and for the first time, Francis Robinson, of the public relations staff. Union president John Borwnlee, Becker and negotiating committee members represented AGMA.

Claude Monteux Forsakes Columbus $4,000 Fee; Helping Find Successor

Columbus, May 29.

Columbus' Symphony Orchestra probably will have a new conductor next season. Present maestro, Claude Monteux, is forsaking the job for more and quicker money in New York.

Monteux said only two weeks ago that he would conduct next year's series. Orchestra president, Mrs. William K. O'Brien said Monteux's salary for next season was set at $4,000, up from $2,750 for the season just finished.

"Mr. Monteux," Mrs. O'Brien explained, "has not asked the orchestra for more money. On the contrary, he realizes that this is an adequate salary for our concert season. Apparently, however, his needs are far greater than can be made in the music field in Columbus.

"We shall begin immediately a search for a new director with Mr. Monteux's assistance. Should we fail to find one of the caliber needed to lead our fine orchestra before next season's rehearsals are upon us, Mr. Monteux has agreed to commute from New York to direct rehearsals and conduct the concert series."

16 Of Ballet Theatre On 7-Week Barn Tour

Nora Kaye and John Kriza and Ballet Theatre Dancers (so billed) take to the summer theatre circuit June 25 at the Westport (Conn.) Country Playhouse. It'll be a seven-week route, inciuding the Pocono Playhouse, Mountainhome, Pa., July 9; Theatre-by-the-Sea, Matunuck, R. I., July 16, and Ogunquit (Me.) Playhouse, July 30. Intervening weeks are being booked.

Full Ballet Theatre troupe sails in the fall for another European tour under State Dept. auspices (International Program Exchange, administered by Robert Schnitzer, via the American National Theatre & Academy).

Summer company will comprise 16 dancers, including Lupe Serrano, Ruth Ann Koesun and Scott Douglas. It will use two pianos and do usual summer stock eight performances weekly.

Richard Tucker's Plans; Maybe 'La Juive' in Chi

When he winds up June 2 with the Metropolitan Opera Spring teur, Richard Tucker faces a singing summer as follows: June 15-21, Puerto Rico Opera; July 7, Lewisohn Stadium, N. Y.; July 10, Milwaukee; July 31-Aug. 2, Hollywood Bowl; Aug. 18, Chicago (Trib) Musicland.

If the Lyric Opera of Chi survives its present battle-of-the-egotists and has a season, Tucker will start getting up in the title role of "La Juive," new to him and the battling burg.

Wright's Danish Quickie

Leverett Wright, vice president of Columbia Artists Management, flew to Copenhagen for the weekend to catch "Romeo and Juliet," new hit ballet by Prokofieff performed by the Royal Danish Ballet.

New York will see the ballet in September when Danish troupe comes here for its first American tour. Wright flew out Friday (25) night, returned yesterday (Tues.).

Line-Up at Yale Bowl; Concertized 'Porgy & Bess'

New Haven, May 29.

Pop Concert Series, held annually at Yale Bowl under sponsorship of the New Haven Symphony, and managed by New Haven Junior Chamber of Commerce, tees off its 12th season on Tuesday, June 26, with a concert version of "Porgy and Bess," headed by Lawrence Winters and Theresa Green. Other dates include July 10, Duke Ellington Orchestra; July 24, Eileen Farrell; July 31, John Raitt; Aug. 14, Roger Williams. Final concert (Aug. 28) will be a concert version of "Student Prince," with principals not yet set.

Harry Berman and Frank Brieff carry on as conductors, former handling four concerts, latter two. Incidentally, Berman has wielded the baton for 57 of the 70 concerts of the overall series (11 years) to date.

Scale is upped a bit this semester on individual concert ducats ($2 top) but series tickets at $8.40 a set is a repeat of 1955.

Ned Bean is chairman of this year's series, and Gerald Rogovin is handling p.a. chores.

Isaac Stern's Sock Soviet Tour Raises Reds' Opinion Of U.S. Cultural Standing

By IRVING R. LEVINE
(NBC and VARIETY Moscow Correspondent)

American violinist Isaac Stern, first U. S. concert soloist to perform in the Soviet Union since the war, has stored a great personal success in his tour here and has reflected credit on American culture.

Communist newspapers, which have been known in times past to comment disparagingiy on America's contributions to culture, were lavish in their praise of Stern.

Each of Stern's 18 concerts were performed to capacity audiences. He played seven concerts in Moscow, five in Leningrad, three in Kiev, and one each in Yerivan, Baku and Tiflis.

The second half of a Stern concert in Moscow was carried on Moscow's radio and television.

Russian audiences, obviously hungry for contact of any sort with the outside world, greeted Stern's performances with exceptional ovations. On opening night in Moscow, Stern was called back for five encores, and only a brief speech in Russian expressing his gratitude and his hope that many other American artists would come to the Soviet Union finally brought the sustained, rhythmic applause to an end.

As is true in the case of all such concerts where there is a great demand for tickets, distribution was made to various government offices and factories where tickets were made available to especially "deserving" workers or drawn by lot.

Whereas in the case of "Porgy and Bess," which was the first American cultural offering to appear in the Soviet Union in many years, audience enthusiasm seemed based on curiosity and perhaps a bit of shock at provocative dress and gestures, the enthusiasm for Stern was clearly on the basis of performance.

The newspaper "Soviet Culture" described Stern as a "great artist."

The Communist Party newspaper "Pravda" carried a review which said:

"The concerts were all given to packed halls. When I heard Stern's performance and sensed the sincere emotion of the audience, the thought involuntarily entered my mind once again as to how powerful a force art is, how able it is to unite people in their lofty aspirations for mutual understanding and peaceful life."

The theme of Soviet policy now is that Russia wants to get along with everybody and Pravda never misses a chance to reflect this theme even when reviewing a visiting American artist, as indicated in the review of Stern.

David Ross, producer-director at the off-Broadway 4th Street Theatre left yesterday (Tues.) for Moscow, where he'll study stage techniques for one month with Moscow Art and Maly Theatres.

Others who will play on the Leinsdorf team are Jean Morel, who'll also be conducting at the Met, and Margaret Hillis who'll bring in the chorus.

Part of the dolling up for the operas includes a new turntable and extended apron for the stage which will be especially useful to "Carmen," "Fiedermaus" and "Mignon." A Tennessee opera, "Susanna" and a German, "The Moon," will be packaged for one novelty, both new items. "The Tempest" by a Swiss will be the other innovation.

Red Rocks' 11 Guesters

Most of the stars will appear in conjunction with the Denver Symphony, conducted by Saul Caston. Concerts will all be held at the Red Rocks Theatre, a natural amphitheatre some 15 miles west of Denver. It seats 10,000.

Among stars scheduled to appear, according to Fest chairman William D. Embree Jr., are Gisele MacKenzie, Rise Stevens, Marian Anderson, Peggy King, Gordon MacRae as well as Don Voorhees and Eileen Farrell. Also listed is "Silk Stockings," with the original Broadway cast starring Don Ameche and Jan Sherwood.

Negro Opera: 'Ouanga'

Having heretofore staged events at New York's Carnegie and Town Halls, the National Negro Opera Foundation on Sunday (27) crashed the Metropolitan Opera House with "Ouanga." Carefully program-described as a concert version of a Haitian opera with ballet, this was far from being "grand" opera and a long way from being topflight professional entertainment scaled to $8.50 (though, of course, as a self-benefit, allowance must be made).

Clarence Cameron White's score (composed in 1928) is marked by melody and mood, but the libretto of John E. Matheus is slow mollasses. The choice was unfortunate if prestige for Negro Opera was at stake. But the most unprofessional aspect of all was promoter Mary Cardwell Dawson's staging. The result was an awkward, stiff, self-conscious performance with frequent waits for the music.

With three of the male singers in tails and the femme principais and chorus in strangely assorted gowns, the concert effect was half-fish, half-fowl, since the baliet was bare-chested and barefooted. Entrances and exits were appallingly amateurish throughout the evening and there was absolutely no "inter-relatedness" among the characters, if the word has any meaning in these circumstances.

Some of the voices were excellent. McHenry Boatright as the first King of Haiti and Juanita King as the voodoo priestess he orders killed, were standout. Fritz Vincent seemed literally "frozen" at the outset, but later his throat muscles opened and nice sounds came out. Lark Beecham with fine control and elevation but uncertain timing (to the music) was standout in the ballet—the one promise of action or emotion in the proceedings.

Libretto, declared to be in English, would be totally unintelligible without printed notes. Every now and then a line did pop out. Suddenly a guy would say, "Bon Soir" (then go silent for eight bars). "Be My Bride," sang the King, looking the other way—and the gal, not unreasonably, but after more bars of delay, answered cryptically, "No," and nothing more than that.

In an apparent fury against superstition the King commanded, "Seize the Witch," whereupon she walked off stage, unmolested, though four arias later a sound in the wings was announced as the lady's execution. Her offstage "ugh" may serve for a summary of the sins commited in the name of opera.

Chi's Unharmonious Opera Looks Sure for Rocks; Income Taxers Move In

Chicago, May 29.

The Lyric Theatre has stubbornly resisted interment for another week.

Superior Court Judge Abraham Lincoln Marovitz, handling the receivership of the stalled opera company, had no choice but to honor Friday (25) the request for a week's delay entered by lawyers repping the Lawrence V. Kelly faction to the petition to liquidate the Lyric filed by Augustine J. Bowe, the temporary receiver appointed earlier in the week.

Bowe had returned to Marovitz's court with his move to dissolve the snafued corporation after Kelly, artistic director Nicola Rescigno and Lyric Guild head Betty McAllister refused to meet with him in an attempt to resoive the deadlock. Lyric president Carol Fox had pledged her support to Bowe when he was named to the thankless job.

If and when the Lyric is put out of business as obviously the only resolution of the personality battle, the recently-organized Opera Theatre Assn. is waiting to take over the embattled company's assets and liabilities—including the play-or-pay talent contracts negotiated for the scheduied third season that's supposed to start Oct. 10. But with at least another week of legal wrangle in the offing the OTA, comprised of a long list of civic biggies, may well decide to forget about the '56 season and shoot for reestablishing Chi opera on a firm foundation in '57 and beyond.

The U. S. Government also formally moved into the picture last week as the Internal Revenue Service filed for a tax lien against the Lyric. IRS claims the Lyric owes $54,785 in withholding taxes.

Salzburg Inks Karajan

Frankfurt, May 29.

Conductor Herbert von Karajan has just been signed for the Salzburg Mozart Festival for the three seasons of 1957, 1958 and 1959. He's also agreed to conduct additional concerts in Salzburg during the same period.

Also, the Berlin Philharmonic has booked him for a minimum of six concerts this season, with options for holdovers.

Literati

Fred Allen's Posthumous Biog

Little, Brown will publish the late Fred Allen's autobiog, "Much Ado About Me," in the fall. It's of the era that pre-dates his broadcast-telecast career, as covered in "Treadmill to Oblivion." It covers his Boston upbringing, and his vaudeville background.

Allen had it pretty well finished when he died.

GBS' Centennial

On the centenary of George Bernard Shaw's birth, William Morrow will publish in September a treatise on "Bernard Shaw: His Life, Work, and Friends," by the British drama critic, St. John Ervine.

The $7.50 volume will exceed 700 pages, and will be illustrated.

Ned Armstrong's Book

Ned Armstrong, p.r. man with a Madison Ave. outfit but w.k. in show biz as a legit p.a. and as a VARIETY byliner, has authored "Man and Boy" for Little, Brown publication.

It's autobiographical, having to do with the raising of Edwin, his son now eight years old, after the mother died suddenly leaving the publicist with a 10-month-old son.

Armstrong's new play, "The Years Between," is under production option to Bernard Hart.

Herb Mayes' Choices

Herbert R. Mayes, editor of Good Housekeeping, has edited an interesting anthology of 26 short stories from his favorite (Hearst) monthly mag, titled "Editor's Choice" (Random House; $3.95).

Apart from the fact that editor Mayes stresses the 26 are not necessarily the "best"—merely his choice as the editor—he makes sure (1) that the byliners are alphabetized and (2) observes—as a materialistic editor—that Robert F. Germann's "The Talking Dog" was underpaid at $750 and Somerset Maugham's "The Colonel's Lady" was overpriced at $10,000. Result is (a) you read these first for comparison purposes but (b) can't help but note that publisher Bennett Cerf (RH) ignores underpaid author Germann and also ignores the editor's proprieties and caution, as witness the alphabetization, because the jacket (and perhaps rightfully) only gives billing to John P. Marquand, Maugham, Daphne DuMaurier, Richard Sherman, Budd Schulberg, Paul Gallico, Victoria Lincoln, John van Druten and Allan Seagar in that sequencing. Regardless, it's a fine anthology of GH excerpts and editor Mayes evidences much wisdom in his "choice."

Another excellent "reader" is "10 Years of Holiday" (Simon & Schuster; $5.95), selected by the editors of that magazine and with an intro by Clifton Fadiman. Book is the 10th anniversary publication of 40 memorable pieces, and the byliners include Faulkner, Thurber, Steinbeck, Marquand, E. B. White, Schulberg, Cleveland Amory, Sean O'Faolain, Joyce Cary, James Jones, Irwin Shaw, Arthur Miller, V. S. Pritchett, Alistair Cooke, Richard Llewellyn, Vincent Sheean, Bernard DeVoto, et al. Abel.

Massaguer's Autobiog

Conrado W. Massaguer, of the Cuban Tourist Commission and a longtime cartoonist on the metropolitan New York dailies, for The New Yorker, etc., is at the Waldorf.

He came in with a Cuban tourist air junket but is also talking to Doubleday's Ralph Beebe on his cartoon memoirs titled "The Face Behind The Face."

Unique Wilde Book

Unique and noteworthy theatrical publishing event has been undertaken by Arents Tobacco Collection of N.Y. Public Library, which has just issued a limited edition of 500 copies of Oscar Wilde's play, "The Importance of Being Earnest" (2 vols., boxed, $20).

Originally written as "Lady Lancing," text offered in new edition is transcribed from playwright's ms. and typescripts, first two acts of which (now in Arents collection) had been lost to sight in the bottom of an old trunk for 50 years.

As now published for the first time, Vol. I contains printed text from ms. of first two acts in the Arents vaults, and 3rd and 4th acts from ms. in British Museum. Tome also has info on publishing and production history of the comedy. Vol. II comprises 372 pages of facsimiles of the typescript of Act I, ms. of Act II, and earliest typescripts of Acts III and IV before shortened by Wilde. Author's deletions and changes, here revealed, differ from ms. and play as afterward published.

Library claims that finding new material pertinent to this play is "as exciting as . . . finding . . . a lost chapter or two from 'Alice's Adventures in Wonderland.'"

Charles Shannon has designed the books, which were produced at Anthoensen Press, Portland, Me., in a size somewhat bigger than first edition in three acts issued by Chiswick Press, London, 1899.

Illustrations include programs of the play at St. James' Theatre, London, Feb. 14, 1895; the Empire Theatre, N.Y., April 22, '95, featuring Henry Miller, William Faversham, Viola Allen and May Robson; together with photos of both casts, and the author. Down.

He joined the News in 1921, and in 1946 followed Cochrane to local advertising chieftancy, before taking his last job in 1951.

'Theatre In The East'

"Theatre in the East" by Faubion Bowers (Nelson; $7.50), is an important survey of drama and the perceptive author of "The dance in 14 Asian countries, by Japanese Theatre." No writer in America is better qualified than Oklahoma-born Bowers to interpret the Eastern stage to Western readers. This book seems certain to become the standard reference in the field.

Traditional and modern stagecraft is reported from India, Ceylon, Burma, Thailand, Cambodia, Laos, Malaya, Indonesia, the Philippines, China, Vietnam, Hong Kong, Okinawa and Japan. There is considerable material on Eastern presentations of Occidental playwrights as well as the effects of the West on Asiatic dances. Tome is handsomely produced and illustrated. Films, opera, festivals and puppetry are covered in the comprehensive volume, which grew out of Bowers' 1954-55 tour on which he was accompanied by his authoress-wife, Santha Rama Rau. Book is without peer in helping Westerners understand Eastern artistry and culture. Down.

tion and Liberty of Expression—were set up to study points raised at the meetings and report on them at a future reconvening of the IAFA. The folowing are some other points on the agenda of this organization:

(1) The film as a great public moral factor and influence on youth has the IAFA promising to fight against facility, lies, cowardice and anything in world film content that could degrade human dignity. A fight against all forms of censorship is also in its bylaws. Vague definitions also seem somewhat paradoxical in instituting its own type of censorship.

(2) Safeguarding all important films in national film vault-blockhouses and protection of the national patrimony with certain subjects deemed part of a country. For example, one slightly facetious observation was with a Frenchman saying "We'll leave Lincoln to America if they will leave us Joan of Arc."

(3) Prevent the destruction of any film which has been bought for remake.

(4) More contact between public and film-makers via film clubs, specialized houses and direct meeting of the public either at these places or film museums. The interchange of film creators between countries and the acceptance of coproduction provided the film kept the native tone of one of the countries involved.

(5) Rights of film authors upped to a percentage on the film for all foreign showings, and helping young filmmakers and proven people, unable to find work, as well as underwriting a series of showings every year of pix deemed "humanely useful."

(6) Support all film festivals which would help spread and build the prestige and desire, in the public, for films.

(7) Publish an International Film magazine to inform all members on the experiences of their films in foreign lands.

(8) All nations have a right to their own film industry (sic) and all governments should protect their own as well insuring an equitable interchange of films with other countries.

Among delegates were Paul Strand, Jules Dassin, John Berry, Ben Barzman for the U. S., with Otto Preminger and Preston Sturges putting in one fleeting appearance each. Soviets were repped by Serge Vassiliev and Serge Youtkevitch; Cesare , Zavattini Marcel Pagliero for Italy.

destroyed too, because they just can't be operated profitably under present-day industry economics."

The Paradise is only three blocks away from the Marbro theatre, another B&K deluxer which plays first outlying run double feature bills. Balaban said, "With Hollywood turning out about 200 major pictures a year, after the Marbro plays 104 of them there isn't much left for the Paradise. There just isn't room for a big secondary theatre anymore. Sure, we can still run a smaller secondary house like the Riviera, with a much lower overhead and many fewer seats, but the days of the big secondary houses are gone."

Prexy Balaban said that "people can see the kind of films now available for the secondary houses free on television" and cited this as one of the reasons for poor box-office results at those theatres. He also cited increasing selectivity among the public as it chooses entertainment as one of the further difficulties encountered in selling tickets.

The B&K pilot concluded on a note of optimism, however, stating he had great faith in some of the upcoming product he had seen, soon to play the B&K circuit, and thought that it would offset some of the poorer releases made earlier in the year.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Hollywood, May 29.

It may have been Mother's Day for most Moms on May 13 but for Donna Atwood, mother of three, it was just another Sunday with two matinees. And that's why this is the last season for the star of "Ice Capades." She, too, would like to have breakfast in bed and the day off, and being Mrs. John H. Harris, the wife of the owner of the show, she is going to help count the money from now on instead of earning it.

There's a lot more to count than there used to be. The first "Ice Capades" cost only $50,000 and finished the season with a nice profit of $171.80. Today the show costs $1,000,000 to produce and ends with a profit of about the same figure. About 22,000,000 see the show during a season. Nice seeing.

Donna Atwood has been starring in them for 15 years. She was 17 when she turned pro. Hitler's bellicosity had messed up all hope of her becoming an Olympic champion, so there didn't seem much use waiting around for him to crash through the thin ice of world conquerors.

Heading up a third generation in show biz, John Harris was really a picture exhib in Pittsburgh and sort of backed into gliding over horizontal refrigeration as a form of boxoffice entertainment. His father had opened the first nickelodeon in the world, but the son liked hockey better than the picture biz. He backed the Pittsburgh Hornets, who won a championship and the next season lost him nearly $50,000.

Add! Added Attractions

Some one suggested he bring in an attraction between the halves and named a little Olympic champ named Sonja Henie. Receipts picked up $10,000 for the week.

This was it. People seemed to like fancy figure skating better than they did slugging puck-chasers. Before Harris could formulate his ideas Sonja Henie was in other hands. So he hired Belita. At least she did better than his hockey team.

Then he saw a young skater named Donna Atwood. Unlike the others, she had not been practically born on skates. In fact, until she was 13 she hadn't even been on a pair. But, nevertheless, she was born skater, for in six months she had won a Pacific Coast figure skating title. By the time she was 15 she was a national champion. She was so outstanding that winning an Olympic title seemed inevitable. But war had a priority in the realm of inevitability and so she either had to lay off for 10 years or turn pro.

She joined Harris's "Ice Capades" and soon was elevated to stardom. In fact, she starred for nine years before producer Harris decided it wasn't quite bright of him to let all that money go out of the family. So he married her. It has been singularly happy marriage but required additional dexterous skill, especially on her part, to have babies and not throw the show into a tailspin.

She was a titian-haired beauty when she started in "Ice Capades." She's blonde now. Peter Pan seems to call for blondes with short hair. Her lithe and boyish figure looks now just about as beautiful as it did in 1942, which is quite a trick for the mother of three.

Having seen most of them who have played Peter Pan, from Maude Adams on stage to Mary Martin on television, it's sad to think that Donna Atwood will not be topping them for years to come. There never was a Peter Pan like this 32-year-old madonna's version. At that I suspect she is the youngest star to play the part and certainly the one with the largest family.

Eva LeGallienne, Cissie Loftus, Jean Arthur, Marilyn Miller and of course Maude Adams were no kids when they played Barrie's boy from Never Never Land. Neither were Nina Boucicault, Fay Compton, Edna Best, Jean Forbes-Robertson, Georgette Cohan, Margaret Lockwood or Glynis Johns.

A Guy Named Joe

Of course, when once seen it's a surefire part anybody could prophesy. But on ice if the timing isn't perfect or a pratfall breaks the spell, it can be devastating, for this fantasy is held together with gossamer threads. Joe Kirby holds the threads. In fact, it is his London company that holds the rights to Peter Pan's flying, and until science harnesses magnetic propulsion he's a "must" in Pan productions.

Kirby's flying equipment has been in this country before. Three times, in fact. But never was it merged with ice skaters. John H. Harris brought Kirby's Flying Ballet into his "Ice Capades" several years ago. A great novelty act in itself, Harris was thinking of the future and wondering how Kirby's technique could be hitched to Donna Atwood. He found it would work beautifully with such a fearless doll as Donna.

Kirby assigned Peter Foy to handle the equipment and to see that the harness and wiring left no slipups, for a crash on ice is even worse than one on wood. That in all these performances no accident has resulted is a great tribute to the men who brought Barrie's fantasy down to earth and sent it up in the clouds again. That's a lot to say for a fantasy that has been a hardy perennial since Dec. 27, 1904.

The Atwoods of Newton, Kans.

Los Angeles, quick to grab a credit-line, claims Donna as a local girl Actually, she was born in Newton, Kans., moved on to Albuquerque, New Mex., and didn't get to Hollywood until she signed up as a moppet dancer for picture work.

Her brother took the moppet one day to the Polar Palace where she saw Sonja Henie skate. It occurred to her that she could dance on skates that well, if she only knew how to skate! An oldtime hockey player taught her all he knew about seemingly bypassing Newton's law of gravity and doing it with the grace of birds while still on ice.

It's a great tribute to her training—she still rehearses two hours a day—that critics refer to her as a "girl" instead of a mother of twin boys and a little girl of her own.

She's a quiet one, except on ice, where her skates talk with the rhythm and flow of genius. Once she was booked on a tv show to plug "Ice Capades." The m.c. was one of those characters who introduces a name "that needs no introduction" and then spends the rest of the program disproving his point. She never got a chance to say "Hello, Mom!" by the time the program was off the air.

It got to be such a laugh around the Harrisian headquarters that the other day when she was similarly set up, Cliff Lewis and the publicity staff cooked up a script which preempted all she could have possibly have said and threw the lines to the m.c.—but this time on purpose.

"I'm sure the boys enjoyed hearing it from your own lips," he concluded. "Have you anything more to say, Donna?"

She smiled and didn't even say "Get lost!"

Donna and Her 89 Aides

Of course, Peter Pan is not all there is to this "Ice Capades," nor Donna Atwood all there is to Peter Pan. Actually there are 20 acts and in Peter Pan 89 skaters perform, among them Rosemary Henderson as Wendy. Here I suspect is where Donna's successor may be found.

A tiny blonde beauty, Rosemary Henderson has the skill and grace that go with stardom. She does an act with Bobby Maxson as the "All American Kids" that is more delightful than reading Plato for the first time. In the Autorama number she plays the part of a solid diamond Cadillac, which is sure to give some Texas oil man an idea.

In a world where espionage has been raised to the level of statesmanship I can hardly be denounced and blacklisted for finding out that Donna is not going to retire absolutely. She's merely pulling out of the show's 47 weeks on the road. She will do 13 weeks in cities she has never played before—London among them. She might do a picture and some television shows, too.

Rose's country estate at Mount Kisco was recently destroyed by fire. He is slated to marry showgirl Joyce Matthews (twice the ex-Mrs. Milton Berle) some time in the next week or two; place and date kept q.t., even from his intimates.

TV News Probe

also mentioned by the informant, who is based in the capital in a quasi-Governmental capacity, that there was a "shakeup" on a news program recently under what is termed "curious circumstances."

Underlying the whole question of a possible probe of news programs is the calling of witnesses. So far, none of the principals involved will talk, a sure bet that the subpoena process will be used to bring them out. It's expected that the network prexies—ABC's Robert Kintner, CBS' Frank Stanton (for the corporation) and NBC's Robert Sarnoff will be quizzed on the alleged "news suppression" by the Magnuson Committee. And Government officials concerned with the subject will be well repped at the "monopoly" hearings in order to make a determination as to whether the findings should be followed through by the Interstate Commerce body or switched to other Congressional committees, if not to Federal agencies. There is even talk that the would-be probe of news handling on tv might eventually wind up as a separate inquiry altogether, to divorce it from the "monopoly" subject.

According to the informant, the networks involved are "chiefly" CBS and NBC.
